I want to ask people to write to the Collegian if they can document other examples of the Senate ignoring the needs and the desires of the community.

I would also ask someone on the Senate to reply to the charge of unfairness which has been levelled against them.

The broad issue here is: Should the Senate have the political power to control and to even discontinue clubs which they are not financially supporting?

If we don't like the actions which the Senate takes, then we must rebel against its unfair practices and force it to change.

I respond to the Senate with that time-honored All-American reply: "No Taxation Without (Financial) Representation!"

Jaybo

I could tell you things you never would have heard of if you hadn't heard of me.
I could take you places you never would have been to if you hadn't been with me.
I could show you people you never would have thought of if you hadn't thought to ask.
I could give you answers you never would have dreamed of if you hadn't dreamed of She.
So long, so late, so far away...
Hey, Bo, toke a Jay.
Breathe in deep and let your mind go drifting you away.
Empty, empty, enpty things... things I'd wanted so.
Things I'd wanted coming down... coming way back home.
Never things so far away,
things I'll need to go.
Laziness is unemployed,
but still I need a goal.
Language you must read and write, and speak and understand.
Pictures you must draw for me,

Light up,and toke away, my friend... and tomorrow with today will blend,
like a bursting blossom in the sun,
a new world in the end will have begun.
Weather-cock, which way?
Inside, outside, upside down...
Pass the hat, please, all around.
With the hat, please, in your hand, smile upon the friend who frowned.
And from the pictures you demand, draw your friend a telegram.
Willow blossom in the wind, listen when the Jaybo sings.
Paint a letter to your friend and send it him on Jaybo wings.
Lest he not remember when the early morning day begins, sketch him on the telephone the outlines of our Jaybo friend.
Jaybo leaves when he feels fine...
I will leave when I feel time.
Jaybo tells me every day
not to leave 'till you are mine.

Have you no advice for me?
Jaybo's name will you remind?
Jaybo's name is Toga Tea.
In the end I have a plan.
The plan, I told you once before, unearth an intact Roman rind.
The stories there you can't ignore.
Later, later, every day
I sleep until the sleep is none.
Sooner in the mourning shade
my Toga Tea will have begun.
Not a morning thing, you see.
Jaybo mourning is not meant to be.
Rejoicing with your friends at Toga Tea.
Playing songs on phonographic tongues,
the answers Jaybo sings will soon appear.
The stories that you read on Jaybo eyes... you'll happily, their lessons to, adhere.
And so I say to Jaybo with your friends, and tell the stories told at Toga Tea.
Bring them news before the news's end..
Draw them far away to Jaybo Me.
Later...
Jaybo again begins to sing.
A Jaybo song to you I bring.
Turn over,
Come back again, continue on.
Letters searching for some place to spawn.
Rising from the trees above the sky,
I let my hair hang down below my knee, and no one knows my front but for my eyes.
No one hears the words I speak no more... depends which end the words flow from lies for.
Were the rhymes mistakes I made,
or were they acts from games we played?
Parts adopted for our fun
high upon the orange sun.
Jaybo has a medicine guaranteed a cure for everyone.
I cannot now, but later...

Draft Counselor's Corner

Backtracking A Bit

By GILBERT J. SALK

I've got to backtrack a bit today, because something happened which made me realize that people are still confused about the lottery system and how it works.

There is one important rule which people don't seem to understand clearly. Your number is drawn the year you turn 19, and that number stays with you for the rest of your life, regardless of when you choose to take your eligibility year. In other words, if you were born in 1952, your number was drawn this year and that's it. It makes no difference what number comes up for your birthdate in next year's drawing; you have your number.

The other problem which bears more clarification concerns when you serve your eligibility year. Simply put, you get your number the year you turn 19, and your first chance to serve your eligibility year is the year you turn 20. For instance, if you got your number this year (i.e., you were born in 1952) you cannot enter this year's eligibility pool. You must wait at least until 1972. Even if you have a high number, do not drop your II-S this year.

On the other hand, if you were born in 1951 or earlier, you may enter this year's lottery (even at this late date) by writing to your draft board and telling them that you wish to give up your II-S and be reclassified I-A effective immediately. (Keep a copy of the letter. Take the letter to the post office and tell the clerk that you want it sent Certified Mail Return Receipt Requested. It will cost you 50 cents, but the board will have to sign for the letter and you will get the receipt back. Do this with any correspondence you have with your board.) It is strongly advisable to drop your deferment if your number is over 125.

According to Curtis W. Tarr, the Director of the SS, no numbers will be called above 125. This is probably a safe bet, but I'd advise those with numbers between 126 and 160 to wait until about Thanksgiving before dropping their deferments, just to be on the safe side.

It makes no difference how long you are actually in the eligibility pool, as long as you are I-A on Dec. 31. If you have no deferment on Dec. 31 and your number has not been reached by your board, you are safe. On Jan. 1 you will be placed in the second priority group, and the only possible way you can be drafted is for everyone in the new first priority group to be called ahead of you. It would take something on the order of WW III to cause this to happen, so you don't have to worry much.

It is probably important that you recognize the politics of the lottery system. It came into being at the height of national anti-draft and anti-war activity, took over half of those between the ages of 19 and 26 out of danger of being drafted, and cut the protests in half. Many of you with high numbers are proving, or will prove, that Richard Nixon's cynicism about american youth is accurate. He pushed for the lottery hoping that those who were not in danger, go their own way, and let him cotinue to wage the war.

If you allow yourself to be less concerned about the war just because you aren't the one who's going to be fighting it, you're showing pretty callous disregard for the lives of your american and vietnamese brothers. Think about it. The war goes on whether you're in it or not.

There are ways to say no. Apply for Conscientious Objector status. Support real anti-war candidates instead of Republicans and Democrats. Withhold your taxes, especially your phone tax, all of which goes to pay for the war. (When you pay your bill, don't pay the tax. Include a note to the telephone company informing them that you will not pay the war tax. They will not disrupt your service.) (NOTE: It is illegal to refuse to pay your taxes. Take this into account, and decide what you're willing to risk to say no to war.) Join, or better yet, organize, anti-war activities. Protest Protest Protest.

Amherst To Inaugurate Ward Saturday

The Inauguration of Amherst College's 14th President, John William Ward, will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday (Oct. 23). The event will be the highlight of Alumni Weekend at the College.

Professor Ward has been an Amherst College faculty member since 1963. He is a 1947 Harvard College graduate, and earned his master of arts and doctor of philosophy degrees at the University of Minnesota. At Amherst he has been a member of the history and the American studies departments.

The inauguration ceremony will be held in the College's Indoor Athletic Field, and will be open to the public without admission tickets. Representatives from Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College, Smith College, and from the University of Massachusetts, Williams College and Wesleyan University will be present. The Amherst College faculty and Board of Trustees will march in academic procession. University of California Professor Henry Nash Smith, who taught Mr. Ward in graduate school will speak. President Ward will also make a brief address.

As part of the Alumni Weekend activities, the annual meeting of the Alumni Council will be held at 9:30 a.m. in Johnson Chapel. At 11:45 a.m. there will be an "A" Association Luncheon in Alumni Gymnasium.

Two concerts will note the inauguration and Alumni Weekend. An Amherst Glee Club-Smith Glee Club-Mount Holyoke-Amherst Chamber Orchestra "Concert of Music for a Festive Occasion" will be pe performed at 8:15 p.m., Friday (Oct. 22) in Buckley Recital Hall, Music Center. Tickets for the public concert are available in the Glee Club Office at the Center; there is no admission charge. Holders of the tickets should present them for admission to the concert by 8:05 p.m.

A second concert, with the Amherst Glee Club performing, will be held at 8:15 p.m. Saturday (Oct. 23) in Buckley Recital Hall in the Music Center. There will be an admission charge for the public event, with tickets available at the door.

A 12:30 p.m. Saturday soccer contest between Amherst and Wesleyan will precede the major sports event of the weekend, a 2:00 football match between Amherst and Wesleyan. At 4:30 p.m. Saturday, President and Mrs. Ward will preside at a reception for alumni in Alumni House.

Culturnatives Rap Sessior.

A CULTURNATIVES Rap Session will be held today in the lounge of the ninth floor of the Campus Center starting at 2:30. Gil Salk, writer of the MDC's weekly CULTURNATIVES column, will host the rap session to discuss ideas presented in the column. The session will be open-ended, and is open to any interested members of the campus community.

Previous columns have dealt with men's and women's liberation, recycling, Attica, and other topics. The purpose of the rap session will be to share responses to the columns, bring out new ideas, and allow others a chance to voice their ideas about counterculture and alternative life styles.

According to Salk, the raps will be made a regular event if enough interest is shown at this session. He invites all those who read his column to attend, whether they agree or disagree with the ideas he presents.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

People who talk appetizingly about food and are skillful at preparing gourmet dishes are likely to be born under the zodiacal sign of Cancer. My co-author of "Cooking with Astrology" is Mike Roy, a famed radio-television chef. He was born July 18, 1913 under the sign of Cancer.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Open lines of communications with mate, business partner. Money is involved. Friend may want to move too fast. Key is to be analytical. No one will give you something for nothing. Be realistic.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Gain cooperation of family member. Seek har money, especially in domestic area. Another Taurean and a Libran play prominent roles. Purchase gift for special anniversary. Stick to Golden Rule.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): What appears on surface may be opposite from reality. Before signing or accepting, demand additional information. Whole picture has yet to be revealed. Know this and respond accordingly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Nothing now occurs halfway: it is all or nothing. Accent is on romance, security, understanding with opposite sex. Capricorn person plays prominent role. Use past experience. Be definite.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get action in area previously closed, blocked. Outline goal. Know where you want to go and why. Best to finish rather than to initiate projects. Aries person can play important role.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be independent, but avoid any display of arrogance. Welcome contacts, challenges. Accent is on short journey, dealings with neighbors and relatives. You will be repaid for a special service.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): One whose money is not involved is free and easy with your assets. Pull in reins. Get explanation for contemplated actions. Insist on better mode of communication. You have right to an accounting.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Some who are lacking in faith may try to block your progress. Key is to be confident, forward-looking. Adhere to your own style. Your way now is best know this and act like it. Move ahead.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec 21): Stress caution in traffic. Avoid tendency to rush needlessly. Don't write letters in anger. Weigh actions, words. Some events occur behind scenes. Wait for factual information. Discard rumors.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Be ready for change, travel, a variety of experiences. Gemini and Virgo persons play important roles. Be flexible. Fine to be determined, but avoid obstinacy. Friend does want to aid.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Cooperate with family member; promote domestic harmony. Sense of humor is essential. One close to you is argumentative. Be a good listener. Realize those who insist are not sure. Stress maturity.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Hidden assets could come to light. Pleasant surprise is on agenda. Keep communication lines open. Respond to messages, long distance calls. Have facts at hand. You add to knowledge. Stress progress.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are artistic, attractive to opposite sex and have tendency to try doing too much at once. When you learn to finish what you start, you can be a world beater. Recent change is for your own good. If single, marriage is on horizon.

Theta Chi Marauders Take Intramural Championship

By JOHN BOCK

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times...." For many teams in this year's Intramural football this could have been a true statement. But at least on Tuesday evening it was the best of times for the Theta Chi Marauders, new UMass Intramural Campus Champions, a 12-0 victory over Phi Sigma Delta.

On a perfect night for football, with the frost just beginning to settle over the Pioneer Valley, the Theta Chi Marauders (Campus Independent Champs and the independent "B" team from Theta Chi fraternity) were matched with the Campus Fraternity Champs-Phi Sigma Delta of Zeta Beta Tau. If there was a favorite it would have had to have been PSD, as this was their second year as Campus Fraternity Champs and their second consecutive appearance in the Campus Championship Finals.

The atmosphere was electric as the crowd gathered to watch the two teams do battle. Both teams were helped by enthusiastic fans from their respective houses plus other IM teams already knocked out of the race.

The Marauders won the toss and elected to receive. Jim Maguire was deep for the Marauders and brought the ball down to his own 22 yard line. Quarterback P. J. Flaherty connected with two short passes to bring it up to the 32 and then got caught in his own backfield before he could throw the ball. Most of his passes were high for awhile, but after he warmed up they were extremely effective.

PSD took the ball on the kick and brought it down to their 20, with Tom Grace on the run. Very capable QB Mark DelSesto hit Tony Riddle with a 15 yard pass, and then on the keeper brought it up to the Marauders 20.

It was not the worst of times for the PSD team. On the next pass DelSesto threw an interception to Marauder Frank Murphy who ran for the touchdown. The Marauder attempt for an extra point failed but they were ahead 6-0.

In his first of many appearances that evening safety Jerry Kohner kicked the ball into the end zone and PSD assumed possession on the 20. On their first two attempts they failed to move the ball. After achieving one first down PSD turned the ball over to the Marauders. Kohner again displayed his more than adequate kicking ability by booting a 55 yard field goal to put the Marauders ahead 9-0.

The PSD defense remained tough but the score seemed to have its affect as the Marauders Big D moved all over the PSD offense.

On another Flaherty to Maguire combination the Marauders put the ball on the PSD 23 where "Swoop" Kohner kicked another field goal to put the remaining points on the board. Not to be called out yet the PSD offense engineered a series of plays that brought them to the Marauders 20 where QB DelSesto hit Mark Grace with a TD pass only to see it called back for holding.

Again in the fourth quarter the extremely cool PSD offense brought the ball right down to the Marauder 35 where it seemed for a moment that the Marauder defense had faltered. An unfortunate penalty caused PSD to lose the ball. They did succeed in stopping the Marauders momentum as the clock ran out and the curtain came down on the 1971 IM football season.

Melville Whalers Spout Again

In Women's Powder Puff Football play-off action the Mushrooms continued their winning ways by defeating Dwight's Ducks Monday night for the Independent Crown. The Mushroom's defense proved to be fallible as the Ducks eked out six points, however their offense remained indomitable, running the score up to 34 pcints. The Mushrooms' next foe will be tonight's winner of the Field-Whalers game and is scheduled for 5:30 on Tuesday, the 26th. The Field Goals will meet the Whalers at 7:00 tonight on field 3.

In the Sorority Division play-offs Tuesday night Alpha Chi and GSS emerged as contenders for the Sorority Crown. That game will be played tonight at 7:00 on field 2. It might well be an interesting contest as ACO has demonstrated a fairly disciplined offense whereas GSS tends to be more explosive.

In the Residence Hall play-offs, also held Tuesday night, the Field Goals and Melville Whalers moved into contention for Top Residence Hall honors.

Tuesday night the Melville Whalers, using their secret "smooshing" technique defeated the Wheeler Trojans by a score of 20-6 in the first round of the Residence Hall Championship Playoffs. The scoreless first quarter was not an uneventful prelude of what was to come. In the early part of the second quarter the Whalers took the lead as the quarterback, Janet Manning, scored the first touchdown. But soon their efforts were matched by the only Wheeler Touchdown of the game, coming in the third quarter.

Once again the superb Whaler offense, June Manning, center, Pat Murphy & Bonnie Bufalo, lineswomen, Karen Fruzzetti and Nancy Fink, ends, and Mary Young, flanker demonstrated their remarkable skill by adding another touchdown which was again scored by the quarterback, Janet Manning.

Not only did the offense contribute to the scoring, but the defense, Marcia Lapping, Corrine Karahalos, Janice Lazzaro, Jane Andrews, Beth Rasmussen plus the efforts of Manning, Murphy, Fruzzetti and Bufalo added their share as well. They not only were able to hold the Trojan line, but came through with an interception by Karen Fruzzetti for a touchdown. Karen swept past the entire Trojan offense in her jaunt to the Whaler end zone, almost 60 yards away. Again, Mere Schmidt, with her kicking and punting ability greatly aided the Whaler cause.

Last Tuesday night the Field Goals met the Grayson Kumquats in play-off action. The final score was 26-6 in favor of the field Goals. The game started off with Grayson giving up the ball to Field after four quick downs. Donna "Legs" Blasko, after a 50 yard surge went over for Field's first touchdown. The extra points were scored on a fine reception by Ronda "Paul Warfield" Factor in the end zone.

Then Grayson was able to get the ball in good field position setting them up for their only touchdown of the game. From then on end, it was Field, Field, and more Field. The second touchdown, as well as the third and fourth

Then Grayson was able to get the ball in good field position setting them up for their only touchdown of the game. From then on to the end, it was Field, Field, and more Field. The second touchdown, as well as the third and fourth, were scored by Donna Blasko. One of these touchdowns was a 30 yard run which involved Donna evading four would-be "flag grabbers".

Going into the game it was thought that Grayson's passing attack would be their most effective weapon. Anticipating this was Paula "Stonewall" Cunningham who astonished all present with her "bump-and-run" tactics.

On the other side of the field Donna Bell was also using these tactics, while finding time to roam the middle area to pick off an interception whenever possible. If a receiver did get out, Helen Monte and Lynne Zoino were there to eliminate any remaining possibilities for a reception.

Redmen See Change In Direction At UConn

By DAN KAMAL

There was a dominant theme at Wednesday's weekly meeting of the Varsity M Club Luncheon: Head football coach Dick MacPherson and three of his players all emphasized the fact that the UMass football team is too good to be where it is now, and starting Saturday things will start changing.

Senior defensive back and punter Jack O'Neil, who was praised by MacPherson for a "great game last Saturday" despite the overall poor performance of the defense, mentioned that the Redmen are bound to explode soon. He added, "We're ready for UConn."

Senior offensive center Dave Levine emphasized that the players still have confidence, and "starting Saturday we'll prove to people we're a great team."

Paul Metallo, a halfback who had a fine game against the University of Rhode Island last week, spoke about the general confusion pervading the team because of the rash of injuries. The junior speedster has himself just returned from the injured list and, according to MacPherson, has given the team a new dimension--outside speed. Metallo concluded by expressing the hope that UMass will be able to "put it together Saturday."

MacPherson must be looking to the Bible for an answer to his woes judging from his opening remark. The first-year coach mentioned the "crown of authority" which a coach wears which also carries with it the "thorns of responsibility." "I don't like it a bit," he continued, "we're extremely disappointed. In no time, in any way do I want you to think that we think we're doing a helluva job here."

"The fans have been extremely kind, and we appreciate it. We do look for better things against the University of Connecticut Saturday."

Probably the biggest question in the minds of UMass fans is whether or not quarterback Piel Pennington will return to action this week. Pennington has the green light from doctors, but according to MacPherson, is in some pain yet when he throws. Mark Tripucka will probably get the starting nod if Piel is not ready.

Bill DeFlavio, whose ankle reinjury is not as serious as was first believed, will be playing Saturday although he still is in considerable pain.

MacPherson concluded by stating the obvious: "This is a pivotal game for us. We have to get untracked."

Crewmen Create "Hall Of Shame"

Fantastic autumn weather and an unusually large group of returning oarsmen and coxswains have highlighted rowing this fall.

Besides the normal interval and distance training required for the annual Charles River race, club members have benefitted from an expanded small (one, two and four man) boat program.

As has been the fashion, the club once again engaged themselves in a successful beg, borrow and steal (buy only when necessary) method of acquiring equipment.

This stockpiling has allowed the team to participate in all size boat training and racing. Of greatest importance has been the introduction of a single sculls program. These one man boats are very sensitive and unstable, requiring considerable skill and experience to row. Mistakes are unavoidable and are usually rewarded with a reluctant swim in the ecologically famous Connecticut River.

A special club, appropriately called the "Hall of Shame" has been established to honor those whose aquatic acrobatics deserve attention. Billy Moran, the first inductee has sympathetically watched the "Hall" grow to its present size of a dozen members.

Tom Rurak is honorary president with three dips. The latest member, newcomer Brian Spratt has an asterisk next to his name on the golden toilet paper scrolls which adorn the "Hall."

Brian has the dubious distinction of being the only club member thrown out of an eight man boat when his oar became stuck in the water and the momentum of the boat and oar lifted the surprise novice out of his seat and shoes and into the drink.

As might be expected competition in the singles is crisp and showdown date of November 7 has been designated "Hadley Henley Day." Entries for this prestigious event have poured in from all over the East and as far away as Florence.

Paul Winchell, a notorious JV of last year has been trucking on the river and looms as a definite threat to take top honors in the elite single event.

Mound Corps Sparks Fall Baseball

By MDC STAFF

The UMass baseball team completed its fall program last week compiling a 10-2 record and an optimistic look to next spring when the Redmen try to defend their Yankee Conference championship and earn another berth in the District 1 Playoffs.

On top of the regular fall schedule the Redmen also played 15 practice inter-squad games good for 90 innings of competition at which time Coach Dick Bergquist had a better opportunity to look at the more than 90 candidates who came out for the team.

The Redmen won three games over Springfield, two from Boston College, Siena and Mass. Bay Community College and a singleton over Dartmouth College. Their only losses were to Dartmouth and Springfield.

The pitching staff which highlighted last spring's team was in full stride again with junior Tom White, sophomores Chip Baye and John Olsen and freshman Mike Flanagan leading the way for the mound corp.

White, 6' 6" lefty, was the big man last season, leading the team in all pitching categories while making All- Conference. During this past summer he led his Cape League team to the finals before losing a 1-0 game in the series finale.

Olsen, 6' 5" righty, was the most improved pitcher this fall. In 27 innings he allowed but five hits and struck out 36. Against Mass. Bay he pitched a seven inning no-hitter, struck out 16 and walked one.

Baye, another hard throwing righthander, at times was untouchable, striking out 38 in 25 innings.

Flanagan is an outstanding prospect, who was highly regarded by the pros. He has completely recovered from an injury he sustained his senior year of high school.

In the infield Bergquist will have two All-New England selections back in first baseman Dan Esposito and third baseman Mark Palau and an All-Conference catcher in Tom McDermott.

Espo had a great spring, hit with power, but will be pushed by freshman Ron Beaurivage, another outstanding first year prospect. One of these two may end up in the outfield.

Palau is kicking for the football team this fall, while McDermott who hit .311 last spring, will be pushed by Bill Ryan for the starting job behind the plate.

The outfield will have Brian Martin, who missed fall practice due to an injury he sustained in the Cape League, Steve Newell, who wielded a heavy bat in the spring and veterans Dan Kelley and Earl Manley.

Alston Named NL Manager Of The Year

MIAMI (AP) — Walter Alston's high school baseball coach was also a history teacher...and a woman. Darrtown, an Ohio whistle stop with 300 residents, was a long way from the big leagues.

"I'm still an old country boy," grins Alston, now 59. "No matter where I go-Los Angeles, New York, San Francisco, Tokyo-I always go home to Darrtown."

The Los Angeles Dodgers' veteran was named Wednesday as 1971 National League Manager of the Year in the Annual Associated Press poll. Alston previously won the honor in 1955, 1959, 1965 and 1966.

"I'd be lost without baseball," he said. "Only one of two things will get me to leave the Dodgers...either they'll fire me someday or my health will go bad. Right now, I feel wonderful."

Alson is spending a week in Florida visiting his strapping grandson, Rob Ogle, a freshman first baseman at Miami Dade Junior College.

Alston didn't learn much baseball from that lady coach in the late 1920s, but his knowledge multiplied at Miami of Ohio University prior to a professional playing career that included only one time at bat in the majors.

The gentle, soft-spoken man turned to managing when it was obvious he wasn't to be another Ruth or Cobb. A successful tenure in the Brooklyn chain earned him the Dodger job in 1953.

Alston rates the unprecedented pitching of Sandy Koufax in the early 1960s and the steal of 104 bases in a single season by Wills as the most exciting happenings of his career.

Alston's 1971 Dodgers finished second to San Francisco in the Western Division. The Giants then lost to Pittsburgh in the NL playoffs.

Alston received 72 votes in the poll of writers and broadcasters. The Giants' Charlie Fox got 65 and Danny Murtaugh of Pittsburgh received 57.

Trustees Named For Search Committee

MDC Staff

The Board of Trustees announced yesterday that John W. Haigis and Mrs. Carolyn Rowland will be their nominations to the search committee established to select candidates for a permanent chancellor for UMass Amherst. The announcement came from the office of John McCartney, Secretary of the Board.

Six undergraduate students were also selected for the committee by the Student Senate on Wednesday. They were Patty Asack, '73, Jackie Berryman, '73, David Dunkin, '72, Robert Padgett, '72, Phoebe Pepper, '75, and Robert Sprague, '73.

Composition of the search committee was determined at a special meeting of the Board on Friday, October 8th. After meeting in executive session, the Board voted that six underaduates, six faculty members, and two graduate students, all from the Amherst campus, and two trustees, one member of the Deans Council and one alumnus would make up the membership of the search committee.

The nominees from the faculty, dean's council, alumni and graduate school have yet to be announced.

Haigis is chairman of the Trustee Committee on Buildings and Grounds. He resides in Greenfield. Mrs. Rowland is chairman of the Committee on Student Activities. She is from the Boston Area. Both nominees are members of the executive committee of the Board of Trustees.

The undergraduate students nominees are from diversified interest and activity groups, according to Student Senate Vice President Larry Ladd, who screened the applicants for the committee. He said that more than 50 undergraduates applied, but only about 20 were qualified, after a general review.

Qualifications were determined by President Lee Sandwen, Vice President John Hogan, and Ladd. Sandwen officially made the nominations which the Senate approved on Wednesday.

"We tried to assemble as diverse a collection of individuals as possible to be representative of the diverse interests of the campus," Ladd said. He explained that the three officers tried to balance the nominations with different class members, some "involved" students and some not so active, and all with some familiarity with the administration of the University.

Ladd declared that although other students might have appeared more qualified in the eyes of some critics, it was felt that the students chosen would have the time as well as the interest and know-how to devote to the task.

It is expected that the other members of the search committee will be announced soon by their respective groups.

The organizational meeting of the search committee is scheduled for Thursday, October 28th at 1:30 in the Board Room at Whitmore Administration Building.

For the second time in less than two weeks, the campus' governing bodies have taken a common stand on the issue of the selection of a new Chancellor. The Faculty, Graduate and Student Senates have all passed resolutions stating their disappointment in the Trustee's response to the report of the Committee of Concern and requesting the Trustees to come to the Amherst campus to discuss "the issues and principles" involved in the report.

According to Student Senate Vice-President Larry Ladd, the reason for the joint resolution was "to alert the Board of Trustees to the fact that the issues raised by Chancellor Tippo's resignation still remain and we must meet to discuss these issues."

Activities Day Comes Off

By ERNIE ROTMAN

Much commotion and activity passed through the Campus Center yesterday as the annual Students Activities Day moved into full swing. Beginning at 9 A.M., many of the groups and organizations in UMass set up for a day of free soliciting. Many of these groups hoped to acquire new members as the day wore on.

Last year the Students Activities Day was held in the evening, but this year's schedule was more beneficial to the groups and students alike. The all day campaign enabled many busy students to see this spectacle on their way to classes. As viewed from this reporter, there seemed to be many students in the C.C. all day witnessing the functions. The area was almost continuously flooded with noise.

The highlights of the day and the activities that drew the largest crowds were the Video Theater's movies inside an air-conditioned tent, and the Ski Club's continuous movies. Also, the Revelers sold balloons, WMUA played music from their station and the other clubs had many interesting books for people to glance at.

Head Of "Saturday Review" To Speak At Hampshire

Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review and president of the World Association of World Federalists, will give a public talk on "Disarmament and World Peace" at Hampshire College, 8 p.m., Monday, October 25, in the main lecture hall of the Academic Building.

In announcing the event, Hampshire's president, Charles R. Longsworth, commented:

"The format of this talk, which is to conclude with a question-and-answer session, will enable us to hear and talk with the man who, for longer than most college students have been alive, has been a relentless and eloquent advocate of world peace. In the quarter century of his editorship of the Saturday Review, this magazine has been in the forefront of the national debates over nuclear issues, from the need for a ban on the testing of nuclear weapons to the need for bringing them under control on a world scale.

The event will be televised locally on Cablevision Channel 8, but those who wish to be among the "live audience" at Hampshire College should plan on getting to the main lecture hall before 8 p.m., while seats are still available.

Editor Of "Commentary" At Smith

Norman Podhoretz, editor of Commentary Magazine, one of America's foremost intellectual journals, will speak at the Helen Hills Chapel at Smith College at 8 p.m. on Friday evening, October 22. He will speak on "The Rise and Fall of the American Jewish Novelist." He appears under the auspices of the B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation at Smith College and Amherst College in cooperation with the English Department of Smith College. He appears through the courtesy of the American Jewish Committee.

Norman Podhoretz, the author of "Making It" and "Doings and Undoings: The Fifties and After in American Writing", is a leading figure in American letters. A native New Yorker, he was a Pulitzer scholar at Columbia College where he earned his Bachelor of Arts degree. He also holds a Bachelor's and Master's degree in English from Cambridge University in England where he was a Fulbright scholar and a Kellett Fellow. He also holds a Bachelor's degree in Hebrew Literature from the Jewish Theological Seminary and an Honorary doctorate of Humane Letters from Hamilton College.

Jewish novelists played a leading role in American literature of the past twenty years; a role far exceeding Jewish numbers in the American population. Authors like Saul Bellow, Norman Mailer, Bernard Malamud, Philip Roth, all have made major contributions to American literary creativity. Mr. Podhoretz will examine this phenomena and share his insights as to its future course.

The public is welcome to attend.

Health Services Helps You

If you had been in this car when it met its doom, you might want to take advantage of the University Health Services. (MDC Photo by Steve Schmidt).

By DENNIS FOLEY

"Student Input" is the phrase used to describe programs involving students in administration. Even though it sounds as if they serve "chopped student" to their computers, it actually means student help in improving programs, such as the Health Services.

"It's not often administrators go to students for help," commented Brenda Rau, chairman of the Student Senate Services Committee and the Health Service Student Advisory Board, "but Health Services has always been receptive to students."

The University Health Services has not only accepted, but actively sought student viewpoints.

"Without their support our program would not have developed as it has," stated Barry W. Averill, acting Director of Health Services. He continued, "We have a good cooperative relationship with the Student Senate Advisory Board, a partnership in health."

Averill has inherited the directorship in the wake of former Chancellor Oswald Tippo's resignation, and was formerly the assistant director under Dr. Robert W. Gage.

"Now I'm the innovator," Averill asserted, "and I have an outstanding program and a dedicated staff for a strong foundation."

From very modest beginnings, Health Services has expanded and improved to its present state of 74 professional staff members, largely due to the efforts of Dr. Gage.

"I hated to see him go," Miss Rau declared. "As long as it's up and not out!"

A student panel to interview applicants for the doctoral staff was initiated under Dr. Gage. Following the recommendations of the panel, the administration has "avoided hiring a few individuals who would not have been happy here," according to Averill.

Future projects include a question and answer column in the Collegian, an information table at the Campus Center and an effort to make the "Big Ditch" construction near the Infirmary as bearable as possible.

Interested students are urged to contact Miss Rau or Mr. Averill with advice or complaints. Students are needed to help review every aspect of Health Services and attend the meetings of the two student committees.

"The only complaints I've received have been about nurses," Miss Rau reported. Questioned about this Averill had much praise for the nursing staff and noted that out of 80,000 nurse-student contacts last year there were perhaps 15 complaints.

"We will follow up every complaint and correct any bad situation we find," he vowed.

People's Community Union Forming In Amherst Area

By NANCY PRAJZNER

The People's Community Union is a student organization working to develop a radical community in Amherst, both politically and culturally.

Since its conception last spring, the People's Community Union, which consists of fifty students, has initiated several projects to establish such a community. Among these are a food co-operative service and an underground newspaper.

The food co-operative program, known as the Amherst Food Conspiracy enables students to purchase food at reduced prices, and to shop in a community atmosphere. This program is open to all students by following a simple procedure. One just has to go to Mizaur's Mercantile located on East Pleasant Street, Amherst and fill out an order blank. This can be done on either Monday afternoon or Tuesday morning of each week. Produce, bread, and eggs sell at 30-40% off prices found in grocery stores. For example you can buy a dozen of eggs for just thirty cents. Orders can then be picked up every Wednesday night at the First Congregational United Church of Christ on Main Street in downtown Amherst.

The Amherst Food Conspiracy, however, does not exist only to sell food cheaply. It has also eliminated the society aspect of shopping. Instead of going to a store full of strangers, buying your food, and leaving, this impersonal atmosphere has changed to a community atmosphere by adding a personal touch to shopping.

The only requirement of each student in this program is that he work in some capacity for the Amherst Food Conspiracy at least once every two weeks for about two hours.

The People's Community Union has also established its own newspaper, "Pulp". Its office is located at 361 Northampton Road next to the Zayre shopping center.

So far "Pulp" has published three full issues, a special edition on "Attica", and a pamphlet "Vote" which dealt with voter registration in Amherst.

"Pulp" serves to express the ideas of the People's Community Union, especially its political views. As evidenced from its edition "Vote", the People's Community Union hopes to improve the town of Amherst both for its students and for its townspeople. The first step is to stop referring to Amherst's population as a group of townspeople and a group of students. The distinctions between the two must be eliminated, with everyone becoming one active community working for a new Amherst.

Some necessities for developing a radical community in Amherst are the establishment of day care centers, free schools, health, dental, and mental health clinics, and improved housing. The University should open its facilities such as its library and recreational facilities to the townspeople.

Mr. John Clayton is co-ordinator for the People's Community Union and can be contacted by anyone wishing to form a new political program in Amherst. He can be reached by calling 545-2332 or 1-367-9506.

Mobe Teach-In Works Fine

The Mobe's Teach-in, held in the Student Union on October 13th was highly successful. Over 220 people attended, many of whom helped to distribute a leaflet which linked inflation to military spending and pointed out that a large portion of that money is used to continue the slaughter in Southeast Asia. The areas covered were off-campus, shopping centers, and factories, as well as schools in the Amherst, Greenfield, and Northampton areas. Response from off campus has been good: On the day following the SMC October 13th activities they were noted with a front page article in the Daily Hampshire Gazette.

Debbie Bustin, National Coordinator of the Student Mobilization Committee, will speak at the next Mobe meeting which will be held Monday, October 25th, at 8 p.m. in room 162 of the Campus Center. Miss Bustin, a seasoned anti-war activist, was recentiy elected as one of the 5 coordinators of the National Peace Action Coalition. Her talk will give an overview of the fall student anti-wa- activities on a national scale, and relate them to the peace actions by other constituencies in the movement.

Also discussed at the upcoming meeting will be the November 6th demonstration in Boston. On that day there will be demonstrations in 16 other major cities, to remind people that the war has not ended and neither has the movement for the immediate and total withdrawal of all US troops from Southeast Asia.

Ed. Registration

Intern Registration for Persons in the Center for Urban Education Teacher Education Program (CUE - TEP)

There will be a meeting of all students who:

a) have registered but have not chosen sites for interning during the Spring semester of the 1971-72 school year.

b) are interested in registering for interning during the Spring semester of the 1971-72 school year.

The meeting will be held in the School of Education old library area (basement of the School of Education) on Wednesday, October 27, 1971 at 10:00 a.m.

For further information contact Pat Proctor or Dennis Tyler in room 225. 225, School of Education.

In The Nation And The World

Nixon Announces Court Nominees

WASHINGTON (AP)—Lewis F. Powell, a Richmond, Va., lawyer and former president of the American Bar Association, and William H. Rehnquist, an assistant attorney general, were named by President Nixon Thursday night for the Supreme Court.

The President announced the nominations to the nation in a radio and television address. If confirmed by the Senate they will succeed Justices Hugo L. Black and John M. Harlan and bring the court up to full strength.

Powell, 64, a soft-spoken lawyer, has also headed the American College of Trial Lawyers. Rehnquist, 47, heads the legal counsel office in the Justice Department and is, in effect, the President's lawyer.

Nixon said "they will be names to be remembered."

Nixon recalled that he had appointed Rehnquist an assistant attorney general, "serving as the chief interpreter of the Constitution for the whole government."

"I would rate William Rehnquist as having one of the finest legal minds in the whole country today," Nixon said. "He rates at the very top as a constitutional lawyer and a legal scholar."

Senate hearings are expected to begin in about 10 days.

Nixon described both men as "conservatives, but only in a judicial, not a political sense."

The selections were surprising in that neither had been included in a list of six prospects sent to the American Bar Association for evaluation. However, the ABA judiciary committee found neither of the two top choices, Herschel H. Friday, a Little Rock, Ark., lawyer and Mildred L. Lillie, a California appeals court judge, qualified for the Supreme Court.

By choosing Powell and Rehnquist the President may have averted a bruising Senate battle.

Giving his reasons for his two nominations, Nixon said proposals had included appointing a woman and appointing a member of Congress. Others wanted appointments from religious or nationality groups, he said.

But, he added, he believed the entire nation should be represented.

He said high court members should be among the very best lawyers in the nation. "The Supreme Court is the fastest track in the nation," he said.

He said the judicial philosophy of court members need not agree with those of the President.

Their responsibility is to the American people, he said, not to the President who appoints them. Their job is to interpret the constitution, and "not twist or bend" the constitution to any philosophy, he said.

Nixon said "it may be charged that they are conservatives. This is true, but only in a judicial, not a political sense."

Nixon compared Powell to John Marshall, a Virginian who was the third and probably the most important chief justice in history.

Mitchell Pulls ABA Out Of Court Race

WASHINGTON (AP)—Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell told the American Bar Association Thursday night he is terminating the procedure of allowing the ABA to rule on presidential nominations to the Supreme Court before those nominations are sent to the Senate.

In a letter released by the White House moments after President Nixon announced his choice of Lewis F. Powell Jr. and William H. Rehnquist for the court, Mitchell cited "premature publication of information" on a list of possible nominees Nixon had sent the ABA earlier.

Mitchell noted he had agreed in July 1970 to furnish the ABA's standing committee on federal judiciary the names of persons he recommended to the President for Supreme Court nominations.

"The events of the past week have made it clear" that the confidentiality of his communications had been breached," Mitchell said.

"I can only conclude that there is no practical way to avoid unauthorized disclosure of the names submitted and the advice of your committee ... despite the best efforts of the committee," Mitchell said in the letter directed to ABA President Leon Jawerski and committee chairman Lawrence E. Walsh.

The committee, after two days of meetings, had refused to endorse Nixon's apparent first choices for the two vacancies-Herschel H. Friday and Judge Mildred L. Lillie.

"Premature publication of information relating to our exchanges can cause a number of unfortunate side-effects, and it can be particularly unfair to a person whose name may have been referred to your committee but who may not be nominated to the court," Mitchell said.

The attorney general added: "In such case there will always be speculation that his or her fellow lawyers found something negative in the subject's character or professional qualifications, and there is no way that the subject can counteract it.

"Like you, I hope that the new procedure would be useful and productive. However, under the circumstances, I have concluded that the only fair and proper course is to resume the long-standing practice of submitting the attorney general's recommendations directly to the President."

Gravel, Canadians Protest Amchitka

WASHINGTON (AP)—The White House, a mecca for protesters, had some unusual pickets Thursday: a U.S. senator and two members of Canada's Parliament.

But unlike other sign carriers, Sen. Mike Gravel of Alaska and the Canadians trotted the Pennsylvania Avenue sidewalk for only 25 minutes before packing up and leaving the field to the regulars: anti-war Quakers, Pakistani-war protesters and a man plugging away for Men's Liberation.

Gravel and the Canadians protested the five-megaton underground nuclear explosion planned later this month on Amchitka Island in the Aleutians. The President has not decided whether to halt the test.

"We are acting essentially as citizens," said Gravel, a Democrat carrying a sign that proclaimed: "Mr. President, where do you stand on Cannikin?" Cannikin is the code name for the test.

AP Editors Flunk Black Culture Quiz

PHILADELPHIA (AP)-How's your soul IQ?

Good if you're black but poor if you're white, as newspaper editors from the United States and Canada learned Thursday during an informal quiz on black culture.

Thirteen questions devised by a psychologist, sociologist and historian were posed to 300 delegates at the 38th annual convention of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association.

Robert J. Haiman, St. Petersburg, Fla. Times, chairman of the minority news study committee, told the editors, all white, that the quiz was tested in nine states-none named-and that blacks averaged 8 out of 13 and whites just 3.

"I know that we APME editors can score a great deal higher than that," Haiman said, before reading the questions.

However, the editors, responsible for the news and pictures that go into America's dailies, did not. Most scored 3 or less correct answers.

Here are the questions:

1. If a man is called a "blood" then he is-a fighter, a Chicano, a Negro, an Indian.
2. If a black reader of your paper thinks it is "real down," he thinks it is-very good, very bad, racist, or sympathetic to blacks.
3. The opposite of "square" is cool, up, down, hip.
4. T-Bone Walker got famous playing what musical instrument-trombone, piano, flute, guitar.
5. Who did Stagger Lee kill in the famous Blues legend-Frankie, his mother, Johnnie, Billy.
6. Jazz pianist Ahmad Jamal adopted that Arabic name after he was discovered by white audiences and became famous. Black jazz fans knew him under his prior name which was-Willie Jackson, Lee Jones, Will Donald or Fritz Jones.
7. Chitlins taste rubbery unless you cook them long enough. How long should they be cooked-15 minutes, 2 hours, 24 hours, 1 hour.
8. The first American pioneer to settle on the sire of what is now Chicago was a black man. What was his name?
9. Many blacks say June 19 should be made a legal holiday in the United States because it was the day-the slaves were freed in the United States, the slaves were freed in Texas, Martin Luther King was born, Booker T. Washington died.
10. The first doctor to perform open heart surgery was a black American, nearly 70 years ago. Who was he?
11. A black surgeon developed the technique for extracting and preserving plasma from whole blood. What was his name?
12. Everyone is familiar with the famous painting of George Washington crossing the Delaware. Two of his oarsmen were blacks. What were their names?
13. Every managing editor knows Soledad Brother George Jackson was shot to death this past August at San Quentin. But who are the two surviving Soledad Brothers?

Now here are the answers:

1. Negro.
2. Very good.
3. Hip.
4. Guitar
5. Billy.
6. Fritz Jones
7. Two hours.
8. Jean Baptiste DuSable.
9. The slaves were freed in Texas. 10. Dr. Daniel Hale Williams. 11. Dr. Charles Drew. 12. Prince Whipple and Oliver Cromwell. 13. John Clutchette and Fleeta Drumgo.

Haiman told the editors they shouldn't feel disappointed they did so badly, that members of his committee which had worked all year in black news, black history and black culture didn't get very many right either.

Nobel Prize To Chilean Poet

STOCKHOLM (AP)-The Nobel Prize in Literature was awarded Thursday to Pablo Neruda, a Communist poet from Chile who says he tries "to interpret a little of the soul of all Latin America."

Some of his poetry is anti-Yankee, and his writings helped sway public opinon to bring the first Marxist government to Chile last year. President Salvador Allende rewarded him by naming him ambassador to France.

At the embassy in Paris, Neruda, 67, told reporters: "Poets believe in miracles and this time it seems the miracle happened." He had been considered for the prize for 20 years.

He will come to Stockholm Dec. 10 to receive the $88,000 prize.

Asked if he regarded himself as a politically militant poet, Neruda replied: "Yes, I am. There must be writers of all tendencies. One cannot ask that everyone think alike.

"The government and people of Chile have a great responsbility and a great struggle to carry forward and naturally everything that depends upon me is at the service of this struggle."

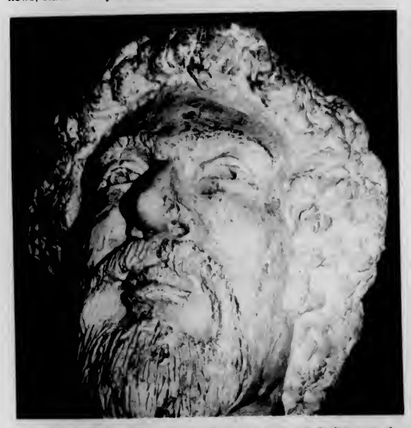
The Swedish Academy of Letters said his poetry "brings alive a continent's destiny and dreams." The academy secretary, Karl Ragnar Gierow, conceded that Neruda was "a controversial author," but declared he was as strong a nationalist as a Communist. He called Neruda "the poet of violated human dignity."

The son of a railroad worker, Neruda has been writing since boyhood. He was born Neftali Ricardo Teyes by Basoalto, but took on the pseudonym Pablo Neruda in 1920 to avoid the wrath of his father, who disliked poetry and destroyed his son's lyrics. He made the name official in 1936.

One of his poems, The United Fruit Co., assails the American company whose operations in Latin America have been in controversy.

In another poem, "Awake Railsplitter," Neruda tells the United States to bring its sons home from war and seek peace. It contains these lines: "It's your peace that we love, not your mask. Your warrior's face is not beautiful America, you're broad and beautiful."

Neruda is the second Chilean to win the literature prize. The first was awarded in 1945 to Gabriela Mistral, who became Neruda's literary guide and lent him books.



Neruda previously won the Stalin prize, and others in Chile.

Meeting with reporters, Gierow recalled the controversy last year when the prize went to Alexander Solzhenitsyn, the Soviet writer famed for such works as "One Day in the Life of Ivan Denisovich."

Solzhenitsyn, whose works are banned in the Soviet Union, declined to come to Stockholm for fear he might not be allowed to return home. A Soviet newspaper said his works blackened the deeds of the Soviet people.

As a diplomat in 1927-35 Neruda held consular posts in Burma, Ceylon, Java, Singapore and Spain. He was consul in Madrid when the civil war broke out in July 1936, and he joined the Republican side. This changed him into a radical political poet and he has been closely aligned with the Communists since.

In 1947, Neruda returned to Chile, was elected as a Communist to the Senate, but was forced to flee to Mexico after he accused the Chilean government of selling out to the United States.

This fugitive from the Concrete City was seen wandering around Herter Hall earlier in the month. If you spot him, call the caretaker of the North Leverett Cemetery. (Steve Schmidt Photo).

Should Women Vote?

NEW YORK--A group of male chauvinist sexist pigs met here recently at a black-tie stag dinner to see if they could do anything about stopping the Women's Lib movement.

As the only newspaperman present I was sworn not to reveal the names of the participants. But I was told that I could print anything I wanted regarding the discussion.

The men, all in their early forties and mostly in the communications and financial fields, felt the only chance that they had of reversing what they considered this country's "permissive" attitude toward women, was to repeal the 19th Amendment--which gives the female sex the right to vote.

They said all the problems now confronting the United States could be traced to the 19th Amendment, and there was no sense trying to reverse the direction of the country unless the country came to its senses and took the vote away from women.

The male chauvinist sexist pigs said they had nothing against women personally (few even admitted to living with one) but it was their opinion that giving females the vote had engendered false hopes in their breasts which had led to unrest and even violence in the home.

In a fervent speech, given after cigars and port were served, an advertising man said:

"We fought in 1776 for liberty, in 1861 for freedom, in 1917 for democracy...then women got the vote, and every war since then has been lousy!

"Women have no judgment in such matters. If we are ever to get out of Indochina, the men must take over again.

There were cheers from the partisan all-male audience.

A banker who had just returned from Liechtenstein reported that women in that country did not have the vote, and he found them to be the happiest people in Europe.

"All the women smiled at me as they churned their butter," he reported. "They laughed as they milked their cows and sang as they dumped grapes into the hugh wine vats. And the men--from their mountain vastnesses to their fertile valleys, from their sun-dappled slopes or wherever they lived, the men of Liechtenstein stood fast. We're bigger than Liechtenstein, stronger, more easily spelled. Surely our women deserve to be as happy as their women. They can be, providing they don't vote."

An art director held up a poster he had just designed which read "Stop" and Think--What Would Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and Rutherford B. Hayes have thought about entering a political dialogue with Bella Abzug? Makes you wonder, doesn't it?...Could Bella have happened back in the days when we had only 18 amendments? or better still, 17?...'Let 'em vote,' they said. 'What harm can it do? '...well, now we know!"

The entire room rose as one to toast the poster.

Finally, a man who identified himself only as general secretary of the Bull Moose Party got on his feet. "We are not opposed to Women's Lib," he said as everyone gasped. "We say equal pay for equal work...(unconstrained bosoms, if that's the way they want them)...day care centers for every child in America...free beer for ladies at the men's bar at the Biltmore--they can have 'em all and tiparillos, too...BUT NOT THE VOTE!!!!

"Political thinking is peculiarly masculine. It involves game plans, Southern strategies and Phases I and II through God knows what. Women are not up to understanding these things. What's happening to the Supreme Court could happen to all of us. STOP THE ROT."

Surely A Noble Sentiment

(Ed. Note: This letter, written by University President Wood, was sent on October 20, 1971 to every member of the Massachusetts delegation in Washington.)

Dear Congressman:

When I met with the delegation this summer we talked about the need for federal support for higher education. At that time neither the House nor the Senate had legislation before it and I promised to write you when specific bills were under consideration.

The Senate has now adopted S659 and the House will shortly be acting on HR7248 which amends and extends a variety of higher education programs and, for the first time, provides general assistance to higher education. The views among my colleagues in higher education toward HR7248 are as diverse as those expressed by various members of the House committee and noted in the report. At this juncture, however, I feel the House committee bill does begin to meet the general institutional need for higher education that I think is critical. I realize that the complex formula of a general assistance in HR7248 raises problems and that some constructive amendment might be desirable. For instance, the higher education foundation proposed by the administration (a similar proposal is in S656) is a useful instrument and would enhance the bill.

PRESIDENT WOOD

But the main thrust of the bill is clearly beneficial. We do need emergency aid. We do need a cost of education supplement related to federally assisted students. We do need general aid as a function of all students served. The formula in Title VIII of the bill reaches to each of these objectives.

Accordingly, I ask your support for HR7248. Even more, I appreciate your continuing concern for the institutions of higher education, public and private, that contribute to the well-being of the Commonwealth.

Sincerely,
Robert Wood
President

The Chicago Fire

I saw a girl die in my arms,
she had been possessed by sparks flying in her hair,
as she laughed,
her eyes glowed greenly, and the spirit there,
was magnificent,
she died today,
in my arms,
it would have been better, to eat beans from a can, in the car,
by the side of the road,
than to eat fresh pie,
at home,
there was a tyme,
when she asked me for, to move on anywhere, and almost to starve and stumble anywhere,
with me,
the sun can rise to our left sometimes,
our right, on clear days,
it depends, mostly,
on which side it is, that we sleep on,
I think she knew me,
that morning, when in a brief instant,
our life passed before us, and, it is when sons die in battle, and love dies in bed,
that we take miracles for granted, and wonder where they have disappeared...

Letters To The Editor

If Only For The Sake Of Honesty

To the Editor:

Every once in a while I have fantasy games that I play. The other day I decided to pretend that my car was a taxi, and since I enjoy being a good-deed-doer on occasion, I mixed fantasy with reality. In other words, I picked up a lot of hitchhikers. At one point I picked up three girls who were going to the Quad. It was kind of quiet in the car until we passed another hitch-hiker, a guy, but since my car was full, I passed by him.... He was a very thin, fragile-looking sort of fellow, who had a posture and an expression that looked as though he wasn't sure he wanted to be thumbing a ride, or even knew how to thumb....his arm stayed next to his shoulder, and his thumb only slightly and shyly protruded from his hand. He looked lost, and somehow, the whole mixture was rather comical in a wistful sort of way.

As we passed by him, chuckles broke the previously quiet space in my 'taxi'... Rather than leave the image and the chuckle as they were, one of the girls decided to carry the joke just a little further into a comic monologue. She commented, "Wow!...what a real he-man type he is..." and punctuated that sentence with a limp-wristed action. Then, she proceeded to make more "comic" remarks about "fags" and "fagots." I began to feel uncomfortable and angry at the same, but I didn't remark on her callousness and ignorance. I left them off at the Quad and began thinking about why I had remained passive...feeling ashamed and afraid.

To those girls from the Quad who got a ride from a woman in a red car on Tuesday, your ride came courtesy of a Lesbian...

Now--my thoughts turn to whether I should sign my real name or not; whether, even, to print this or not. A lot of fragmented thoughts impinge on my consciousness: nothing I've ever written has stood ashamed and naked of my name because I felt if what I think is worth writing, then it's worth my name...nothing I have ever done has ever been hidden (except stealing some magic markers) if it's worth doing or living, if only for the sake of honesty--fear and paranoia:-now my friends, acquaintances and 'enemies' will know about my sexuality--and maybe not understand..am I being too proud, am I making too much out of being Gay...what if a future employer gets hold of this...will I get crank phone calls...Do I have a disease, if curable and cured, that will haunt me if people know I had it...am I alienating Gay brothers and sisters who might not understand my nonchalant openness--am I failing to realize the consequences of such openness--am I sick--a masochist--ego tripping...Do I have a martyr or lemming complex...am I just marching off into another cause carrying the banner of another oppressed group? No--I refuse to stay in a closet, hanging in the dark. (There's nothing noble in that because I'm afraid of the dark).

I found the paranoia that pervades our lives, homosexual and heterosexual, and I decided that I could not and will not live with that--that I could not accept less than myself--that I could not deny the people I love. And maybe, those three girls will stop to think and I'll be less ashamed and afraid of my sexuality and sexual preference. And, maybe, our fantasies will dissolve into the beautiful reality of loving each other--and maybe..the words for sexual preference will fade away until there's only one word, "love." And, maybe, people will stop asking "why" with chuckling or fear and say "why not" with joy and strength.

Hot Ticket

Flighty Funding

To the Editor:

In response to Bob Zelman's request for further evidence of the Student Senate ignoring the requests of R.S.O. organizations, I'd like to bring up the example of the Sport Parachute Club.

I've been the treasurer of the club since 1969 and a member since 1968. In the time that I've been a member, the Student Senate has given us no funds and has been uncooperative. On two occasions I've driven from the Springfield area to UMass to meet with the Finance Committee only to find no committee and no response to numerous messages left in the Senate Treasurer's office. When I finally met with the Finance Committee I was told we were a "Special Interest" group and therefore couldn't be funded. (Would someone please define a special interest group? We don't restrict our membership in any way!)

The Parachute Club maintains its own equipment and offers UMass students the only economically feasible way to participate in an exciting, growing sport.

Furthermore, the club represents the University at numerous local parachuting meets and the National Collegiate Parachuting Championships, all without financial support, I can assure you, it's not because we haven't asked!

Marc James

P.S. We'll represent the University at the N.C.P.L. Championships in Florida at Thanksgiving, again without support!

To the Editor:

In order to resolve the parking problems that are facing the campus, Chancellor Tippo, during his administration, initiated a parking committee because it was felt that the parking problems were excessive and were not being resolved by the parking commission that was in operation. At present then there are two parking committees, as such. There are evident problems and it doesn't seem that either of these two organizations, which are composed of students, faculty and administrators, can or are about to resolve the problem at hand. At this point it was decided that we as the Student Senate should take a positive, constructive stand on this matter. The idea was sent to the Senate Services and Rents and Fees Committees which developed several proposals. The most important proposal was a decision to form a subcommittee to deal with these matters so that we can develop a program of the students which we can present to the University.

If you don't understand or appreciate the present system; if you are a commuter and you have to park in V lot; if you live on Orchard Hill and have to store your vehicle in F lot, or if you live in Southwest and your car was ripped off- do something about it. Don't complain if you won't try to find an answer to the problem. I don't like it but I'm doing something. What are you doing? If you are concerned enough to work then leave a note with your name, address and phone number in my mail box, give it to the secretary in the Student Senate office in the lower level of the Campus Center, or call me at 6-8886. Do it today.

Editorial Points

An observer of ours recently noted that Texans 'reek' of elegance. One wonders if that remark was intended as a compliment.

If anyone has seen a small, demure purple cow meandering around campus nodding its head, stop it and send it back to the Collegian Office. It's an integral part of the staff.

Isn't it possible that the creation of all these long weekends is a capitalist conspiracy of the Peter Pan Bus Company. Check out the lines today.

For those who have a low opinion of President Nixon, his Supreme Court nominees should come as no surprise.

Celebrate!

To the Editor:

The VietNam Veterans against War cordially invite veterans and supporters to join us in our celebration of Veterans Day.

We will first attend the Westover Field demonstration at the industrial gate at 11:00.

This will be followed by our debut at the Veterans Day parade in Springfield at 1:00.

If you wish to join us in the days festivities be outside Whitmore at 10:00 on Monday, October 25 for our convoy. Transportation will be provided for those who need it.

A party will follow the days historic events.

P.S. Veterans bring your D.D. 214's.

Index Of Apathy

To the Editor:

In the past few years, out of the apathy which is currently infecting the entire educational system, and through the abandonment of long-standing institutions, most traditions seem to have vanished from the college campus.

The results, whether anticipated or not, are very beneficial to the community. The election of a Homecoming queen has been exposed as the psychological demon which has destroyed many a poor girl's perspective of her role in society. Concerts have been discontinued, since, in this capitalist society where the dollar is king, people are finally realizing that nothing is really worth paying for. This is freedom, so I guess it's good. I don't pretend to understand it, but being the meek and unobtrusive soul that I am, I won't argue. The People, after all, are always right.

The yearbook on this and many other campuses across the nation is likewise in danger. In order to salvage what I might of the '72 INDEX, therefore, a substantial change of format is currently being worked out.

Most people who have bothered to mention the '71 Index seemed to like it. Good. In the spring of last year, however, the Student Senate was nice enough to cut $33,000 from our budget. As a result, the '72 INDEX is certainly not in a position to compete with the '71 book and its traditional format.

The staff has decided to try something new, having no other alternative. The '72 book will be in a modified magazine format. There will be very heavy copy, and not as many pictures. Whether there will be any color is as yet questionable.

What we want to do this year is to give the yearbook a relevancy and topicality which has been lacking in previous years. It will be more of a newsmagazine with a hard cover than a spring-is-beautiful-winter-is-white - blah - blah - blah - record - of - the - pretty - trees -and- buildings stereotyped book which the '71 INDEX tried to change. The transition was far from complete last year. As a result of our budget cut, we at least have an excuse for an attempt at a radical change.

The purpose behind this letter is a plea. Considering the type of yearbook which we are trying to produce, a campus-wide participation is necessary. Anybody who feels that he or she can capture in an essay a certain important part of University life is invited to submit his or her idea to the INDEX for consideration. With normally only three or four copy writers on the yearbook staff, the divers aspects of campus life which the book tries to convey cannot be captured as they actually exist.

Examples of essays which might be submitted could be, "The drug situation on campus- A Student Perspective", "Administration-Student Relationships", "What About the Greeks?", "The Student Senate- Where it stands". The list could go on and on.

Students, Administration, faculty and staff are invited to consider the idea of writing about their particular interests in the university community. We want your ideas. Lend us a hand.

Banks Reduce Rates

NEW YORK (AP)—Big banks reduced their prime lending rate Wednesday although President Nixon's price freeze left interest charges free of control.

Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. of New York initiated the cut in minimum interest charges on major corporate loans to 5-3/4 per cent from 6 per cent. The prime rate is the minimum interest that banks charge their biggest and most credit-worthy borrowers.

Major banks across the country quickly followed with identical reductions. They included Bank of America, the nation's largest, Chase Manhattan of New York, Chemical of New York, Bank of California, Union Bank of Los Angeles, Girard Trust of Philadelphia, Citizens & Southern of Atlanta, Commerce Bank of Kansas City and many others.

Morgan Guaranty said its rate cut "reflects market conditions, including a less than seasonal increase in loan demand and a decline in cost of funds."

None of the banks trimming the prime rate connected their action with President Nixon's presentation to Congress Tuesday of legislation giving him authority to control interest rates when Phase 2 of his economic program goes into effect Nov. 13.

Interest rates have been a controversial area since Nixon imposed a 90 day freeze on wages and prices last Aug. 15. Labor leaders objected strongly to the exemption of interest rates from mandatory control.

Five College Gives It Away For Free

"5 College" is a label that precedes many titles and activities on UMass campus. Frequently, the appearance of the label is a result of the coordinated efforts of students of each of the five colleges who serve on the Five College Student Coordinating Board or F.C.S.C.B.

The F.C.S.C.B. offers a number of services and activities, including the 5 College bus system, the interlibrary loan system, and course exchange opportunities with the other campuses. In addition, a wide range of cultural events announced in the 5 College calendar are open to all students and faculty of each of the five colleges which include Amherst, Smith, Hampshire, Mount Holyoke, and UMass.

Last week, a 5 College information booklet was distributed on campus which included information concerning bus schedules, exchange programs, library procedures, calendars, phone numbers, etc. More of these booklets will be made available at the Campus Center information desk within the next few days.

Efforts are now being made to make more five college information available to the students. Shortly, a phone will be operational with a number to call for recorded information including a list of 5 college weekly events. Other information such as where to obtain 5 College course details and information as to how and where to register complaints, questions, or suggestions will be included in the tape.

At this time, bus complaints should be placed in the 5 College bus complaint box which is now located at the Campus Center information desk. Bus complaints should include the time and date of the run, the two schools at either end of the run, your name, address, and the complaint.

Naturally, these programs require a great deal of work. Help is desperately needed in order to get the telephone information center underway. UMass's two representatives to the F.C.S.C.B. are George Seltzer (6-6832) and Nancy Mazonson (5-2418). If you are interested in working on the information center, please contact Nancy. Also, any complaints, suggestions, or questions should be channeled through these two people.

Sammy Davis: "That's the last one."

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—"Drink booze? Wow, did I when I was working on a movie, I started out at 9 in the morning with a drink in my hand, and I continued through the day. Many an actor made the mistake of trying to keep up with me. Impossible, man!" Entertainer Sammy Davis, Jr., 45, was reflecting on his drinking days. Those days ended last month, he says, when he was stricken with a liver ailment while appearing at the Sands in Las Vegas. Doctors told him he was "close to dying" and wouldn't live three years unless he changed his ways.

"At first everyone thought it was cirrhosis," he said, "but later it was diagnosed as an enlarged liver. The liver has great powers of healing itself, if it is treated right. That means rest, proper diet, vitamins-and no booze."

When Davis learned the gravity of his case, he went to the bar and downed his usual bourbon and cola. "That's the last one," he announced, and headed for the hospital.

He is now in the middle of an enforced eight-week vacation at his Beverly Hills mansion. He looks as compact as ever waist size: 26, but claims to have gained seven pounds, up to 124.

"When I was drinking, I had no appetite; I just picked at my food," he remarked.

Davis now allows himself a little wine with dinner and an occasional beer.

Describing his life with liquor, Davis said: "When I was younger, I fooled around with pot, but I gave it up. I was too eager to get to the top, and I was afraid of getting busted. In those days, getting busted wasn't the chic thing that it is today. For me, it could have been complete disaster.

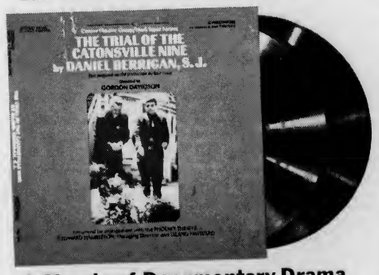
What does "Thou shalt not kill" mean?

"The real issue is: How can we serve both love and war?"



"Yes, we violated the law. But the law is no absolute to us. I must say our intention was to destroy the files. But our motive was to illustrate genocide in Vietnam and corruption at home."

With these words, Father Berrigan gives a hint of the explosive nature of "The Trial of the Catonsville Nine."

A brilliant and honest piece of modern theater specially staged for live recording in stereo. A forceful performance directed by Gordon Davidson, superbly captured in a two-record album.

Plus—The History Recording Society offers the new album "Berrigan Raps," free with the purchase of "The Trial of the Catonsville Nine" for $13.00.

Act now: This is a limited-time offer so mail the coupon promptly. Offer restricted to members of the academic community.

A Classic of Documentary Drama

Powerful, shocking, the very definition of relevance by the man who lived the event—Daniel Berrigan, S.J.

Made into great drama

Clive Barnes of the New York Times said of "The Trial of the Catonsville Nine."..."Positively riveting...a new kind of play...wonderfully moving."

FREE:
"Berrigan Raps." Containing: a sermon from the underground; a talk about America and Catonsville; the poetry and the events which shaped it. Daniel Berrigan talks about himself, his beliefs, and his actions. An exciting album that presents an intimate portrait of Berrigan as a man and as a radical. Retail price: $6.50. Yours free.

Air Force Non-Com Held For Espionage

Fla. (AP)-A noncommissioned officer in military intelligence was accused Thursday of espionage in connection with national defense secrets allegedly taken from the Air Defense Weapons Center.

M. Sgt. Walter Perkins, 36, a 19-year Air Force veteran, was arrested Monday and held at the base guard house.

Perkins, married and the father of four, was specifically charged with intent to pass classified information to unauthorized persons.

The Air Force said he was the ranking noncommissioned officer at the intelligence division of the center, which is directly under the command of the Air Force's Aerospace Defense Command, and had access to classified material relating to the nation's defense.

Air Force spokesmen said Perkins also was charged with giving false, official statements about the destruction of classified documents.

The Air Force would not elaborate on the charges but said Perkins had been provided with a military attorney and had indicated he planned to retain civilian counsel.

Hank Basham, director of information at the base, said Perkins was arrested Monday on the base. He said Perkins had been assigned to the weapons center since 1969 and was classified to handle secret documents.

At the base, which is responsible for all advance air defense training, are the interceptor weapons school, the fighter plane tactics school, the combat crew training school and the test squadron.

Basham said the arrest was the first of its kind at the base, near Panama City in the Florida panhandle. He would not say whether anyone else was involved.

He said an investigation was underway to determine if other legal action will be taken. If convicted by court-martial on the charges, Perkins faces a maximum sentence of 13 years in prison and a dishonroable discharge.

Ellsberg Defends Newspapers

PHILADELPHIA (AP)—Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, the man who says he leaked the secret Pentagon papers, said Wednesday the newspapers that published the documents acted on conscience and "did very well by the country."

Martin Hayden, editor of The Detroit News, disagreed however, and criticized The New York Times and other papers that published the documents, saying he expects tighter press restrictions as a result.

"I cannot accept the statement of some of the New York Times and Washington Post officials that this is a basic First Amendment victory for the whole press," Hayden said. "On the contrary, I am a little afraid that in winning a battle they may ultimately cost us all a war."

Ellsberg and Hayden appeared on a panel at the 38th annual meeting of The Associated Press Managing Editors Association. Also taking part in the spirited debate were Alie Abel, dean of the Columbia University Journalism School and a former reporter for both The New York Times and The Detroit News, and Peter Arnett, an AP Pulitzer Prize winner who covered the Vietnam war for more than four years.

After the discussion-with Hayden voicing disapproval-the APME awarded The New York Times with its first Freedom of Information Citation for publishing the Pentagon papers.

A.M. Rosentha, Times managing editor, said in accepting the award that the Pentagon papers "were the property of the people of the United States and by not publishing them we would have deprived the people of information...affecting their lives."

Following are excerpts from the Pentagon papers APME panel:

Ellsberg:
The Times' editors "felt that there were principles on which a man had to stand, that duty to conscience and one's professional colleagues, above all to one's countrymen, and the Constituion, could bring you in conflict with the interpretation of the law by the attorney general...

"The papers don't protect secrets from an enemy. In fact, in many cases, as has already come out, we took special efforts to make Hanoi well aware of facts which were being withheld from the American people...

Hayden:
"I don't think there is any question that The New York Times, and The Washington Post won a great personal court victory before the Supreme Court.

AIRES (March 21-April 19): Hold off on trip; you need additional information. Answers can be found at home, through family member. Check reservations, appointments. Avoid driving with one who has overly imbibed. Take it easy.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Pull in financial reins. Don't commit yourself to long range payment plan. Take inventory. Get rid of what is not needed. Be realistic about values. Wishful thinking will not make it so.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Lie low. Don't ask for more than you can handle. Study Taurus message. Play waiting game. Make concession to mate, business associate. Delay signing of contract, agreement. Time now is on your side.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You do best by finishing rather than beginning project. Stick with what is familiar. Basic chores require attention. Get rid of clutter. Correct safety hazards. Keep medical appointment.

LEO (July 23-August 22): Avoid acting on impulse. Be considerate toward those becoming involved in too many projects simultaneously. Be versatile without scattering efforts. Some neighbors, relatives are misintormed. Don't believe everything you hear. Evaluate.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21): Guard valuables. Tendency exists now to trust wrong persons. Key is to be available, alert. Don't delegate necessary duties. Be aware of details, subtle nuances. Get money's worth. Count change.

SAGITTARIUS (November 22-December 21): Do what gives you pleasure but, remember, payments will be due. Means take responsibility for actions. Mate, partner may provide loyal opposition. Recognize need for creative changes.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19): Play low key. Avoid taking others for granted. A bit of diplomacy now can go a long way. Skeletons in closet are rattled. Look behind scenes for answers. Reject the superficial. Welcome truth.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18): Friends could argue. Don't get caught in middle. Strive to maintain objective view. Desires, requirements are subject to sudden change. Know this and don't commit yourself. Wait.

PISCES (February 19-March 20): Conflict could exist between home and business duties. Realistic view is a requisite. Older individual plays prominent role. Heed voice of experience. One in authority is uncertain. Don't push.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can set your own pace; goal is always present in your subconscious. You were on your own at relatively early age. You are at your best when working for yourself. Taking orders is not your forte. Change of residence could be upcoming.

Frosh Gridders At Home Against Winless Rhode Island

By BILL BALLOU

The UMass freshman football team, probably still soggy from their last rain-deluged game with Boston College, hope to get back on the winning track when they entertain the Freshman Rams from the University of Rhode Island tomorrow afternoon at Alumni Field.

The Redmen opened up their season on the road against Boston University and came up with a 32-10 victory. A week later they came home to play the Boston College frosh in a driving rainstorm and came out on the short end by 13-7. This weekend they hope to bring their mark up above .500 and at the same time hand the winless Rhode Island club their third straight loss.

Thus far this season the Rams have dropped a 23-21 squeaker to UConn and fallen to New Hampshire by a score of 21-14. As the scores of these games would indicate, URI is certainly not a doormat, but simply a team that with a couple of breaks could have been 2-0 as easily 0-2. Like the last team UMass took on, BC, Rhode Island boasts a star running back.

His name is Dan Whitaker and he hails from Warwick, Rhode Island. During his senior year he was selected as a member of the Rhode Island All-State football team. And like the varsity team, the URI frosh boast a quarterback who is potentially dynamite. For the varsity it is Bob Ehrhardt and for the frosh it's Paul Ryan from Haverhill, Mass.

The Redmen plan to go with about the same line-up as in the first two games, with the offensive backfield consisting of quarterback Fred Kelliher, halfback Rich Herman, fullback Larkey Mays and flanker John Healy remaining the same and the offensive line making a couple of changes.

Weakside guard Don Sokolnicki, hobbled by an injury, is replaced by Ken Foisy, who moves to offense from his position on defense as linebacker. Ed Wallace is at the strongside tackle, coming over from the defensive line, and he replaces Jim Shea, who after the opening game against BU, figured he ate too much and headed for the infirmary with a stomachache. It turned out to be appendicitis and needless to say has cost him a couple of games.

On the defensive side, the defensive line sees big Ed Wagner make his first start of the season at end. Wagner hails from Warwick, Rhode Island and is really looking forward to a chance to stick it to the URI frosh. The addition of Wagner, gives the UMass defensive line two ends that could combine to give QB Ryan a busy day trying to escape them. Ed McAleney at one end stands 6'3" and weighs 221 pounds, and Wagner at the other is 6'5" and 249 pounds. That's a lot of beef.

Providing the weather makes playing conditions conducive to a football game rather than water polo, this game should go a long way in determining the future of this team. After Rhode Island, the two games remaining for the Redmen are against New Hampshire and Connecticut, each of which has beaten Rhode Island in less than convincing fashion. A win would put them 2-1 and give them a great chance to finish the season about .500. A loss of course puts them 1-2 and in a situation where they would have to win their remaining two games to break .500.

This game should provide a few answers as to the nature of this freshman team. Game time is 1:30 at Alumni Field.

JV Soccermen Fall 2-1 To Amherst

By JIM PINSKY

In a very exciting and aggressive soccer game the Amherst j.v. soccer team defeated their UMass counterparts. Despite an amazing amount of good shots on goal only three found their way into the net. Unfortunately two of these goals were for Amherst giving them a 2-1 victory. The loss evened the UMass J.V. record at 2-2.

UMass vaulted into an early lead when at 2:10 of the first quarter wing Greg Tudryn scored on a pass from Alan Young. The rest of the first period saw many good Redman shots including one that hit the underside of the crossbar. It wasn't until 12:19 of the second quarter before Amherst could even it up.

The second half was very close. The teams played a scoreless third quarter. Then at 4:31 of the fourth quarter UMass goalie Barry Lutchen made a great save but an Amherst player banged home the subsequent rebound for a goal and the win. It was a dogfight the rest of the way as both teams peppered the goalies. At one point UMass had several corner kicks, and one clear shot on goal as Greg Tudryn collided with the Amherst goalie. In the scuffle which followed the ball hit a UMass player's hand ending the flurry. With two minutes left in the game Coach Jekanowski pulled goalie Lutchen to give the team more scoring potential but it was too late as Amherst held on to win.

Orchard Race

Monday at 4 p.m. the UMass cross country team and Coach Ken O'Brien will hold their weekly recreational meet for the campus community. This week the race will be held in the Orchard and the first ten men and women finishers will be awarded with eight by ten pictures of themselves crossing the finish line.

Crew Team Competes At Charles Regatta

The UMass crew team travels to Boston on Sunday to compete with over 1200 oarsmen in 300 boats representing 60 colleges and clubs in the annual Head of the Charles Regatta.

There are 16 events on the program ranging from a veterans' singles (some men as old as 75 race) and a woman's race to the more prestigious Elite eights competition.

UMass is entered in seven events. All races are three miles upstream beginning at the Boston University Bridge and ending near the WBZ radio tower on Soldiers Field Road.

Any students home for the long weekend are encouraged to get down to the river and enjoy yourself along the Charles and acquaint yourselves with the sport of rowing.

UMass' 32 man team has entered the novice and intermediate singles events, the pair without coxswain and two intermediate eight-oar shells as well as intermediate four with coxswain and Elite (highest category) four with coxswain and eight oar events.

Captain Rick Jones leads a rather large group of veterans who are scheduled for two races. Jones along with Clay Morin are in the pair and will also pull bow and two in the Elite "8".

"Tiny" Al Flanders will stroke both the Elite four and eights being joined by Billy Moran and Ted Fitzpatrick and Jeff Allen in the four and by sophs 6'6 Rich Clair and 6'5 Jim Kennedy in the eight.

Dave Richard, Paul Winchell, Chris Hodson and Mel Strein will double in the intermediate four and eight. Senior Bob Jayes (who doubles as the coxswains' union representative), junior Jody Lianides and sophomore Mike Thomspon will handle the coxswain responsibilities on the twisting course which keeps the coxswain busy.

Usually reserved Coach Mike Faherty, a very old man at 23 was very adamant in insisting that he was in charge despite rumors of the utter chaos and confusion that has gripped the club for two months. "I am optimistic about out chances, things have gone well. I think we will have fun and do so well we'll beat Rhode Island."

Redmen "Need A Win" At UConn

By DAN KAMAL

"We have not been able to conquer adversity. We are suffering from a lack of confidence that looks like lethargy to the fans."

In those few words, UMass football coach Dick MacPherson capsuled his team's foremost problem. He continued, "We're still searching for confidence as a team. I think the main reason for the lack of confidence is that we haven't been able to come from behind. No one has been able to give us the life, to put us in the endzone when we're down."

He feels that when things are going bad some of his players try to compensate on the field by doing someone else's job, and this has made matters only worse.

MacPherson emphasized that his team is mentally ready. "The kids keep bouncing back; they need a win, and they deserve it."

The Redmen will be seeking that "needed win" tomorrow in a 1 p.m. encounter against the University of Connecticut at Storrs. Much of the result of that game will depend on whether or not the UMass defense can stop the option play which is the Huskies' forte.

"Connecticut has had its greatest success with the option play. They threw a couple of long passes to beat New Hampshire, but their 'bread and butter' is the option. We've got to stop it. We did not do well against the option last week."

On offense, MacPherson thinks that UConn quarterback Rick Robustelli will see a lot of action. Robustelli has been used mainly as a backup to Ray Tellier, but has been seeing progressively more action each week. "Mac" mentioned that, "We can expect a lot of running around with Robustelli in there."

UConn also has a balanced running attack with a speedster, and a power runner by the names of Allen and Zwig and a fine receiver in Ken Kraham.

On defense, the Huskies employ a 4-4. MacPherson lauded the UConn defense and labeled it as sound. He also mentioned that Connecticut has excellent defensive backs, and that short zone passes will probably be the most effective against them.

When UMass got trounced by Dartmouth, the question was raised concerning where the football team would go from there. It is obvious that it has gone continually downhill in a sort of snowballing effect. Can the Redman fans expect the downfall to halt? MacPherson answered the question reflectively:

"We had a goal of being number one in New England. In order to do that we had to beat everyone in New England. Now all we have left is the Yankee Conference Championship, and if we plan on winning that we cannot lose another Conference game."

Metawampe's Great Picks

In the famous last words of King Philip (the redskin, not the Frenchman) "I tried" and with this I enter again into the maze of inhumanity and cruelty known as collegiate football. Oh does the pigskin roll the wrong way for me like the clouds that roll in around my brain when it comes time to pick the best of the bunch. But a long time ago as a little Great One, I learned the value of fresh air to make the brain fresh...so to my great Grandfather Kancamagus I ventured this week and came back with the fruits of a journey spiced with the chance of a Las Vegas roulette game, with the mystery of the true identity of Gorilla Monsoon and with the perception of Jimmy the Greek....And now I trudge on in the famous last words of one football coach who said, "close ranks and move on."

The Battle Of Unbeatens, Tufts At UMass

By STEVE FERBER

Undefeated are the UMass and Tufts soccer squads, and whether or not they'll both stay that way will be decided tomorrow afternoon, as the Redmen boot off at 1:00 p.m. in quest of their sixth win of the year.

Playing their third home game in a space of eight days, the Redmen will face a Tufts team boasting a perfect 6-0-0 slate, good enough for a rating of ninth in New England. Meanwhile the Redmen held down their number five slot as a result of their weekend win over Rhode Island, and in fact UMass closed to within five points of third place Brown in New Englands' top 10.

For the second week in a row, the Redmen will play a Saturday contest against the ninth rated team, but this Tufts squad appears to be a mite stronger than URI.

Two commons opponents, Boston College and Boston University, both fared better against the Redmen, as UMass licked B.C. 3-0, and tied BU. 0-0. Tufts on the other hand, shellacked B.C. by way of 7-0, and took B.U. on the Terriers home astroturf by a 3-0 mark.

Thur Tufts looks the better team by the game of comparison scores, and judging by their four other wins, neither of those shutouts were flukes.

Worcester Poly Tech and Trinity both fell to Tufts while playing the visitor role, by 6-1 and 4-1 respectively. While away Tufts romped over Brandeis 8-1 and made Clark look little better in 6-1 fashion. Thus the Tufts' defense does not appear to be lagging far behind the Redmen's spectacular machine as they've given up a mere four goals in six games, compared to that of two goals in six for the Redmen.

As UMass prepares for game number seven, they again can boast about having received the YanCon defensive player of the week award. Dave "Whale" Oullette was this week's recipient, and as the Yankee Conference weekly soccer release stated, "Oullette was the key to the Redmen's tenacious defense that allowed only eight shots on goal in the win over URI."

John Kiah, in goal, and Lindo Alves, Mr. linemen, again received votes, and thus far Alves has been on the voting slate for all four weeks. With six goals and six assists, the senior co-captain leads the Redmen in scoring, and ranks fifth among YanCon goal scorers. Three Holy Cross linemen hold down the top spots among goal scorers as the front line of Perez, from Peru, McGovern, from Mass., and Lussier from Argentina have combined for 27 of the 37 Holy Cross scores this season.

UMass, as the fifth ranked team in the area, finds itself in a difficult position to move up in the standings, as they play only one team among the top four this season, that opposition coming in Springfield. In addition, UMass often plays against non-ranked opponents, making it equally difficult to jump up a spot or two. Thus playing against an undefeated and ranked squad gives UMass all the opportunity they need to really impress the coaches in New England, and make a move up, possibly into third place, perhaps even second.

Considering that post season play consists of four teams, the necessity to win tomorrow can not be over-emphasized as Tufts will be bringing down a squad, more than capable of toppling the Redmen, and sending them from the unbeaten ranks, right down into the pile of 6th, and 7th and 8th ranked teams in New England.

Harriers Tangle With The Cross

By JAY NESTOR

The UMass Cross Country Team faces an improved Holy Cross team, tomorrow, and it should prove to be a tough tuning up for the Conference. This is the last dual meet before the Yankee Conference Championship goes on the line, and the harriers' performance will be a good indicator of things to expect.

As in the last two dual meets, UMass will run against some fine front runners. The Crusaders feature Richard Crooke, Dennis McCormack, and Kiernan Donovan. The Redman goal will be to break up this trio.

The UMass depth will again be a factor if the Redmen hope to come out on top in this one. The strength is there, but with the championship meets looming near, Coach O'Brien is hoping for the backup men to drop their time a bit lower.

Doug O'Connell and Bill Gillin will be faced with the top man chores, and third man, Paul Segersten will be making his home town debut, and is looking for a good race.

The harriers went through a good interval workout yesterday, and look to be in fine shape at this mid-season point. Intrasquad competition will be tough this weekend with the decision to be made on who will go to the Conference and who will stay home. With the fine Redman depth, the Coach is faced with quite a decision. Therefore, this Holy Cross meet will be crucial for the individual runners as they strive to improve in order to make the cut.

The Crusaders cannot be considered light competition, however, as they have improved greatly since the beginning of the season, and are bound to produce an interesting race.

It would seem that if the Redmen can run this race like they ran against BC and Springfield, UMass will have to be considered the favorite.

The team is coming on extremely well as exemplified by the fact that they overcame both BC and Springfield. These two are certainly no pushovers, and the Redmen have opened some eyes around the New England area. It seems to be a typical UMass cross country season, with the team experiencing some early problems, and proceeding to iron them out by New England time.

To be called a typical UMass cross country team is quite an honor these days when you consider some of the teams this school has produced in the past.

The UMass freshman team is no slouch of a squad either, as they have pulled together as of the last few meets. Steve Brown will be looking for his third straight win, and his greatest competition comes from his own teammates.

The Freshmen have proved they can do the job without the services of their two top men, Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas.

"Right On To The People"

By FRANK M. BAGLIONE

It was April of 1971. A fat, squat woman settled at the speaker's podium facing a crowd of nearly half-a-million people. Her voice boomed, I mean literally boomed, out over the heads of her audience, rasping and unpleasant, much like a cannon shot which causes one to shrink his head into his shoulders as if ducking. The woman was Bella Abzug. She was speaking at one of those innumerable Peace Marches that we have all loyally trooped to each time our "leaders" beckoned for us to do so.

If the Peace Movement had a competent person in casting, Bella would not have been given the part of a speaker. Her voice, her whole appearance, is better suited for that of a hot dog or balloon hawker. Certainly you have all seen these balloons with "Peace" or "Love" written on them, like the ones sold at our recent Homecoming Parade in Amherst. That is Bella's calling, not haranguing a crowd of people who have come out to enjoy the Spring weather, or listen to the bands, or act "concerned." But the movement has always had to improvise, make do with what they had, and what they had was a fat, squat Congresswoman with a voice like a hurricane who would come out and tell the "people" where it was really at.

This is not an easy task, for the war in Southeast Asia has become a boogy-man of grotesque proportions. Five years ago Bella would have only had to mention a few things like the war was immoral, possibly even illegal, and why sacrifice American lives in such a distant and insignificant part of the world, and then waddle off the stage. But as the war grew and lingered it became the repository of blame for each every ill of our society. The war, we were told, was a stumbling block to the achievement of a poverty-less society. Because it was a means of genocide, the war had a racist nature made doubly reprehensible by the fact that we sent black men to kill yellow men. If unemployment was high, if there was inflation, if our economy was becoming weak and flabby, it was that goddamn war. What is more, the war was imperialistic, waged for the benefit of our ruling classes who were, you guessed it, the Capitalists.

So you see, Bella's task was no mean one. She had to do a complete socio-economic analysis of the war outlining its complex causes and its myriad of adverse effects on Amerika, (spelled with a k rather than a c because that's

The Follies of Youth

By David Williams

Part II

I walked along behind the little man in a daze. I had no idea where I was, let alone why I was wherever I was. Everything looked so old. Rickety-looking cars clattered down the streets, people dressed in baggy clothes walked by us, staring at us. Finally the little man stopped in front of an old brown-stone and waited for me to catch up.

"We are here," he said. "Please follow me."

I followed him into the house and up three flights of stairs to the top of the building. He stopped in front of a door at the end of a hall and bent his head for a few moments. Then he turned the handle and we went in.

The room we walked into was very dry, yet it had a faint, musty smell. When the little man lit a candle I could understand why. All around the room were huge clay pots, each with a tall green marijuana plant sticking out of it. I could not help but be impressed.

The little man paid no attention to my gaping and began to scurry around humming to himself and tending to the plants with a watering can and a little rake. I stood in the center of the room and watched in dumbfounded silence.

He finished his work and stood back to admire the bushy green plants when he remembered me.

"Oh, I am sorry," he said, "Forgive me, please."

He beckoned to a chair in the corner.

"Please have a seat and I will attend to you promptly."

I went over and sat down slowly in the thick padded chair. The little man began humming again and disappeared into another room. He was back shortly with a tray that had a teapot and two cups on it. He placed the tray on a little stool and sat down on another facing me.

"Let me welcome you," he said, "My name is A . I am a disciple of the Master, as you are. He has instructed me to watch out for you to see that you come to no harm. He is very worried about you."

I stirred a little in the chair.

"I'm not sure I completely understand," I said, "But do go on."

"Gladly," replied A . "You see, we, that is, the Master and I, have been following your progress for quite some time and it is our belief that unless we intervene, you are due to have some calamity. We cannot forsee the nature of this calamity and we do not wish to lose you so we have brought you here for safekeeping."

"Ahhh, that'a a good point," I said. "Where is 'here'?"

"'Here' is here, at least for the moment. That's really all you have to know right now. Would you like a cup?"

He began to pour two cups of tea from the squat little pot. I took one and sat watching the steam rise from the surface of the pungent brown liquid. A took timid sips from his cups and began to talk again.

"The Master is able to perceive certain waves, shall we say, that swirl around and around in space. They occasionally intersect and sometimes with disastrous results. In your case, He felt that it would be wise to remove you from your present circumstances into another situation. That is why you were brought here, forty years before your 'present'."

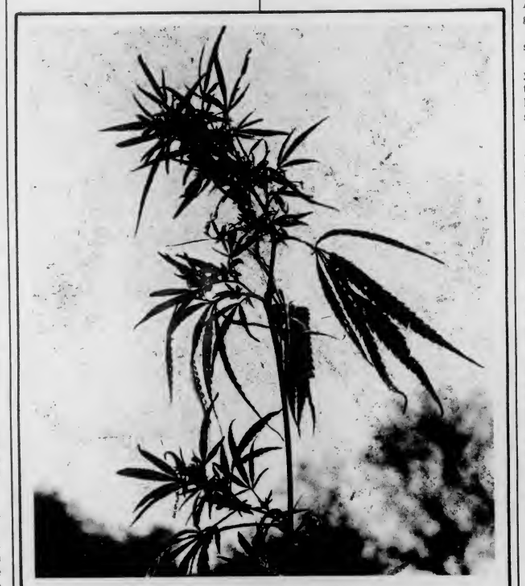
I didn't understand any of what he was saying.

"Tell me about these," I said, waving my arm at the plants.

The little man was shocked. He bent his head again for a few quick moments and then looked up.

"Tell you about them?" he said. "You don't know what they are?"

"Well, I know they're marijuana plants. But beyond that, are they supposed to signify anything?"



The little man looked like he was in pain. He began to hold his hands over his ears and wail.

"Aiyeeeeeeee...He does not know! He does not know!," he shrieked.

"Know what?," I demanded. "What the hell's this all about?"

A slowly controlled himself. He spoke with a noticeable quiver in his voice.

"Are you not one of the faithful?," he asked. "Do you not recognize the Almighty when you see him? Does He mean nothing to you?"

"Get your fingers out of my bellybutton," she snapped.

It slowly began to dawn on me what he was talking about. "You mean..." I said slowly.

"That's right," he agreed, nodding his head.

I was completely overwhelmed. I put down the tea cup and walked over to one of the plants. It was a foot taller than I was and had a stalk about an inch thick. It looked very healthy and vigorous. I stood gently stroking one of the clusters of leaves.

A got up and came over to me.

"Yes," he said softly. "The Master. He is here and He is everywhere."

"Yes," I repeated. "He is here. He is here."

I turned to face A .

"Wanna smoke some?" I said.

"Wanna smoke some?" I said. A shrugged his shoulders.

"Why not?," he said.

He leaned over and picked a small wooden box up from the tea tray. He opened it and showed me what was in it. Grass. Chopped up bright green grass. He pinched out a good-sized pinch with his thumb and forefinger and placed it in the bowl of a large brass water-pipe that stood behind one of the clay pots. He handed the hose to me.

"Your good health," he said, and touched a match to the grass.

I sucked on the pipe cautiously at first and then began to draw in a deepful lungful of smoke. It filled my lungs and seemed to go up into my head swirl around and dissolve. I handed the hose back and closed my eyes. My chest felt warm. My head was spinning slightly. I stood slightly wobbling and rocking back and forth. I began to feel things fading into nothingness when a harsh voice shocked me alert. Someone slapped me across the face.

"C'mon, you creep, wake up! Wake up!"

I was seized roughly by the shoulders and two strong arms shook me thoroughly.

"Wake up! Wake up!," the voice said again. I woke up and opened my eyes to see Fred squatting in front of me. I was back in that little room. The Mashuganishi was still slumped in front in the corner. The room reeked of boullion.

"Uhhh. Uhhh. What happened?," I groaned.

Fred and Leo both stood in front of me laughing and pointing at me. "He doesn't know what happened! He doesn't know what happened!," they chanted.

I groaned again and tried to move but I couldn't stand up. I slumped back in the chair, almost unconscious again. Fred and Leo picked the chair up by the arms and carried it to the window. I passed back into the darkness.

It was dark when I awoke again. I could see the faint outline of a curtained window and light came from beyond it. I was lying in a soft, fresh-smelling bed. I sat up and looked around me. In the dim light from the window I could see that the bed sat in a small room that had nothing else in it but a short table. On the table was a crystal glass filled with an amber liquid. I drank it and my head cleared. I felt refreshed and I sank back onto the pillow and was soon fast asleep.

First I heard a flapping noise, and then a loud snap. Instantly I was awake. A stood at the window with a sheepish grin on his face.

"So sorry to wake you," he said. "The shade got away from me."

In the morning light he looked much younger than he had in the dimness of the candle-lit room. His white robe looked very clean and he had a well-scrubbed look about him.

"What time is it?" I asked.

"It is early still," he replied. "We have much to do today. I will bring you a new robe. He disappeared out the door.

I got out of bed and went to the window. I couldn't see much. There was the street, some trees, some cars, people, and a few more buildings. It had a much different look than it had the night before.

A came back in the room with the white robe.

"Here," he said. "You must wear this. We have much important business to attend to today. You may bathe first. Follow me."

He led me up onto the roof where a small square wooden stall sat. For water there was a barrel of rain water perched on stilts. I stood in the stall and pulled a string and the cool water poured over me. Then I rubbed myself dry with a thick towel and put on the robe. I felt somehow radiant. The pure white of the robe reflected the early morning sunlight and I stood on the roof and let the wind lift the robe out and squinted my eyes against the glare.

I heard A laughing behind me.

"Now you are truly one of us," he said. "You have broken the last bonds and are now one of us, who are one with the Master."

"Yes, A ," I said. "I am free."

"Ahh, maybe so. But we still have work to do. Come, we will get down to business."

He led me back down from the roof and into the room with the plants. They looked much greener than before. A began to rummage around in a large trunk that stood against the wall. He pulled out two little white bags, peered into the trunk for a second as if trying to make up his mind about something, then snapped out of his reverie and shut the trunk.

He turned to me and held out one of the little white bags. I took it. It was not-too-light, not-too-heavy. There was something crunchy in it.

"Grass?" I asked him, shaking the bag a little.

He was adjusting his robe.

"That's right," he said. He looked up at me with a big grin.

"Well, are you ready to go?"

"I sure am," I said.

"Let's go then," he said, and led me out of the room, down the stairs and onto the street.

cute). She stood up there for twenty minutes wearing a ridiculous hat much like the ones worn by Venceremos Brigade volunteers cutting sugar cane for Fidel under a hot Cuban sun, and rattled off the now familiar rhetoric with its constant catalogue--Chicanos, blacks, Puerto Ricans, women, Indians, the poor and the Eskimo--of the oppressed who would no longer be oppressed if only this tenacious war would end.

Bella gave an excellent speech, if one judges consistent stupidity to be in the realm of excellence. She had to remain silent on Soviet Jewry and the Middle East because, after all, our black brothers were supporting the Palestinians and they in turn are being subsidized by the Soviets. Other than that, though, it got in all the evils. Then Bella blew it. At the end she cocked her stubby head, raised a weak fist, and mimicing the Panther salute said, "Right on to the people!" No! No. Bella. You must have heard it a thousand times at Panther rallies. It's "Power to the People!" They use it at the beginning and end of all their speeches, it's like "Aloha," it means hello and goodbye.

It was all very embarrassing. What a demonstration. First those veterans running around on the capital steps with plastic rifles like someone who has gone completely out of his head, and then the pitiful sight of those men strewing medals all over Washington. The congressmen slipping out of the capital to talk to the boys, like Bob Hope visiting the troops. Then Bella and a host of dull speakers. And it was not yet over. Waiting in the wings was the act of King and Abernathy.

Coretta King was at the podium. Now here is a congresswoman. She looks tall, slender, she had poise, dignity. If only she hadn't gotten so carried away with her speech. But her's was a difficult task, also. She wanted to talk about Martin and the problems of the black man, but the crowd was here to hear about war, so she kept saying nonsense like, "If we don't stop them in Asia, the next thing they'll be invading Africa, and then they'll be invading South America, and then they'll be coming over invading here." My God, Coretta, who? Who is globe trotting back and forth across the planet? They? They are? Just who is supposed to be paranoid around here, the anti-pinkos or us?

Ralph Abernathy is on next. Ralph is the guy who couldn't fill Martin Luther's shoes as head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference. Still everyone likes Ralph, he's so harmless. Now and again he will drag some poor people down to Washington and try to get someone to pay attention to them. But no one has time. Jesus, man, there's a war going on. Ralph, too, is trying to incorporate his hustle into the festivities; the result is a garbled speech. There is one high point, however. Somewhere near the end Ralph lets out the chant, "One, two, three, four,...(short pause) Hell, no we won't go." What happened? I thought the clincher was "we don't want your fuckin' war." What's this "we won't go" business; I thought that came after something else, or does it stand alone? Does anyone know the chants? Correctly? It is almost as if Ralph lept off with the "One, two, three, four," and then, thinking what came next, said to himself, "I can't say 'fucking war', I'm a Reverend. "Hell,' I can say," and so he finishes off with the "Hell, no we won't go." It was all very, very embarrassing.

With a history like this it is no wonder that people are drifting away from the movement. Ever since the Socialist Workers Party captured the national leadership of the movement we have been humiliated to tears. They got us into the fascist, imperialist, capitalist lackey running dog of working class exploiters syndrome, like you read in the Peking Review with its obsequious prattle about "our beloved father/demi-god Chairman Mao."

But then, we courted it, didn't we? We bought the balloons with "Peace" written on them; we bought the checks from our local bank with the peace symbol in a variety of colors printed across the section that says, "pay to the order of"; we ate up the patches with that sacred peace symbol on them at a dollar a piece; we jived to those crass bumble-gum songs like "Bring the Boys Home." Look what happen to Pete Seeger, A man of questionable talent at best stood at the April, 1971 Peace March waiting for the speeches to end so he could make a musical ass of himself. What was that song? "Insubordination." In-sub-or-din-a-tion. That was half the lyrics; the other half sounded like some 1912 WWI fight song. Look what we've done to Pete Seeger.

It is no wonder that people shy away from involvement in the Peace Movement now. It's too embarrassing, too demeaning to the very cause it represents. Our October teach-in fell flat on its face. YSA and the Mobe could have held the whole thing on a bench outside the Student Union. The march on Boston may attract more, after all, it's a chance to visit home. Another March on Washington might bring out the devoted, if they can get some big name entertainers--Elton Jonn, Roger Daltrey, Robert Planet, all the jive cats. But for the most part people are going to let their legislature handle the problem. The war is becoming less lethal, the elections are very close, and there are carnivals, amusement parks and concerts closer than Washington.

Besides, it is all so mortifying. Like most of the movements sweeping our country today, the Peace Movement began as a sane and deeply felt protest against a policy some felt was wrong. Its spokesmen were intelligent, articulate, confident people who are able to focus the nation's attention on the war and their point of view. Today the movement is run by a host of mediocre, shrill and morally arrogant ideologues who have made a travesty of the cause. The people in the many different movements bred in the sixties, once so sure of success, so confident that history was on their side, have had their hopes dashed. America, with its great sponge-like ability, has been able to absorb much of the protest, the movements, the discontents, leaving those who wish to defy her still outside the society to do their embarrassing little dance of death.

"The war is becoming less lethal, the elections are very close, and there are carnivals, amusement parks, and concerts closer than Washington."

Newley Musical Opens This Thursday

Theatre in the round is something new for the University of Massachusetts Music Theatre, but that is how their production of the Newley-Bricusses musical Stop the World, I Want to Get Off is being staged. In fact, for this production, directed by Judith Anderson, the Music Theatre is going all out to create a unique cabaret style atmosphere. Guests will be seated at tables on elevated platforms around the complete circumference of the stage, which is on the floor. Before the show begins, alcoholic beverages will be available (Top of the Campus I.D. not required), and vendors in costumes continuing the circus-fun theme will be selling popcorn, peanuts, candy apples, Italian pastries and other such goodies. The set is done in bright, carnival colors and this motif will be carried out in all aspects of the production.

The story is that of Littlechap (played by Frank Anderson) who finds himself in the position of having to marry the boss's daughter, Evie (Stephanie Schloss). She presents him with two daughters in rapid succession, but they have no son. While his home situation grows steadily worse, Littlechap finds himself ascending rapidly in the business and political worlds. So much does he become involved in other affairs, that he has no time left for his family. When he finally comes to a realization of things as they stand, he sees he has left behind him the best years of his life and a family who could have given him all that he has always lacked.

"What Kind of Fool Of Me" sings Frank Anderson as Littlechap in STOP THE WORLD—I WANT TO GET OFF, the Music Theater Production which opens next Thursday evening.

Much of the actionof the play is communicated through pantomime. The paontomime, a difficult technique to use well, is very effective and tells us much that ordinary language could not.

The ensemble-type chorus is an intrinsic part of the performance, functioning as busses, machines, tourists and other such things, which though it may sound a little strange, actually adds much to the performance. It helps to create an atmosphere which one may believe and accept within the context of the theatre while at the same time allowing for objectivity on the part of the viewer and a grasping of the central message.

Well known songs from Stop the World include: "Gonna Build a Mountain," "Once in a Lifetime," and "What Kind of Fool Am I?"

Performances will be in the Campus Center Auditorium on October 28 at 8:45 p.m. and October 29 and 30 at 7:45 and 10:45 p.m. The doors will open forty-five minutes before the start of the show at which time alcoholic drinks will be served. There will also be a twenty minute intermission during which the bar will re-open.

Tickets are available now through the Fine Arts Council box office in 125 Herter Hall, or by calling 545-0202 between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. Prices are $1.00 for UMass students and $1.50 for all others. Remaining tickets will be sold at the door.

An Expression Of Black Spirit

TAKE TWO

What Has Been Happening At Uncle Sam's House? By Nathaniel W. Hayden

When I was eight years old, I started asking momma what's been going on at Uncle Sam's house. She kept telling me that I would understand when I got older. When I was in elementary and then again when I was in high school, it seemed as if everybody knew what old Uncle Sam was up to except me. I remember taking a course when I was in high school in which the teacher told us how Uncle Sam's house was built and how he fought to keep it. The thing I don't understand is why he kept a lot of the people who helped build the house and helped him make sure nobody took it from him locked up in his backyard for so long. I realize that when cousin Eli built his special machine to exploit the garden around Uncle Sam's house he needed some people to help out. The thing I don't understand is why Uncle Sam had all of those people dragged into his house from other houses to work for him.

I don't know why Uncle Sam does so many funny and stupid things. I know I should respect him but some times it's hard not to laugh about him or think that he is stupid. In school and at home, I learned not to take anybody else's property. I asked my momma how she could expect me not to take something that belongs to somebody else when even Uncle Sam got his property by chasing people away. She always gave me a silly answer. She said the people Uncle Sam chased away did not know how to take care of the property they had. So Uncle Sam claimed it so he could build on it.

Have you taken a look at the outside of Uncle Sam's house? Do you see how his gardens look? The house itself is old and cracked. If you go into what used to be the family room, where everyone used to come together, the only thing you'll see is decay. The only nice looking thing in Uncle Sam's house is the porch. The porch is all new! The trouble with the porch is that Uncle Sam doesn't let the people who helped him build and protect his house go there. He say's it's because they are dirty, lazy and stupid. They're only allowed in the family room. That's strange though. He let's those people go into his kitchen and help with the meals. He also let's them take care of my little cousins Dick and Jane. That's something else I'm wondering about. Why is it that when Dick and Jane go to school, they can't go with the dark people's children? All the time Uncle Sam says it's because they are so stupid. I don't think they are. Anybody who can survive on the sickly diet and Uncle Sam has had them on for years and years can't be that stupid. Anybody who can survive living in the family room, without any hot water and without having it painted for years is not so stupid.

Uncle Sam worries me a lot. He likes to fight so much. Or I should say he likes to make people fight for him. He spends a big chunk of his pay check on ammunition. He's been fighting a family that lives across the street from him for at least eight years. The police don't try to stop Uncle Sam. Even though whenever I go over to his house he offers me some mouthwash, tooth paste, deodorant, foot spray and hair spray. I never really gave that much thought until just now.

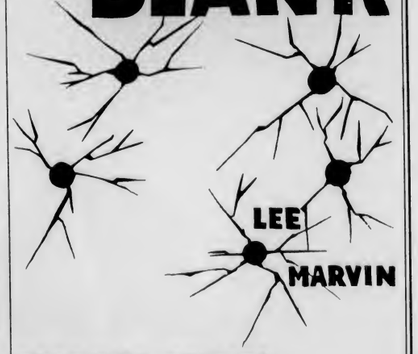
In high school, I also learned from the Declaration of Independence that all men are created equal. When I asked Uncle Sam about the fact that he didn't treat the dark people who live in his house as if they were equal, he said, "Of course not. They are not men." I don't know why he says that. They sure look like, talk like and act like men. The only difference I can see is that they are a lot darker than most people. Then Uncle Sam said that they didn't feel anything. He said they never feel sorry if they do something bad. He even said that they don't cry. I know for a fact that they do at least cry. I saw one of those dark ladies crying yesterday when her little hair dryer was repossessed. The man said it was because she didn't pay her installment fee the last three months. I guess it's because she isn't getting paid enough by Uncle Sam. Uncle Sam says she never has enough money because she doesn't save any. I'm wondering though, how can she save any money when he charges her so much for everything in the house that she eats or drinks. How can she save any money when her rent is so high. That's a really strange thing. He says he charges her a high rent because she doesn't know how to take care of her part of the house. He knows very well that that family room he forces the dark people to live in is inadequate. It's really a strange thing to drag people into your house, make them work for you and then charge rent for the use of the hole they are forced to stay in.

I'm getting older, however. Slowly, but surely, I'm beginning to understand my Uncle Sam. I'm beginning to see why he oppresses people. The answer I have been searching for is this:

My Uncle Sam is a pimp. He lives off the sweat of not only the dark people in his home but also of the dark people in the neighboring homes. He was very successful until the Indo Family decided that they were no longer going to allow him to decide for them what their fate would be. This is the family I was talking about before. Uncle Sam has been feuding with that family for at least ten years. Can you imagine what the fight has been about? Uncle Sam is part of a group that wants to have small stores and schools all over town while there is another group that wants to set up one huge shopping area and one gigantic educational center. Uncle Sam says it is better to keep every section of the town distinct. The Indo Family has decided to join the people who want to have the big centers, even though Uncle Sam strongly urged them not to do so. He threatened to start throwing sticks, racks, and whatever else he could get his hands on at their house if they joined the Big Centers Committee. They said they would join it anyway and that it was none of Uncle Sam's business what kind of group or organization they belonged to. Uncle Sam retorted that he was looking out for their interests. Uncle Ho, the head of the Indo family, said that Uncle Sam should worry instead about the people in his part of town, especially the dark people in his own house. Uncle Sam refused to do that though. He said since their choice would tip the balance in the town to the side of the Big Center supporters, he could not allow it. Not only did he say that, he also said only the small town stores would be sufficient.

The puzzling thing about Uncle Sam's feelings concerning having big centers or small stores and schools is this: If his ideas are best, why does he constantly try to impose them on other people? Wouldn't they naturally be attracted to that which is good? Uncle Sam says that the Indo family is ignorant of what is right, therefore it is up to him to show them that his ideas are right. It's amazing. He used the same rationale for dragging the dark people into his house. He said that they were beasts, and should be treated as such. Since the dark people come from what is called the primitive section of town, he felt justified in making better use of them. He said that the people in the primitive section of town didn't even have enough sense to buy firearms to defend themselves. He says that they just try to use long knives if someone attacks them. So Uncle Sam just took some shotguns over there and forced a lot of the people to go to his house with him.

Soon I too will have to throw stones at the Indo Family's home. I don't want to, but if I don't, I'll be thrown out of the house. I wish this inane feuding would end but Uncle Sam says that he won't stop it until the Indo's give up and support the idea of having small shops and schools. I have a suspicion that the fight will go on until Uncle Sam has run out of young relatives to fight for him. Don't get me wrong though. I really love my Uncle Sam. Even if he does want me to die for a foolish whim, he's really a great guy. Anyone who lets my mom and dad live on his nice, brand new porch has got to be good. Or so mom and dad say. Anyone who will save us from the dark people has got to be good. You see, now that it is almost time for me to join Uncle Sam's War Brigade I can see clearly that he is right and all others are wrong. Uncle Sam's way is the only way. It is up to us, his nephews to show to those who, as of yet have not seen the way, which road is the right one. You may wonder why this sudden change in my attitude. I'll tell you. First of all, I'm beginning to remember more and more about what I learned in high school. I remember that I learned that if Uncle Sam had not dragged the dark people from their section of town to ours, they would have eventually perished from a disease such as malaria, yellow fever, etc. Does it really matter that a number of them were killed when they fell off the boat coming over? I neglected to mention that the town is separated by several lakes.



I INTERRUPT THIS STORY TO BRING YOU A SPECIAL BULLETIN:

Uncle Sam died this morning of cancer, the cancer of hatred. Death came slowly over a period of years. Although doctors diagnosed his illness as cancer years ago, he ignored it as long as possible. Uncle Sam will be buried.....(?)

I am so disturbed about Uncle Sam's untimely death that I must conclude this story.

Lightning Hopkins Reviewed

By MIKE McCORMICK

Sam Hopkins was born in Centerville, Texas on March 15, 1912. He worked in the fields of Central East Texas, supplementing his income with money he earned as a street singer. In 1946 a business-women from Aladdin records, Mrs. Cullum, persuaded Hopkins to go with her to Holywood to record. While at this recording session an Aladdin A&R man gave Sam the nickname "Lightning" because of Sam's fast finger work on a tune called "Rocky Mountain." After a few unsuccessful records Lightning had a hit with "Katy May." Lightning followed this up with more hit records, including "Baby Please Don't Go." His fame quickly spread, first throughout Texas, then throughout the rest of the country. Now Lightning Hopkins is a household name wherever American Negro folk blues are discussed.

On Friday October 15, Lightning appeared in the Boston area, for the first time in several years. A thunderous ovation greeted Lightning when he strode onto the stage. As the blues legend launched into his first number, "Trouble In Mind," it became instantly evident why Lightning is considered by many to be one of the greatest bluesmen of all time.

Lightning's music is only a portion of his live performance. During the course of a concert Lightning's storytelling ability comes to the fore often, as Lightning uses anecdotes to introduce several of his songs. Between and during songs Lightning entertains with numerous humorous quips. When Lightning does get down to his music he isn't content to just sit and play. His mannerisms are just as flashy as his nickname.

His music? As is the case with most blues musicians, Lightning's music is much more satisfying in person. In "Lightning's Boogie," Lightning cut loose and showed the dazzling speed and technique which earned him his nickname. In several songs Lightning struck unexpectedly with the fluent runs which are his trademark. And of course, Lightning threw in an ample number of slow, piercing, guitar lines for good measure.

Lightning Hopkins is available on dozens of albums. Several Lightning albums are available on the Tradition label for only $2.98! My favorite Tradition album, Autobiography in Blues, contains many great cuts including "Trouble in Mind" and a hilarious "Get Off My Toe." The Listening Post in Amherst stocks his excellent Arhoolie albums, the best of these being Early Recordings Volume 1. One may get an inkling of his live act on several live albums including Lightning Hopkins in New York, a re-release on Barnaby, and on one of the albums of Verve's three-record set entitled the Blues Box. Liberty's King of Dowling Street is excellent. Many of Lightning's more recent recordings, including the one's on Jewel, are not up to the excellence of Lightning's earlier recordings. On many of these more recent sides Lightning is surrounded by a band. In general Lightning's best work was done in the late 40's and early 50's.

LEON RUSSELL AND THE SHELTER PEOPLE - LEON RUSSELL (SHELTER RECORDS)

The force of charisma is influential in any activity that involves people relating to each other. We have a tendency to think more of someone if he seems to fit preconceived expectations or if he radiates some appealing characteristics. We can form an identification with the subject more easily and develope a sense of involvement more readily. In other words, if someone looks the part, we assume that he is everything he claims to be.

Leon Russell looks like a rock star should- super-hip, highly proficient, and perpetually stoned. The one thing he has going for him, more than anything else, is his charisma. In "Mad Dogs and Englishmen", the Joe Cocker movie, Russell's presence was no less than incredible. And at the recent Bangla Desh concert in Madison Square Garden, Russell looked right at home among the likes of Bob Dylan and George Harrison.

But judging from this album, it is a blatant truism to say that Russell is definitely in the wrong place. There is nothing on this album that gives even the slightest hint as to how he ended up in the big leagues of rock. I hear nothing spectacular as far as his piano playing goes. He doesn't have the fluidity of Stevie Winwood or the professionalism of Al Kooper. Nor does he possess the brilliance of Nicky Hopkins or the dynamics of Elton John. And his songwriting doesn't impress me as anything other than mediocre. If Leon Russell expects to be a superstar, he's going to have to start making music like one.

Side one offers little. "Stranger in a Strange Land" is the best of the side. It's a likeable song with some good lyrics. Theoretically, it would set the pace for a great album. The only place Russell can go after this is down- and he does. "Of Thee I Sing" and "Crystal Closet Queen" sound like Delaney & Bonnie outtakes. And that's not saying much, considering the colorless music that they play. "Alcatraz" features two lead guitars with some nice licks, but little more. "Home Sweet Oklahoma" has a chorus that totally destroys what was, up until then, a pretty good song.

Of the two Dylan songs that he does, "It Take a Lot to Laugh, It Takes a Train to Cry" manages to come off with some signity- probably because it is a good song to start off with. "It's A Hard Rain Gonna Fall" sounds like mere filler. Dylan would roll over in his grave if he were dead. Russell plays a good honky-tonk piano as "Train" and the Dylan single "Watching the River Flow" demonstrates. "She Smiles Like a River" is the obligatory country song that "every self-respecting superstar" must have on his album. What shit.

"Sweet Emily" is a bouncy little ditty dedicated to a woman in the Russell caravan of friends and performers. It emerges a winner among the rubble. Harrison purists probably won't like Russell's cover of "Beware of Darkness". It is an up-tempo version with some jazzy piano and, what sounds like a sitar. It has a tendency to improve listenings.

The remaining cut is "The Ballad of Mad Dogs and Englishmen", the theme song to the Cocker flick. It oozes over with strings and fails miserably. Russell's vocal reminds me of Alfalfa of the old Little Rascals movies. All he is missing is a cowlick.

Yup, Leon sure does look flashy up there on stage, but he has yet to prove himself where it counts- with music. Every so often on this album there is a hint of excellence, but it is, unfortunately, few and far between. It will have to take more than this to convince me that Leon Russell is not just another pretty face.

An Impressive Latecomer

By STEVE FELD

IT AIN'T EASY - JOHN BALDRY (Warner Bros. Records)

If any of you watched "Shindig" while it was in its heyday, you'll probably be familiar with John Baldry. He was that tall blues singer usually sandwiched in between Boby Sherman and a commercial for Stridex Medicated Pimple Pads. And, if you were like myself, he probably bored you to hell. Even worse than the Righteous Brothers. And the Shindogs. Therefore, after "Shindig" shinned its last dig, Baldry's voice fell silent upon our ears.

English blues star John Baldry (center) appears with Ron Wood and Rod Stewart—all of whom perform on the new Warner Brothers recording "It Ain't Easy."

What he did between then and now you can read in the liner notes. (Yes!! An album with liner notes!) The important thing is that he made this album and is once again back with us. Maybe he was ahead of his time, or maybe we were behind ours, because he sure does sound different.

How did he do it? Simple. He got old friend Rod Stewart to produce Side One and old friend Elton John to produce Side Two. With friends like that you can't miss. Especially if you are John Baldry.

The presence of Stewart and John are unmistakable. The two sides of the record are separate and distinct. The choice of songs are good, Baldry really gets off. Stewart brings out the blues singer in him beautifully. The opening cut is called "Don't Lay No Boogie-Woogie On The King of Rock and Roll". It starts off with a spoken introduction about how he got busted for playing his music and disturbing the peace. He gets off with a warning, and breaks into a wild boogie that makes it almost impossible to sit down. "Black Girl" has Baldry trying his hand with some Black blues. It's a Huddie Ledbetter song with song great vocals by Baldry and a black chick named Maggie Bell. "I'm Ready" is a Willie Dixon song that is a pure delight. Tuli Kupferberg of the Fugs is represented by "Morning, Morning", a song he penned. It features some nice blending of guitar and voice. And "It Ain't Easy" has Miss Bell again with some bitchy blues singing.

All these songs could have just as easily been on a Rod Stewart solo album. Which is probably why he didn't contribute to the album on vocals. Here is a good hybrid between Stewart and Baldry, but Baldry, of course, dominates. He's got a strong, guttsy voice which is capable of generating a lot of excitement.

Side Two has a lot in common with Elton John's "Tumbleweed Connection". Along with the piano of Elton, there is guitarist Caleb Quaye, drummer Roger Pope and others from the "Tumbleweed" sessions. Everything said about Stewart also goes for John. This album will appeal to die-hard Elton John freaks as well as Rod Stewart fans. It makes for good exposure for Baldry. A friend in need...

"Let's Burn Down the Cornfield" is a slick cut. It has Baldry as the boogie man, singing low and mean. The guitars whine in the background and Elton's pianois smooth. Lesley Duncan, of "Love Song" fame (again "Tumbleweed Connection") wrote the next song, "Mr. Rubin". It's the weakest cut on the album and its inclusion remains a mystery to me. It's the closest thing to a ballad, which seems to be Baldry's weak point. "Rock Me When He's Gone" is a John-Taupin composition and it put things back in place. It is not unlike "Ballad of a Well-Known Gun". The set closes, oddly enough, with a Rod Stewart and the Small Faces' song "Flying". There was no way that this one could miss. If ever Baldry, Stewart and John ever formed a group, it would sound a lot like this.

It will be interesting to see where John Baldry goes from here. There is no doubt that this album would be considerably less if not for the presence of Rod Stewart and Elton John. Whether or not Baldry will let us down when he finally goes on his own remains to be seen.

The Empress Of Blues

By KENNETH SULIN

"The Empress; Bessie Smith; Columbia (two record set)

"The Empress"; Bessie Smith; Columbia (two record set)

The blues of today have developed in considerable amounts but by no means near a comparison with the performances of one Miss Bessie Smith.

From Chattanooga, Tennessee Bessie Smith started mainly as a singer and as with most, her talent was virtually unnoticed at first. She had trouble coming up with any type of backinggroup that would do her justice but finally another unknown of the time crossed paths with her and the blues were finding a beginning. This other unknown went by the name of Louis Armstrong.

She joined forces with Armstrong and later other followers of the Black blues began recording with her; Buster Baily, Fred Longshaw and Fletcher Henderson along with Henderson's Hot Six just to mention a few.

The music they produced was pure, refined, old time blues with Bessie on the vocals. Her voice can be described as clear, crisp, lively and fresh, occasionally hinting a touch of sarcasm however; cute, trite and snappy at times. The backing music is something in itself. Armstrong on his cornet, Henderson's piano along with the clarinet of Buster Baily set the stage for just what one would expect from the music of the twenties. If you can imagine the things your grandparents listened to on the old gramophone, jogging, rag-time yet lazy blues, you could identify the style found on this album.

Columbia Records have now released this, the fourth of a series of five two-record sets portraying Miss Smith in a semi-chronological order. With "The Empress' come recordings covering the year 1924- 1928, probably displaying Bessie at the peak of her musical career. The finest of her 160 recorded songs can very well be found here and through this album alone, her progression is readily noticed.

The album has been produced and engineered well. No gimmicks have been used to enhance the sound, no overtracking, no echo, just pure, original sound. The tapes these songs have been taken from were processed only to eliminate surface noise, otherwise the compositions remained as they were.

Side one is a slow and acoustical with sleepy clarinets and quiet dance band type piano. Bessie's voice is mellow and calm but also perfectly clear. Black blues can be found here at its best with strong female vocals. On "Sinful Blues" could that be Bessie playing a kazoo?

Side two continues the same way but, after the third cut a complete change to electric occurs. The pace is accelerated and signs of the traditional raspy blues can be detected in her voice. Bouncy, vibrating, perfectly professional tunes make up the remaining two sides.

Bessie's voice mingles with the cornet and it seems as though each instrumental break was talking to her during the pause. Her excellence particularly comes out on one tract entitled "There'll be Be A Hot Time In Old Town Tonight" while the whole time she becomes overly enthusiastic with her work. She loved to perform and enjoyed putting all her feeling into each song. One short little story sums up Bessie's desire for show business:

At a party she was confronted by a drunk and without record thoughts, knocked him to the floor. Later in the night she walked home only to be seriously stabbed by her evening's victim. She was rushed to a hospital and treated, but upon the doctor's suggestion she was to remain in bed for three days. Bessie had other plans and ten hours later she was performing a concert for a most appreciative audience.

The album, with its megaphone sounding tunes, presents Bessie at her best. The woman most well-known for her contributions to the Dixieland blues can well be called "The Empress."

Start rollin' them bones and listen to me"

An Introduction To Turntables

SPUN By FRANK JOHNSON

Now that we know how to convert groove modulations into electric current, we can refer to what keeps the record in motion: the turntable.

Actually, the term "turntable" is twofold. A "manual" turntable is one which is not equipped to change records. For changing purposes, we need an "automatic" turntable, known previously simply as a "changer". Although the last two terms have become interchangeable (pun intended), we can establish a qualitative difference between them and refer to an "automatic" turntable as a record-changing device of comparable quality to a manual, and a "changer" falling short of the design excellence of an automatic.

We should note that a complete manual turntable actually consists of several different components. The center of the unit is the platter, which supports the record and centers it by means of a projection in the center, called a spindle. The cartridge is located in the tone arm (more of which later) which lies to the right of the platter and traverses across it so that the stylus may thus follow the record grooves. The platter is kept in motion by an electric motor, which may take form in many different designs.

It is this range of design difference which allows us to distinguish different turntable types. First off is the difference in basic drive systems which turn the platter. The motor's tractive force must in some way be coupled to the platter so that it can spin. This can be accomplished in 3 basic ways. The motor may be directly connected to the platter, or it can be coupled by means of a belt or else by a pulley and an idling wheel in tandem. The first system, known as "direct drive", is rarely encountered because it requires a very powerful motor with virtually perfect performance. The second method is called belt drive, and it is to dampen motor vibrations and also have a very large contact surface with the platter. The last system, although inferior in performance to the other two, is nevertheless the most common, because motor design is not so critical. It can be called "pulley drive" for simplicity, and its popularity stems from the fact that it lends itself very nicely to changers. The idler wheel can simply be changed on a different size pulley to get a different speed, making for convenience from both the user's and the manufacturer's point of view. Because motor design is not so critical, an inexpensive motor may be used, as well as a light platter. This is not to say that this design is found only on cheap equipment- on the contrary, some of the finest automatic turntables have it. But, because a manual turntable will rarely embody its design, and these types are usually of very high quality, it is standard for changers.

The Miracord 770H, a turntable which features a Papst hysteris synchronous moter; external stylus overhan adjustment; balanced turntable and cueing in both automatic and manual modes. Also an adjustable head which sets cartridge to a precise 15 degree angle.

Not only is the drive method a means of distinguishing manual turntables from changers, but the motor employed is another means. An electric motor that is driven by electromagnetic force dependent on the voltage is called an induction motor. It is to be distinguished from a synchronous motor, which is designed to run according to the AC power frequency of 60 Hz/sec. irrespective of voltage. Each of these two two types has an advantage to suit its intended use. The induction type is slightly more common, because of its simplicity and its high torque characteristic. This makes it suitable for changers, which need the extra power to drive the changing mechanism. The synchronous motor lacks this power but it makes up for this deficiency due to its very quiet operation and complete immunity to speed variation due to voltage changes, because it is not driven by voltage. Synchronous motors thus find themselves mostly on manual turntables, where quiet, exact operation is required: There have been some recent developments combining the best characteristics of both types into one, but for our purposes here these generalizations are still valid.

When we play a record, we want the cartridge to pick up only what is on the record and nothing else. Unfortunately, this may not always be the case. The supporting platter rides on a set of bearing to reduce friction, which all generate some low-frequency noise to some degree. This low-frequency noise, which presents a problem in hi-fi systems having extended bass response, is aptly called rumble. It is one of the most annoying problems in a turntable; all turntables have it to some degree, but it can be minimized to inaudible degrees by designing good bearings and also machining frictional surfaces to fine tolerances.

But freedom from rumble is not enough. The record must also revolve at the exact speed at which it was made. Here again, many turntables have a problem turning a disc at this exact speed. Many suffer from a simple pitch inaccuracy, which will revolve just slightly faster or slower than true speed. This tends to bother just those very few of us that have perfect pitch, but it is surprising how many fine-quality turntables do not revolve at exact speed.

Speed problems become serious when they actually interfere with a record being played so as to introduce distortion. Because a motor is not exactly perfect, it will speed up and slow down intermittently due to internal friction. If this is transmitted to the record, it will be heard either as "flutter", a rapid variation in speed, or "wow", a slow variation in speed. one of the most sensitive instruments to these speed variations is the piano, especially when sustained notes are being played. Flutter will appear as an objectional "sour" quality, and wow will make the piano sound as it if were occasionally out of tune. Both speed variations can be minimized with the belt drive system, and they can also be reduced by having a heavy platter, which has greater mass acting as inertia to smooth out any speed variations. Wow, incidentally, can be more of a problem with records than with the devices that play them, because a record with an off-center hole or a pronounced warp will frequently have more inherent wow than the turntable playing it. (ref.: the earlier Dynaflex article)

Now that our platter is spinning at perfect speed with little or no distortion, we'll take a look at another contributor to the sound system, the tone arm, in the next issue.

"The Devils" Rehashed: Spiritual Body Surfing

By F. JEFFREY TRUBISZ

Kenneth Russell has concocted a study of the grotesque of such diabolical intensity that one cannot think of the film as a standard cinematic experience. One does not view "The Devils", one is assaulted by it, kept ill at ease, repeatedly shocked and ultimately bludgeoned by its twisted energy. The director sustains a tension which relies on depictions of brutality that are incredibly graphic and then underlines the effect with an atmosphere of perversity so extensively constructed that one is never relieved from the emotional pitch. And the film is utterly void of spiritual foundations that could give respite, imposing its visions with such strength that one is continually coping with its insinuations.

The root of the experience is the depiction of madness through cinematic dynamism, a message that Russell slams away with the force of an exorcist's sledge-hammer. Unfortunately, an equivalent subtlety is never constructed. There are no balancing counterpoints in the use of setting, decor, costuming, and characterization which could have provided respite in softening the film's tone in order to intensify its effects. The film ultimately becomes that which it is depicting: a tour of excess. One might argue for the validity of such a technique in depicting a situation void of any rational restraint but nevertheless, madness is a theme susceptible to artistic inquisition. Russell becomes possessed with the spirit of his created monstrosity, glutting the screen with a tour of cinematic egotism that is decidely reprehensible at times. However, it would be a mistake to resort to wholesale condemnations, a stance which the film may invite with its subverted nature, without acknowledging the depths of its dimensions. The raw energy of "The Devils" is the latest example of the experiential power that is inherant to the cinema. While there are obvious flaws, the vigor of the film is undeniably irresistible.

The cinematography of the film is top rate at times, reminding one of Russell's virtuosity in "Women in Love" in which Victorian gardens breathed with an animacy that rivaled that of the characters. The initial fantasy sequence of the demented nun is a fine example of the use of slow motion to create a dream-like effect. Grandier glides across the surface of the lake with a phantom's perverted grace. And the dream is effectively subverted into nightmare as a series of rapid cuts reveals the nun's deformity. The second fantasy is equally well done as the director switches to black and white for a contorted depiction of the Crucifixion.

It is lamentable that the blundering pace of the film forces some viewers to tune out their sensibilities as response to (or preparation for) the execution of Grandier. The final two scenes are probably the best of the film. While the carnival atmosphere at the burning is a heavy handed irony, it is rather unavoidable within the context of public executions. The sight of Grandier's shaven countenance provides a righteous shock, however, gearing one with uneasy anticipation of his death. What final atrocity will the director visualize to complete the film? The camera switches point of view during the immolation as the viewer becomes one with Grandier, gazing out at a swirl of faces bordered by flames. The implication of our own victimization is quite obvious, only a few frames reveal his blistering face as seen from the crowds while the duration of the sequence is a slow spiral of flames and smoke. The director is visualizing an interpretative nature of the film that is easily apparent: we are the victims of his visual onslaught and are experiencing the final catharsis along with the contextual victim. The notion of purification is then conveyed in the film's beautiful denoument, a screen drain or white-out. The final scene juxtaposes itself against the rest of the film, the anonymous pale of the landscape countering the garishness of detail. The color is incredibly sterile lending a waste land effect that is most powerful. Finally, the whole sequence is rooted in silence, a most effective sound image and certainly the most fitting way to cinematize the film's spent energy.

It is unfortunate that the editing of the film is so incredibly botched. None of the intermediary scenes are toned down enough to counter the tension. Russell deluges the frame with color, cluttered settings, and a profusion of objects that are too blatant in their insinuation of madness. The contemporaneous costuming certainly doesn't help with little irritations such as black lipstick adding to the general glut. Incidental scenes are bungled such as a dinner conversation between Grandier and his wife whose conversation proceeds with the vocabulary and tempo one might encounter in a rhetorical debate.

Oliver Reed's characterization is consistently sensual as he lends a prescence which heightens more than calms the mood of the film. While contributing his own brand of dynamism, Reed does not successfully convey any softness with which to counter his stature and broaden the role. One cannot think of Grandier as anything more than a little less depraved than his peers. Attempts are made to ennoble and sanctify him in the middle of the film but Reed does not possess the range to carry it off (nor does Russell provide him an adequate opportunity evidence). Vanessa Redgrave displays further proof of her remarkable virtuosity as an actress in the difficult role of the hysterical nun. Her madness is quite chilling and provides another focus of energy that somewhat tempers the hulking energy of Reed.

Russell's energetic style can be remarkably animating as evidenced in "Women in Love" which is more evenly paced, constructing and observing an atmosphere rather than imposing it. Interestingly, it was criticized for not sustaining itself to the end, the sequences of the couples in Switzerland were mired when compared with the even rapidity of the first half of the film. The two films are an interesting study of the basic polarities of the human spirit, Kenneth Russell is undoubtedly an artist with innovative talent and one can only hope that his next offering will not be replete with such rampant excess.

"Exit The King" Opens For Limited Run

EUGENE Ionesco's, modern classic, EXIT THE KING, is now being presented by the UMass. Theatre in Bartlett Auditorium.

EXIT THE KING is a play about how to live because we all have to die. It was first done in English at London's Royal Court Theatre, with Alec Guiness in the lead role of King Berenger 1st, yet did not reach American audiences in the English translation until 1967. In this short time EXIT THE KING has made most critics aware that the tiresome cliche, playwright of the absurd, does not wear too well on Ionesco.

This current production is significant for a number of reasons, but none moreso than the fact that Doris Abramson is its director.

Doris Abramson, an Amherst native, graduated from UMass. with her degree in English in 1949. In the intervening years she has not only watched the UMass theatre and theatre department grow but has had a hand in guiding that growth.

Miss Abramson recalls that when she was an undergraduate at UMass., the opportunities for a student to perform in plays or work in any aspects of production, were few and far between. Two student organizations, Roister Doisters, and the Operetta Guild, produced a total of three productions per year between them. (It might be added that these student organizations are still very active, the Operetta Guild is now known as UMass. Music Theatre). There wasn't even a Speech Department at UMass let alone a theatre department in those days.

Miss Abramson received her Masters Degree at Smith College in Holyoke and joined the UMass. Faculty in 1953. She then directed a number of Roister Doister Productions, TIGER AT THE GATES, ELIZABETH THE QUEEN, MAD WOMAN OF CHAILLOT, THE CRUCIBLE.

In the subsequent years Miss Abramson received her PhD from Columbia University. Since the Theatre area's inception in 1961 she has directed a major portion of the UMass Theatre Seasons productions. She has also found time to write and have published The Negro Playwright in the American Theatre, 1925-1959.

Recently she was asked, why are you doing EXIT THE KING? This is a question that usually drives directors up walls, and precipitates a fillipant answer such as "Why not."

But Doris Abramson is no stranger to Ionesco, and particularly EXIT THE KING. She directed THE LESSON for the former Patterson Players of Amherst, in 1961.

Through some work she had done for the MASSACHUSETTS REVIEW, she became acquainted with Rosette Lamont, a personal friend and one of the worlds foremost authorities on Eugene Ionesco. With Seymour Rudin of the UMass. faculty and Mme. Lamont, Doris Abramson thought it would be worthwhile to present EXIT THE KING to American audiences. The work had not yet been translated from the French.

Mme. Lamont received permission from Ionesco himself to do the play in French, LE ROI SE MEURT. The idea was sold to radio station WFCR and in 1966 LE ROI SE MEURT, directed by Doris Abramson, with Rosette Lamont as Queen Marguerite and Seymour Rudin as King Berenger 1st with faculty from UMass and Smith College, was presented as a dramatic reading over the radio. Soon other educational FM stations picked up the program and it was aired throughout the Eastern and Southern United States.

Since that time she has always wanted to do EXIT THE KING in the English translation and as a full blown stage production and this year that desire has been fulfilled.

In trying to evaluate EXIT THE KING, Doris Abramson, and the UMass. Theatre which is celebrating ten years of growth, one is tempted to look for significance and that great catchall phrase, "relevance." And yet that is possibly what is unique about the evaluation. One does not have to look for it, one does not have to force it on the situation.

EXIT THE KING, a play about the affirmation and importance of life, opens a season of theatre that is crucial for the growth and life of the UMass. Theatre, and it is directed by Doris Abramson, who has and still is playing a great part in nurturing that growth.

EXIT THE KING is playing this weekend, Friday & Saturday evenings, Oct. 22-23, and next week Thursday (through Saturday, Oct. 29-30. All curtain times are at 8:30 PM.

Reserved seats are available at the Bartlett Box Office (545-2579) Monday through Friday 10:00 AM-4:00 PM plus evenings of performances. Tickets are $1.50 for UMass students w/ID, and $2.00 for all others.

to get his cut from a group of swindling criminals. Director John Boorman has created a visual treat which pictorially compels the viewer, unfortunately the plot amounts to nothing much more than a series of gratuitous violent scenes whose simplicity jars the visual complexity of the film.

Saturday's Hero (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 8)

A 1950 football drama with Donna Reed and John Derek, for what it's worth.

See No Evil (Palace Cinema, West Springfield)

This year's version of Wait Until Dark, this time featuring Mia Farrow as a blond girl whose family lies bloodily murdered all around her while she is stalked by the killer. It ain't as frightening as it is in just poor taste as this kind of film has been better done before.

Skin Game (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

A lighthearted, well-done comedy about a pair of confidence men who roam the pre-Civil War South conning slave traders, with James Garner Lou Gossett as the pair.

Summer of '42 (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

Now in its umpteenth week, this somewhat charming look into the American psyche circa 1941 remains the most popular film of the year. It's nostalgia comes on a bit thick at times as it tells the story of how a young man approaches manhood with the assistance of Jennifer O'Neill.

Together (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

The first so-called tasteful porno flick that looks prurient to the nth degree.

Tricia's Wedding (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

Les Cockettes de San Francisco interpret the Nixon-Cox wedding to some outrageous and hilarious results. The group, who have received much press recently in such publications as "Rolling Stone," "Earth," and "The Village Voice", are one of the most accomplished and outrageous theater groups now in America. Also Un Chant D'Amour, a film by Jean Genet which has been surpressed in this country.

Walkabout (Calvin Theater, Northampton)

An exciting and exotic adventure story in which two youngsters, lost in the Australian wasteland, are befriended by a young Aborigine and his tribe. The screenplay, by British playwright Edward Bond, is intelligent as well as imaginative, as the meshing of cultures is made both educational and highly enjoyable.

Woman In Love (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)

Ken Russell's lush interpretation of D. H. Lawrence's novel is as fine a crafted film as you may hope to see this year. The film is a visual wonder as Russell reduces Lawrence's sexual polemics are to a near elementary level, his camera impeccably captures early Twentieth Century England and makes the film a haunting and evocative visual pleasure. The film literally pulsates with sensuality and benefits greatly from the cold. Award-winning portrayal (NY Film Critics and Academy) of Glenda Jackson. With Oliver Reed.

The Journey (Friday, 11:25, ch. 3)

A busload of neutral citizens, en route from Budapest to Vienna, are halted in a border town by a tough Russian major. What follows is the cat-and-mouse investigation of the group which may be a bit fanciful but is almost always interesting. Featuring a large Continental cast headed by Yul Brynner, Deborah Kerr, Jason Robards, Jr., and Robert Morley.

Mickey One (Friday, 11:30, ch. 8)

See Films section for more details.

Captain Newman, M.D. (Saturday, 11:25, ch. 3)

An intelligent entertainment which tells the tale of a neuro-psychiatric section of a big Army base in Arizona during the waning days of World War II. The film episodically jumps from comedy to drama without much discretion, which is occasionally annoying, still a pleasant entertainment, with Gregory Peck, Angie Dickinson, and Tony Curtis.

FILMS

An American In Paris
The resplendent 1950 musical (which won five Oscars including Best Picture) may have tarnished some, yet still remains a pleasing example of the impeccably produced, skillfully created MGM musicals of the early Fifties. The plot is a bit thin, yet is so opulently adorned with a cornucopia of delights, from decor to choreography, that it is hardly missed at all. The music is Gershwin, and it is sung, danced, and played by a wonderful cast led by Gene Kelly, Leslie Caron, and Oscar Levant. The final sequence, a dance dream ballet, is one of the finest filmed dance sequences and remains a supreme example of Hollywood "Schtick."

Charly
Cliff Robertson won an Oscar for his portrayal of a mentally retarded man who through a scientific experiment becomes a genius. The film is a well-crafted, purposeful tearjerker which is distinguished by the performances of Robertson and Claire Bloom as the nurse who acts as Charly's guardian and falls in love with him. Much of the exterior filming is Boston and the city never looked lovelier.

The Chase (Wednesday, Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, 8)
Somehow this mildly hysterical and glossly melodrama about the lurid private affairs of a Southern town is fascinating and diverting in its own way. The story concerns a sheriff in search of an escaped convict whose return to the town throws a number of leading citizens into a panic. It is thrown together with nearly every cliche about the South imaginable. Still when done by a cast headed by Marlon Brando, Jane Fonda, and Robert Redford it makes for entertaining dross.

Le Collectioneuse (The Talkie, Northampton)
Eric Rohmer's fourth of his six moral fables that has a similar theme as his My Night At Maud's and Claire's Knee in which a young woman must make the critical decision and act upon it. It is done with the wit and style that is endemic with Rohmer's work.

The Devils (Amherst Cinema, Amherst)
Ken Russell's latest film about religious and political persecution in Seventeenth Century France exploits is subject matter and the result is a lewd and campy historical pageant. For more see review elsewhere in issue.

Doctor Zhivago (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
MGM's latter day Gone With The Wind, this time set in the Ukraine during the Russian Revolution and bubbling over with pretentiousness. Zhivago wanders about like a Slavic Everyman as the Pasternack novel is reduced to classy, intelligent pulp for the masses. Robert Bolt's script renders the original nearly unintelligible and the direction by David Lean makes this epic seem longer than it actually is. The whole Class Package is expensively-mounted making it the most tediously romantic spectacle of the Sixties. The music score by Maurice Jarre is as luscious as it is empty, with a large cast headed by Omar Shariff, Julie Christie, Geraldine Fitzgerald, and Rod Stieger (who shines in a featured role).

Gimmie Shelter (Sage Hall, Smith College, 7:30 and 9:30)
The Rolling Stones 1969 American tour is incisively dissected in this powerful, often brilliant documentary by the Maisles Brothers. The two used a piecemeal style which fuses the Stones in concert with the planning behind Altamont concert in attempting to comment upon the larger themes the violence of the Altamont concert raised.
The concert portions show Jagger as the master showman he is often called and proves the group to be the best rock and roll band of The Sixties. The film has the final effect of a nightmare, filled with chaotic incidents and ambiguous meanings.

The Knute Rockne Story (Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 8)
A 1939 documentary about the fabled Knute Rockne whose Notre Dame coaching career introduced the forward pass to football.

Les Liaisons Dangereuses (Tuesday, Thompson 104, 8 and 10)
Roger Vadim's film which concerns a sexually competitive relationship between Jeanne Moreau and Gerarde Philipe.

Let's Scare Jessica To Death
A horror film of meshing genres; it at times resembles a straight ghost story, at other times a Shirley Jacksonish psychological thriller, and still at other moments resembles the "What Ever Happened To..." genre. The combination just doesn't mesh and the results are very uneven. The cast of this low- budget feature (filmed almost entirely on location in a beautiful old house on Long Island) is made up mostly of television actors led by Zohra Lampert, and Kevin McCarthy.

The Love Machine (The Academy of Music, Northampton; Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
Jacqueline Suzanne's hugely successful trash novel has been made into a generally lacklustre movie. Her banal prose is nothing more than boring on the screen and misses any of the sordid vulgarity which made it famous. The story is about the rise of Robin Stone from newscaster to network news directory by way of bed-hopping and other behind-the-scenes maneuvers. John Philip Law is unforgettable as Robin and Dyan Cannon is appropriately bitchy but hardly memorable as the head TV executive's wife. The two fairly interesting performances the film can boast are by snively Jackie Cooper and David Hemmings as the fag-with-the-heart-of-gold (this season's favorite film cliche).

Mickey One (Tuesday, Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, 8)
One of the classic underground films of the Sixties. On the surface it's a gangster film in which a man flees the grip of the gang, but through Arthur Penn's direction, it's made into a parable about a man fleeing forces beyond his control. Penn worked without a script and the flaws are apparent, with Warren Beatty.

The Miracle Worker (Thursday, Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, 8)
This film version of William Gibson's play is a shattering experience mainly because of two brilliantly drawn, savage and powerful performances of Anne Bancroft and Patty Duke. Gibson adapted his play with care emphasizing the therapeutic relationship between Helen Keller and Annie Sullivan, the strong, proud teacher who saved the blind girl from her isolated existence. The surrounding framework may seem a bit to stagey, but watching Bancroft and Duke is awe-inspiring.

Point Blank (Friday, Campus Center Auditorium, 7 and 9)
A vividly photographed, violent crime melodrama which is so effectively presented that its lack of substance is almost completely glossed over, but not quite. Lee Marvin plays a gangster out

Red China Admitted To U.N.
Nationalists Ousted

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The U.N. General Assembly handed the United States a stunning defeat Monday night by voting to seat the Peoples Republic of China and expel the Chinese Nationalists.

The vote on the Albanian resolution was 76-35 with 17 abstentions. It put an end to a 22-year battle over China's U.N. representation, climaxed during the past weeks by an all-out U.S. effort to prevent the ouster of the Taiwan government.

Just before the vote the Chinese Nationalist delegation walked out of the assembly chamber.

Until the end, the United States had predicted victory. The battle was lost, however, when the assembly defeated a U.S.-backed proposal to declare the expulsion of Taiwan an "important question" which would have required a two-thirds majority.

The vote on the so-called "important question" resolution was 54 in favor, 59 against and 15 abstentions.

This meant that the Albanian resolution, calling for the seating of Red China and the expulsion of the Taiwan delegation, would require only a simple majority of the countries present and voting. A similar resolution received a majority of 51-49 a year ago.

Before the key vote, the United States had won a preliminary test on a motion to give the "important question" resolution priority in voting. The vote on this was 61-53 with 15 abstaining.

In Washington, the State Department said it would have no comment on the vote until Tuesday morning.

There also was no comment at once from the White House.

The American side had lost an earlier test when the 131-nation assembly rejected a proposal for an overnight delay in the voting.

U.S. Ambassador George Bush, who had directed the strategy for the "dual representation" group, told newsmen after the assembly adjournment:

"The United Nations crossed a very dangerous bridge tonight."

He said he had been surprised by the vote.

"I thought we would win and it would be very, very close," he said.

Bush said he expected a very bad reaction from the American public but that he did not know what Congress would do.

Assembly President Adam Malik told the assembly he would notify the Peking government immediately. There were reports that some pro-Peking delegates already had been in touch with Red China's embassy in Ottawa. A representative of Albania said, however, he did not know when a Peking delegation would arrive to take over the Chinese seat.

NEWS ANALYSIS

For some days now, in the American drive for votes, the U.S. delegation has been expressing what sounded like highly qualified optimism that its resolution was achieving "forward motion." In the view of some knowledgable delegates here, it turned out to be a sort of American diplomatic leap backward.

Viet Vets March On Westover

By JIM CRYAN AND GLENN SHIELDS

The Viet Nam Veterans Against The War observed Veterans Day by participating in a demonstration at Westover Air Force Base against the Air War in Southeast Asia. The same afternoon the V.V.A.W. marched alongside the parade route of the Veterans Day Parade in Springfield where they had been refused permission to march as a group in the Parade.

One Hundred Viet Vets gathered at Whitmore at 10:00 A.M. on Monday morning to proceed to the Industrial Gate at Westover Air Force Base where they joined with the Westover Action Project in opposition to the Air War in Southeast Asia. The Veterans, dressed in varying degrees of dress uniform and wearing medals awarded them in Viet Nam, gathered peaceably to hear speakers from their own group and active duty personnel who spoke on the Air War for the Westover Action Project. Following the talks, an active duty WAF from Westover played a guitar and led the demonstration in a number of traditional peace songs.

Following the Westover display of anti-war sentiment the group departed for Springfield where they were joined by about fifty additional supporters. The Vets were forced to march on the sidewalks alongside the parade since their request for admission to the Parade had been denied. Six members led the V.V.A.W. in Springfield, carrying a flag draped coffin to acknowledge and remember their 55,000 and more comrades who died in the Vietnamese conflict. As the parade arrived at Court Square and the reviewing stand the V.V.A.W. assembled on the steps of City Hall directly across from the reviewing stand. They were immediately cleared from the steps by the Chief of the Springfield Police and a force of riot-equipped officers.

The Vets complied peacefully, and assembled at the bottom of the steps where they were quadroned off by the police, as seen by this reporter. They remained through the ceremonies and saluted the National Anthem, each in his own way; some with a peace sign or raised fist and some with the traditional military salute or with hand over their hearts.

The V.V.A.W. and their supporters were the largest contingent of any group that participated in the rain soaked Veterans Day Parade. The general consensus among the small number of observers of the parade was sympathy for the Marching vets.

WMUA And Dickinson Reach Agreement

By ANNE STADNICKI

Radio station WMUA and Emily Dickinson House have reached a tentative agreement that will allow WMUA to put its new antenna and transmitter on top of the Orchard Hill dormitory. The agreement comes after months of misunderstanding between the UMass radio station and the Dickinson residents.

The new tower will increase WMUA's power from 10 watts to 1000 watts stereo.

Station manager John Zizis last week gave representatives of Dickinson House his personal written guarantee that if there is any interference or problem created by putting the tower on Dickinson, within 90 days WMUA will correct the situation or move.

Previously the crux of the matter had been WMUA's refusal to guarantee non-interference, under former station manager Ken Horseman. Horseman graduated from UMass last June.

"It was basically two bodies of students disagreeing, up to now," said Zizis. "Last year I think the problem was that WMUA didn't go up to Dickinson with the idea of looking at things through their eyes. The request for a personal guarantee sounded reasonable to me, so I complied and the problem seems to have dissolved."

WMUA had made all the other arrangements necessary for the new transmitter site last year, according to Zizis. The license for upping WMUA's power was obtained from the Federal Communication Commission (FCC), and permission for the move was obtained from the University administration. The UMass Board of Trustees gave their OK late in the fall of 1969.

The only delay in starting construction of the new antenna was Dickinson House's opposition, according to Zizis. He reported that the residents' main fears were loss of the seventh floor utility room (where equipment would be installed), electrical interference and its possible side effects.

Actual construction will now begin within two weeks. Zizis explained the three stages of construction. First the tower will be put on top of Dickinson. Then the electrical work will be done, followed by the moving in of the transmitter to Dickinson, where it will be "plugged in".

Moving In-Now that WMUA will move its transmitting tower to Orchard Hill, their broadcast range will be greatly increased.

Zizis said WMUA has a March 22nd deadline, under the license granted by the FCC, to go to 1000 watts stereo. He has set a target date of February 1st, however.

"I think we ought to make it," he said. "We need a fairly extensive testing period to make sure the antenna doesn't do what it's not supposed to do, as well as what it should." He offered as an example the case of tuning in Ken Mosakowski on an electric toothbrush.

For the student, WMUA's new tower and transmitter site means higher quality music, the station manager said. He briefly explained stereo radio. "The station sends out two channels of sound, which the home radio receives and reconverts into a single signal. A much higher quality sound results."

The new tower will also mean that WMUA will be heard by more people, according to Zizis. He said transmission from WMUA's present location is being blocked by the tower on the graduate research center.

"The big urgency is to get above all that concrete to be heard, so Dickinson was the best choice we could make," Zizis explained. He added that the location and increased power would extend WMUA's listening range all the way to Springfield, and north to Vermont. Mountains block transmission in the east-west direction.

Zizis expressed the hope that the station will be able to reach UMass students off campus with the new tower. Although WMUA is entirely student run, student operated and student financed, he said that faculty and administrators should be able to benefit from the programming, too.

Zizis expects the station to get "a lot more professional" because of the increased power. "Mistakes weren't so important because only a small audience heard them before, but now the audience will be much larger," he said.

"The whole station is ready for stereo now, its programming had been ready for a long time," Zizis declared. The long time amounts to four years. The project to increase WMUA's power to 1000 began in 1967.

Along with the mounting time comes mounting money. The Student Senate allocated the entire WMUA budget from the Student Activity Tax Fund, because WMUA's license does not allow commerical support. Last year the budget was $10,000, this year it is about $40,000, according to Zizis. He projects a rise to $60,000 or $70,000 for next year.

The total cost of the tower project was not specified.

Speed Freaks Beware

Death At An Early Age

Within a few months, a 22-year-old Quincy woman will have been murdered by her society, and no arrests will be made.

Doctors have told Cindy she will be fortunate to live another four months. She has developed a serious heart condition. Her brain cells are slowly dying, and many of the veins in her body are burned out.

According to doctors at Massachusetts General Hospital who specialize in drug abuse, she is what is called a "speed freak."

She is not only paying for her habit with her life, but she has already paid by giving herself to prostitution.

Her total worldly possessions are two pairs of slacks, a few blouses, and $3.87 in her black pocketbook. She wants to die, and few will mourn her when she does.

Certainly not her father who deserted the family, when she was a small child, nor probably her mother, who is an alcoholic.

Many doctors consider speed—amphetamines — even worse than heroin because of the harm it does to the human body.

"If a speed freak doesn't die from the damage the drug has done to her body," they say, "she will stand a good chance of killing herself while crashing."

"Crashing" is what happens to a speed user who is "coming off the high."

Cindy, who had been injecting the drug with a needle, agreed to tell her story. It took nearly 14 hours for her to do so, because she had great difficulty remembering facts about her life.

"I really don't know where to begin," she said, nibbling on a sandwich. "Maybe if just one kid out there reads my story and thinks twice about using narcotics, then I've accomplished something with my life.

She had talked for nearly five hours when the tape recorder started making noises, as if it were about to quit.

Pointing to the recorder, Cindy said: "That tape is just like my life, slowly being used up until there is nothing left. For me it's too late...I want to die."

She admitted she has "a lot of trouble remembering things...A lot of times I feel like I'm in a complete fog." Doctors attribute her memory problem to damaged brain cells, caused by the drug.

"I don't know what my father was like...we had a lot of problems in my house. My mother and father didn't get along very well, I guess.

"I left home when I was 17...I can remember the nights of going to bed hungry because my mother wouldn't feed us. Still, I guess those were the good old days.

"My sister and myself went to live with my aunt. I stayed with her until I finished high school. Then I left. I couldn't stay with her all my life. It wasn't too convenient for her, having to take care of us and her own family, too."

Cindy took a job as a salesgirl in a Quincy department store. "I really had to scrape to get by...I had no one who really gave a damn about me. Who could I just go to and tell my problems to?

"Heck, I had friends, but gee, you can't tell them...you know what I mean. But they at least cared for me, and that was more than my mother ever did. I wonder if she knows if I'm still alive?"

How did she start taking drugs?

"It was one of those things. We used to go to parties all the time. Bob (her boyfriend) had a lot of friends who used to smoke grass all the time. I loved Bob, so I did whatever he wanted me to. I didn't like alcohol that much, so we smoked grass instead.

"For the first time in my life, someone needed me...Bob cared about me. We were going to be married as soon as he got out of the Marines. He had another year and a half to go.

"One night, Bob got some speed and sand. I would really freak out...It was something new. At first I was scared about using it, but Bob convinced me to try it.

"I should have known it would be too good to be true. Bob finally had to leave. He was going to be sent to Vietnam."

Cindy started to cry. "He never came back. He was killed. I just didn't want to believe it...until I saw him in the casket. I was all by myself again."

Later, she said: "Some of the other kids, friends of Bob, came over to my place one day. I didn't want to go, but they took me to the beach with them...They were trying to be good to me.

"Since Bob left for the service I didn't use drugs any more. But they were all using drugs, and I couldn't say no. Anyway, I felt good using Speed again. I had started to shoot it...I just had to be high or I was out of it.

"It was getting expensive...You know, Speed is not cheap and I was getting the good stuff."

Asked how she paid for it, she said: "I wasn't making much as a salesgirl. I couldn't pay for this much Speed...I quit work. I just couldn't take it any more.

"I became a prostitute. A lot of the other kids were doing it. There was good money in it...I could pay for my habit without really hurting anyone."

A look of terror crept over her face. "I used to go to the beach in the summer when everyone was down there. Now I usually go down near the Boston Common..I have a friend who lives in town where I used to stay once in a while...I don't know, I slept any place I could.

The conversation had tired her out. "You know, this is the first time I've ever talked like this. I just hope it's not a waste. If any kid can, why don't they stop now before it's too late?

"I often wonder what it's going to be like when I die. I wonder what will happen. Is there really any type of God."

She was crying again. "I want to die so I can be with Bobby. I just hate being alive. What's the sense of living any more?"

Sylvan Area Opens

By GEORGE WEISSLITZ

Saturday marked the formal opening ceremonies for the Cashin, Brown, and McNamara dormitories, which make up the Sylvan Residential Complex. The dedication was attended by about eighty people, and lasted forty-five minutes. The audience consisted mainly of members of the administration, trustees, and relatives of Harry Dunlop Brown, William M. Cashin, and Elizabeth L. McNamara, after whom the three dormitories are named.

The ceremonies were presided over by Acting Chancellor of the Amherst campus, Dr. Randolph W. Bromery. After he opened the ceremonies, introductory remarks were given by Jim O'Donaghue, student senator from Brown dormitory.

Harry Brown Residence Hall was dedicated by Dennis Crowley, a trustee of the University. Brown served as a Representative in the General Court from 1929-1934, and as a UMass trustee from 1940 until his death in 1968. In 1964 he received an honorary doctor of laws from UMass.

Following the dedication of Brown dormitory, Robert Gordon, who is presently a trustee of the University, dedicated William M. Cashin Residence Hall. William Cashin was a UMass trustee for twenty years. Originally appointed by Governor Paul Denver, and then reappointed to the Board in 1956 by Governor Christian Herter, Cashin was one of the original trustee members of the UMass Building Authority.

The final dedication for the Elizabeth L. McNamara Residence Hall was given by Helen Curtis, Dean of Women at the University. Elizabeth McNamara was institute director of the Extension Division of the State Department of Education, the first woman named to assist the Democratic National Committee, and a trustee of the University of Massachusetts from 1936-1957.

The dedication program, which ran very smoothly from start to finish, was planned by Daniel Melley and Arthur Lahaite of the public relations department in Whitmore.

Nobody here will contend that the United States failed to live up to its promise to work hard for the proposed two-Chinas solution.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers and Ambassador George Bush were trying to line up support but even some of America's closest allies have refused to buy a solution which they are sure Peking will reject.

The Americans have whipped up some additional support, but even Bush sounded a good deal less than over-optimistic when he noted that the American position was "winnable."

The United States wanted to make the expulsion of Chiang's regime an "important question," because expelling any member must be considered a most serious matter and thus should require the "important question" two-thirds vote.

The opponents say there is no question of expelling a member. China remains a member, one way or the other. The only question to be resolved, they say, is whether China is represented by Peking, which rules 800 million Chinese or Taiwan, which rules an island population of 14 million.

The outcome boiled down to three possibilities:

—The United States was defeated in its request for priority consideration of its "two Chinas" resolution.

An Albanian resolution calling for expulsion of Taiwan and seating of Peking was submitted first and is technically entitled to be voted first, but a good many members were thought to be sympathetic to the U.S. request for priority. To refuse meant a simple majority voting for the Albanian resolution would make all the other questions academic.

—The United States can win priority voting for its resolution and be defeated by a simple majority. When the "important question" failed, there was practically no chance of keeping Taiwan in the world organization. The Albanian resolution was virtually sure of passage.

—The U.S. "important question" could have won by the narrowest of margins. This would mean that it would require two-thirds of the members to expel Taiwan. The expulsion move would have then failed. The Chiang Kai-shek regime would have remained seated and Red China would be invited also to join and take over the Security Council seat allotted to the Chinese in the charter. There was little chance of Peking doing that, under such circumstances.

Campus Police Coudn't Be Better

By PETE FORGET

Statistics compiled by the Campus Police force for the first six weeks of this semster reveal an increase in criminal activity compared to the same period one year ago. In an interview with a spokesman for the Campus Police Sergeant Phil Cavanaugh, it was revealed that officers have received complaints of 1200 more incidents of criminal activity on campus this year and have arrested three times as many persons thus far in the semester as during the same weeks last year.

Cavanaugh commented on the great increase in serious crimes such as larceny, armed assault, and assault and battery, along with a significant increase in motor vehicle violations and accidents. He reported that the Campus Police hope to prevent future increases in accident rates by greater use of their radar facilities.

The existence of several dangerous pedestrian crossings on campus were pointed out by the sergeant. Students crossing Mass. Ave. (especially at night) are urged to be extremely careful because of the poor lighting.

The Campus Police are currently organizing "dorm talks" in an attempt to tell the student how he can best protect himself and his property. Cavanaugh urged students to attend the talks to air their gripes and hear what the police have to say. Students should take the time to record serial numbers on items like stereos, cars, etc., or make some mark to identify their property so that if stolen, it can be easily identified and returned quickly.

The Campus Police are expecting to increase the size of the force in the near future to provide more extensive investigations of criminal activity on campus. They would like to be able to follow up on all complaints by students, but "there are just too few officers to see all the kids who get ripped off," according to Cavanaugh. Many rip offs can be prevented by locking dorm and car doors, he said.

Most of the arrests made by Campus Police concern suspects not associated with UMass but who have been former students at UMass.

The Police believe that the recent rash of bicycle thefts is a result of organized criminal activity and is being thoroughly investigated. Students are urged to report any thefts that occur or are witnessed.

Sgt. Cavanaugh said that 6-8 bicycles (10-speed types) are stolen a day with more taken on weekends and more in Southwest than any other area, because of the great number of students living there.

The Campus Police force has the formidable task of protecting the 15,000 or so students on campus plus aiding the Amherst Police in town incidents. If you get ripped off ask yourself if your door was locked and then get on down to talk to the Campus Police.

(Editor's Note: Each week in the MDC there will be a Security Log featuring a report of Campus Police activity. Some of these incidents show the disregard of people for each other and the extent of crime on our campus. Hopefully, the article will demonstrate the need for student co-operation regarding crime at UMass.)

Woman's Lib Discussion

Women's liberation on campus will be holding a discussion tonight at 7:30 on the Significance of Women in the University. It will be an informal sharing of ideas.

The topics to be considered could encompass reasons women are at the University, goals in being here, how to better make the University a growing experience, how to relate the present situation to the future and possible alternatives.

The possibility of meeting in support groups and what form they will take will also be explored. All interested women are invited. Consult the Collegian notices for the room number.

Arab-Israeli Speaker Set

Miss Yael Vered, the director of the Israeli government's Middle East Department, will speak at Amherst College, Tuesday November 2. She will lead a discussion, "Looking Toward a Middle East Settlement," at 4 p.m. in Converse Assembly, Converse Hall, on the Amherst College campus.

Miss Vered is prepared to speak on numerous topics, including Arab-Israeli relations, current political problems in Israel and the Arab world, and the Fedayeen and Palestinian organizations.

Prior to her appointment as director of the Middle East Department, Miss Vered served as political counselor at Israel's Paris embassy, as director of the Foreign Minister's Bureau, and as a commentator for the Voice of Israel.

Station Bombed

(AP) — Security was intensified at city police stations Monday after a dynamite bomb exploded at the headquarters of the Detroit Police Officers Association.

The blast shattered almost all windows in the red brick house, destroyed interior plasterboard walls and blew a hole in the rear foundation. Roofing and gutters also were heavily damaged.

No one was in the building at the time and there were no injuries.

In The Nation And The World

Nixon Stresses Differences Between Trips

WASHINGTON — President Nixon expressed optimism yesterday about the prospects for lasting peace, but warned at the same time that "there are great differences" between the Government of the United States and those of the Soviet Union and Communist China.

In a brief radio address marking Veterans Day, which he delivered from Camp David, near Thurmont, Md., Mr. Nixon said that his trips next year to Peking and Moscow "are directed toward" the goal of peace. But he added:

"We go with no false hopes, and we intend to leave behind us in America no unrealistic expectations."

Mr. Nixon also pledged his concern for the returning veterans of the war in Vietnam, which he called "the most publicized and least understood war in our history."

He asked all Americans to join him in a commitment "to do all that we can do to insure that those who have borne the burdens of war are not made, because of their sacrifice, to bear disproportionately the burdens of the peace."

A charge that there was just such neglect of the needs of Vietnam veterans was made by Senator George S. McGovern in a Veterans Day statement.

The South Dakotan, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, said that the nation had, "delayed too long" in guaranteeing to present and future Vietnam veterans "the best the nation can offer in health care, employment opportunities and benefits for job training."

Senator McGovern cited Labor Department figures that show "three hundred thousand Vietnam veterans among the millions who walk the streets unemployed."

He also spoke of thousands of other Vietnam veterans whose wounds are drug addiction and other psychological problems and who "are simply not getting the medical treatment they need because funds are short and facilities inadequate."

Mr. Nixon, in effect, directly answered the senator.

He noted that in June he had ordered the Labor Department to inaugurate special programs to provide training and jobs for veterans. He said:

"I am happy to report that during July and August alone, more than 121,000 Vietnam veterans were placed in jobs or in training for jobs."

Mr. Nixon went on to say that "in addition to jobs and education we have taken comprehensive steps to provide the best medical care possible, including treatment for drug users."

"But the most appropriate tribute to America's veterans," he continued, "would be to accomplish the secure and lasting peace for which they fought.

"We have before us the best chance in this century to make the present generation of American war veterans the last generation of American war veterans."

The President

Lion's Hughes Dies After Game

DETROIT (AP) — A heart attack was responsible for the death of Chuck Hughes, a 28-year-old wide receiver for the Detroit Lions, an autopsy revealed Monday.

The autopsy, conducted by Dr. Taisja Tworek of the Wayne County Medical Examiner's staff, indicated Hughes died from a heart attack due to clogging of his heart artery by clots.

A spokesman for the medical examiner's office described Hughes' attack, which occured with just over a minute remaining in Sunday's game between the Lions and the Chicago Bears as: "It's the same thing an 87-year-old person could have died from."

The spokesman said tests of tissue samples were taken to determine whether Hughes consumed any type of drugs before the attack. He said results of the tests are incomplete.

However, he said if the heart attack was due to drugs, the medical examiner's report would not have been released so quickly. He said the report's release indicates the medical examiner is certain Hughes' death didn't stem from drugs.

The official cause of death listed in the autopsy report was "arteriosclerotic coronary artery disease with acute coronary thrombotic occulsion."

A medical doctor explained to The Associated Press the examiner's finding meant, in effect, that Hughes had a hardening of the main artery supplying the heart, possibly caused by calcium and fiberosis, and that a clot had formed in this artery, shutting off the flow of blood.

He suggested hardening of the arteries was unusual in a person of 28, although not in persons beyond the age of 50 or so.

He suggested the so-called hardening of an artery was something like a water pipe in which calcium deposits keep building up until they virtually shut off the flow, adding "then it takes only a pebble to shut off the water."

Dr. Richard A. Thompson, the Lions' team doctor, said Hughes, who died on the turf of Tiger Stadium before 54,478 spectators, was unresponsive from the moment we got out there except for trying to get a breath."

Drugs Used On Inmates

KANSAS CITY (AP) — A drug powerful enough to lull some inmates for as long as two weeks is being used at the Missouri Penitentiary to quell violent outbursts, an attorney for inmates says.

Gerald R. Walsh of the Legal Aid & Defender Society of Kansas City said Sunday doctors at the prison "shoot up" inmates with the drug Prolixin after making clinical judgments they are psychotic.

The drug has been used on some inmates regularly for as long as two years, Walsh said, because when he comes off the drug, "he might revert to anti-social behavior.

"What we see here is a chemical solution to a behavior problem; it is not directed at helping the man, at helping him change."

Dr. Lee Baker, chief medical officer at the penitentiary in Jefferson City, Mo., said Prolixin is administered to 30 or 40 inmates at the prison.

Castle Hill Project Fails

BOSTON (AP) — Castle Square, a bright housing promise for the poor only four years ago, today is a fortress of despair. Worn beyond its years and financially frayed, it houses demoralized tenants fearful of crime and openly hostile to management.

The experience of Castle Square, and hundreds of others like it across the country, is shaking the belief of government housing officials that they had found an alternative to discredited public housing: That business, lured by tax incentives and interest subsidies, could build and operate durable, decent low-rent, housing in rundown inner cities.

Instead the result has been a booming program that is well on its way to producing new slums in the inner cities. Now Secretary of Housing George Romney and other Nixon administration officials are looking for ways to salvage the program, which will cost the government $175 million this year, and it's expected to require $80 billion in subsidies over 40 years.

What's wrong at Castle Square is what's wrong with the ghetto portion of the government's multibillion- dollar subsidy program to build or rehabilitate apartments. Among its problems are substandard and inept construction, tenants with crippling social disabilities, crime and drugs, soaring maintenance and repair costs.

Castle Square is a serpentine maze of brick and concrete buildings housing 600 apartment and townhouse units. It sits astride a four-block urban-renewal area in the decaying South End of Boston, a neighborhood of decrepit rowhouses and small stores mired in crime, narcotics and alcoholism.

The project's mixture of elderly retirees and young families is 30 per cent black, 30 per cent white, 30 per cent Oriental, and 10 per cent Spanish-American. Many of the tenants are on welfare, some on drugs.

Tenant-management hostilities and swarms of children have left their mark. So have vandals and burglars. Outdoor lights are broken. Jimmy marks are evident on many doors.

First-floor windows are barred against break-ins. The glass-enclosed stairwells are riddled with cracks and holes. Graffiti decorate sidewalks and walls.

Many of the original and most desirable tenants have moved out. Those who have stayed are deeply disillusioned.

"People would move if they could," said tenant Alma McKinnen.

To the residents, the cause of most of the problems is management-in this case the Druker Co. of Boston, a nationally known real estate developer.

Druker, so the tenant compaint goes, is reluctant to fix the water leaks, patch the plumbing, replace the broken lights, eradicate the rats and vermin, clean the grounds, shovel the snow, and sweep away the skidrow drunks who hang around.

Druker has tried to raise rents $28 a month, to $116 for a one-bedroom apartment and $160 for four bedrooms, plus electricity. But the Boston Rent Board blocked $6 of this increase, in part because of complaints about maintenance.

Management, by contrast, blames-and has sued-the building contractor for shoddy construction; condemns the Federal Housing Administration for what it calls skinflint ceilings on construction costs and for insufficient allowances for management costs; faults the police for inadequate patrols and scolds the tenants for slovenliness.

"We're expected to build something to last for 40 years without the ingredients to make that possible," said Ronald M. Druker, director of development for the company. He claims the firm has dipped into its own pocket to finance "in excess of $100,000" in repairs.

"It's very easy for tenants to complain," he said. "But I have never seen a mother reprimand her child for throwing paper wrappers around the grounds. There's only so much maintenance we can do."

Amherst Installs President

Amherst College Saturday inaugurated a new president and announced the receipt of a $500,000 gift from an alumnus.

Dr. John William Ward was inaugurated in the college's indoor athletic field before an audience of about 2000. He is the fourteenth president in the school's 150-year history.

Ward took over the post last July. He succeeded Dr. Calvin H. Plimpton, who resigned.

The half-million dollar gift was made by Morris A. Copeland, class of 1917. The money will finance a colloquium fund to bring together "young people of diverse backgrounds and different perspectives to engage with faculty and students at Amherst College to promote the cross-fertilization of ideas."

Announcement of the Copeland Colloquium gift was made Saturday morning during the opening session of Alumni Weekend, just before Dr. Ward's inauguration.

The Copeland fellows brought each year to the campus through the fund will be young — "ideally persons under 40" — who can make contributions as social scientists, academicians in other fields of knowledge, public servants, or intellectual leaders in other capacities, the college said. There will be no minimum educational requirement for the fellowships.

Ward, in announcing the gift, said, "In these days when a college president must go out asking for money and provide convincing reasons why it should be given, it is delightful to receive a letter from an alumnus offering not only money, but a sound educational objective for its use."

Ward indicated fellows brought to the campus under the fund would be "untraditional people who would be here long enough to make a real impact on us."

In his inauguration address, Dr. Ward said democratic freedom is not something easily achieved or maintained.

"The basic crises is whether our institutions can be made to work, made to work in ways that are not simply authoritarian and repressive," he said, drawing parallels with the crises in our society.

Ward expressed guarded hope individuals living in a spirit of democratic freedom would be capable of "rising to a perception of what is right and acting on that perception."

"It is, I grant you, a millenial hope. But I would also remind you that it is the hope of what constitutes the nature of a free and democratic society. And, unless the institutions of a free and democratic society can incorporate that hope within each and every one of them, then there is no hope left," he said.

"We have here at this college a selection of the most advantaged and the most favored people that can be found in American society. If we cannot make that hope work here, what hope is there?" he asked. "I am as skeptical as the next man but I am willing to give it my all to see that it works here."

Dr. Ward was introduced by Prof. Henry Nash Smith of the University of California at Berkeley, who taught Dr. Ward when he was a graduate student.

Smith congratulated the college "on its wisdom and good fortune" in electing Ward. I wish to congratulate Mr. Ward also, although with more complex feelings. He faces heroic labors and he has a heroic opportunity. If he is able to bring the college safely through the coming decade, he will have performed a historic feat. I think he can do it," Prof. Smith said.

Turning to the crises in college education today, Dr. Smith called for a "thoroughgoing review of many of the teaching methods now in use."

Kaplan Picked By Smithsonian

When the National Portrait Gallery of the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. decided to portray the role of the black man in American history, it hired as consultant UMass professor Sidney Kaplan, a 30-year specialist in black history.

The exhibition Kaplan is preparing will present two centuries of the history and culture of blacks in this country. It will display portraits of Afro-Americans ranging from Phillis Wheatley, who in 1773 became the first published black poet in the U.S., to Malcolm X, a leader of the Black Revolution of our times.

Prof. Kaplan, who first became interested in black studies as an undergraduate at the City College of New York, believes that racism is the chief problem of our time. He says, "My original inclination in the way of becoming an historian of American culture, and my general outrage at what was being perpetrated on the Negro people of the United States, led me to specialize in what I came to consider the core question of American history: the institution of white racism as it affected people of color--blacks, Indians, and others."

Many of the portraits Kaplan has selected to display will be accompanied by objects associated with the figures, such as an inventor's model, a composer's manuscript score, or an example of a sculptor's work. The contributions of Afro-Americans from all walks of life will be represented, from political and scientific to athletic and revolutionary.

The exhibition, tentatively titled, "The Afro-American; portraits of Men and Women of Mark from the Revolution to the Second World War," will be in the National Portrait Gallery of the Smithsonian during the fall of 1972. Each year, the Gallery mounts temporary exhibitions such as this.

As consultant to the Gallery, Prof. Kaplan is responsible for all preparations, including writing a book-catalogue to be distributed nationally. He was on leave from the University for the past academic year and is continuing to work on the preparations although back teaching full-time at UMass.

Prof. Kaplan has been with the UMass English department for 25 years. He teaches courses in American literature and has specialized in the works of Edgar Allen Poe and Herman Melville. He has also studied extensively the black image of American art.

In 1970, Kaplan was one of the original organizers of the W.E.B. DuBois department of Afro-American studies at UMass and has since taught courses in it. He has also helped prepare a pioneering exhibition of the black image in American art for the museum at Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Me. With Marvin Sadik, director of the National Portrait Gallery, he co-authored "The Portrayal of the Negro in American Painting."

Working on the exhibition with Kaplan has been Richard Pruitt of Roxbury, a UMass alumnus. Kaplan is also assisted by an advisory committee of eminent black scholars and artists. Asst. Prof. Michael Thelwell, head of the UMass department of Afro-American studies, serves on that committee.

Soviet Poet At Amherst Tonight

Andrei Voznesensky, the Soviet poet who has won international recognition as one of the greatest contemporary poets, will give a reading of his poetry at Amherst College, Tuesday, November 2.

Voznesensky will give the reading at 8 p.m. in Johnson Chapel on the Amherst College campus. The event is open to the public without charge.

The Soviet poet opens his program with a commentary in English. The poetry readings are given alternately in English and Russian.

Voznesensky was born in Moscow on May 12, 1933. As a youngster he was introduced to poetry, particularly the works of Severyanian and the great man who later became his mentor, Boris Pasternak. Voznesensky's first poems were published in 1958, followed closely by his initial volume, "Mozika," in 1960. Three following collections "Parabola", "The Triangular Pear" and "Antiworlds" have appeared since then.

Robert Lowell has spoken of Voznesensky as a "difficult poet and the disciple of difficult poets, yet he moves large audiences, and I think this has encouraged him to give an immediate spoken vitality to his surprising thoughts and most ingenious images."

On his third tour of the United States, Voznesensky is making his first appearance in this country since 1968. The poet will speak at other leading institutions including Princeton, Dartmouth, the Library of Congress, and the Town Hall, New York City.

Help Wanted

By CHARLOTTE LETTIS

The woman down the hall from me is a very interesting person. She doesn't like women. "Anyone who doesn't become what they are potentially capable of becoming is inferior." For some reason those "anyones" tend to be women. All the talking, wanting and wishing that is done is no good unless it is followed by action. There are too many pseudo-liberated woman types running around, few that really are Free.

Yesterday I ran an 11-mile race in Gardner, Massachusetts. I was the only female entry out of 120 males. My place was 75th, my time 72:30, about 6 minutes and 40 seconds per mile. It's a lousy place and a lousy time-for a man. But as a woman you wouldn't believe the praise I got. Even though the praise and encouragement was positive, I feel it was degrading and discouraging. Continually I ask women why they are not participating in male-dominated activities, intellectual as well as physical. I mean if we expect to be liberated we've got to do something about it, the male is certainly not going to declare emancipation. It's not their job. (The men in the race were pleased and proud to see I was running.) It is women, not men, who are going to make something happen. In order to do this we must stop considering ourselves inferior. It was incredible, some of the mixed comments I got from women as I ran. Surprisingly, the middle-aged to elderly women were the most receptive. The yell was one of pure pleasure, encouragement and pride. The biggest disappointment was the high school-college age women who were either silent or vicious. One even yelled, "Hey muscles", with a cigarette hanging out of her mouth. (I used to smoke too, but decided I wasn't going to let big business shit on me also.) The younger girls, 8 or 9 couldn't understand why a woman was running. They are so conditioned into thinking woman do just certain things. Somehow I felt bitterly disappointed, almost betrayed. Here I was running not only for myself but for women, hoping somehow to break that chain that keeps us from becoming people. The 11 miles seemed like a freedom run, only it wasn't very enthusiastic or victorious. I wanted to be proud but a lot of things brought me down. The vicious remarks, the whistling, cat calls and the silence- the silence especially. It seems that in any activity women attempt equal to men, our worst enemy is other women. The silence or the non-participation is the most painful of all.

There was one positive remark. As I pushed up one of the last hills, an older woman about 65, yelled loudly, "Go and get 'em." All I could think was, I'd really like to, but I need some help.

Before The Fact

One can become disillusioned very quickly when confronted with an array of college students from all over the country. They are not to be taken as a whole, but most are not being encouraged to be a decisive factor in America today.

All across the country newspapers and student governments are still censored and hampered by college administrators and governmental interference. Students at big universities have more or less held their own, but scores of smaller schools remain literally (and politically) shackled by authoritarian individuals in positions of control.

That is one conclusion this reporter came to after attending a convention of the Associated College Press (ACP) in Dallas, Texas along with 1300 other student newspaper and yearbook editors from across the nation. The convention itself was planned to be a showcase affair for publishing companies. The editors who traveled to Dallas were fed the pap of free receptions and token workshops, carefully strained of both the opportunity to discuss the basic concerns of our times and to act other than in a politically neutral twilight of big hotel plushness and business opulence.

Most of the students seem to have been primed for that kind of convention activity though. With the exception of a few disgruntled misfits, everyone had a good time. Some of the activities were, of course, valuable for newspapers trying to expand their advertising, workout organizational problems and receive sympathy for their oppressive college president or state legislature. There are many states where student publications are constantly threatened. College newspapers have been shut-down and censored even in enlightened states like Massachusetts, where the Boston College paper was eliminated and other state college papers censored. One certainly got the feeling that if your newspaper acted freely and without coersion, you were indeed lucky.

After Student Senate President Lee Sandwen returned from a meeting of the National Student Association he commented that N.S.A. would probably not last too long, because the organization just wasn't worth what it seemed to be doing, moreover what it wasn't doing made the meeting useless.

It seems unlikely that a national student organization will ever become a powerful political force, whether the group is journalistic or student government. There are too many forces ready to buy out student idealism, exhaust and frustrate student concerns and generally keep the young voters in line. Big companies love to zap an active student into oblivion. People like Joe Rhodes of the Scranton Commission have been mollycoddled into acceptable form by private and official swooning.

Even at a time in our history when libertarians are cringing in their white robes, the youth of this nation are letting themselves be brought into submission before they have even rebelled.

Be God For Only A Quarter

By BOB ZELMAN

Perhaps you've noticed that pin ball machine players are very religious people. They approach the machine with the same zeal and fervor with which a Chasidic Jew approaches the Lord. The religion is gaining converts every day. Who can resist the beckoning lights and exciting noises?

It is basically an anthropocentric religion - i.e. it is centered around man rather than God. It is truly a religion of the 20th century. The It asks the most important question of our times: Will man bow to the machine or will it bow to him?

God created life. But now, my friends, so can you... Just drop a quarter in the little slot. One thin quarter- plunk- and then: "Let there be light." He spoke and it was done...

What is at stake is the ultimate fate of this world of your creation. Will you destroy the world and doom it to a dark (i.e., unlit) death or will you give it new life and light (i.e., rebirth). If the ball stays up in the top that's heavenly. But if it goes down into the darkness of the pit it will never be seen again.

Theologians have been watching the games (soon to appear "Wide Wide World of Sports") very carefully because it raises one of the oldest and most vexing problems of theology: How do you get salvation? It's the centuries-old controversy between deeds and belief, works and faith.

The people who believe in the former doctrine, the efficacy of work, are very active players. They believe that you must work and sweat in order to achieve salvation.

You can always tell who these people are because you can see the tension as it creeps over their faces and tightens their arm muscles. He feels the immense power of it but it's a grave responsibility. In existential terms you might say that he feels the "angst" (anxiety) of standing up to the universe alone in your "fear and trembling".

These people are constantly struggling to control the ball by pushing and banging the machine. But they wind up being over-active and the machine responds in the same way that our environment has by saying in bright letters "Tilt! Tilt!" The Greeks knew that if men attempted to play gods they incurred the sin of hubris and were duly punished.

The other extreme side of the debate is the way of faith. You can just lay back and let the ball go. You must trust in it. Let it go where it wants to go.

But the true pin ball wizard (e.g., Tommy) knows that these theological positions have their limitations. Tommy is what we call "handicapped", "but that deaf, dumb and blind kid sure plays a mean pin ball." "He can feel and if you can do that you can respond. A real "wizard" understand the subtle interplay between man and the machine.

He knows the folly of over-reacting on the one hand and passivity on the other. He can envision the "karma" of the ball. He can sense where it will go from moment to moment. He lets it go its own way as he responds to it in a gentle loving way.

He doesn't tense up as if the world rests in his hands and he doesn't relax into a stoned stupor. He stands there in the calmness of his faith and then he responds to the moment with no hassles. In this manner he solves the theological problem by finding the proper place for both faith and works. He realizes that to divide the two is to respond in a half-hearted way.

The usual opposites of control and permissiveness, restraint and freedom meet in the unity of his body as he responds to the needs of the moment.

But ultimately the pin ball machine reasserts the basic insecurity of the universe and in doing so gives man a little humility. When it comes right down to it all you can do is wait. Maybe your number will come up and maybe it won't.

Did you win or... All you can do is trust in the wisdom of the Lord. The ways of God are many and mysterious...

It rained on October 25th. We wonder what the weather will be like on November 11th.

There is a warning light on top of the new library to keep planes and stray sea gulls from crashing into it. The next step will be a light somewhere in between the Union and Machmer so that students can walk in between the two buildings at night without worrying about crashing into one of the trees.

We wonder if Webster knows what a "boogie" is.

Acting Chancellor Bromery stated in a Boston Globe story that though he is not a superpatriot, he does feel some loyalty to UMass. Perhaps some of the students who have been here five or six years feel the same way.

It always seems to rain when Reverend McIntyre holds one of his "Marches for Victory". Perhaps the reverend ought to either strengthen his ties with his contacts above or buy an umbrella.

Doesn t it seem strange that the President is always off to some retreat. After all, you wouldn't think he knew what a retreat was by the way the war is going.

Letters To The Editor

The Challenge Still Stands

To the Editor:

In response to a letter entitled "Anti Soviet or Pro Jewish?" printed in the Collegian, October 21, 1971:

The argument presented for the plight of Soviet Jewry by Jeffrey Cossin (which the previous refers to) is certainly not an intelligent one. It was a befuddled statement of passion. However, the response given by Anne Dranginis and Norman Bender, though seemingly logical and collected on the surface, lacked documentation and statement of authority. Where do these young "Sovietologists" acquire such a storehouse of information and factual knowledge about Jewish publications, Jewish theater and "official Soviet policy on Jews", and an array of some very precise figures on the Jewish percentage of Soviet college students and professionals? One does not find this information in a Russian travelogue.

In recent years, I have been affiliated with many people who have traveled to the Soviet Union for the purpose of visiting and observing the Soviet Jewish Community; and also many people who fled from the Soviet Union (when it was easier to do so) with the purpose of never returning there. The concensus one gets from these people is that the Soviet Union-was never--with the possible exception of a very brief, free Bolshevik Government-- a haven for Jews. Years before that, Jews in Russia were huddled in the Pale Settlements to be ransacked and murdered by the Czars' troops and Cossacks from the Russian Steppes. They were forced into enclaves of poverty and deprevation, such that Europe (or Eurasia) has yet to see again. And need one repeat the gastly acts of Stalin, a man whose paranoia of anti-semitism reaked still another havoc on the Russian Jewish Community. (Check Stalin's great "Doctor Plot" as a good example).

Yes, the Soviet Government was one of the first governments to recognize the reestablished State of Israel, but let us not be naive. No government ever acts out of pure altruism and the U.S.S.R. is certainly no exception, as Miss Draginis and Mr. Bender seem to suggest. It had nothing to do with Russia's "progressive policies" toward Jews. History shows that it was a political act against Britain, who had the Mandate on Palestine, with the purpose of gaining a foothold in the Middle East which backfired into the hands of the Arab states as evidenced by the ever present Soviet Fleet in the Mediterranean. The letter goes on to construct a mere tissue of half-truths instead of documented facts.

Even if the percentage of Jewish people in the Soviet Universities and professions, as the authors of the letter state, was the truth, the "good" position held by the Soviet Jew must be rapidly disintergrating because, time after time, we hear of Soviet Jews being tried and committed to prisons for what is common intellectual dissent in most every other country. These well-established Jews are even finding it worth risking a death sentence to hijack planes out of Russia to head for Israel. If Russia has a policy of free emigration (which even the government doesn't admit) then why do these Russian Jews gamble with the death sentence so frequently? Why is there a need for a Jewish Underground? Why do they not, instead, apply for these "easily" earned exit visas. I do not think one need waste valuable space to expose every misconception I ran across in the letter of October 21st. This will suffice to prove my point.

I would not dare say that the situation of the Soviet Jew is analagous to that of the Pre-WW II German Jew. The situation is more subtle in Russia. The government doesn't officially sanction anti-semitic punishments, but many have already felt this non-punishability. In the same light, the American government does not officially sanction racism-- but racism breeds in all facets of American life.

Life is not as bad as it once was for the Russian Jews. There are no Cossack raiders. But life is getting consistently harder. If Jews are abundant in the professions, they find it increasingly difficult to practice. If, as was suggested by the authors of the referred to letter, the Jewish People are equal citizens in the U.S.S.R., then the challenge still stands to the Soviet government: Let there be an open emigration policy! or is Kosygin afraid that Russian will then be spoken on both sides of the suez?

Social Reality

To the Editor:

In response to a letter in last Thursday's Collegian concerning the attitude that the outcry over Soviet Jewery is a political ploy to reactivate anti-Soviet paranoia I wish to quote from a letter written by Bertrand Russel in 1965;

"Your reply is lacking in scrupple when it dismisses as a "cold war" attitude, expressions of concern for Soviet Jews which exist in progressive, pro-Soviet, and also Communist circles in the West, and when it makes the ridiculous charge that the motive is the diversion of attention from "the racist and anti-Semitic orgy rife in some countries across the water." You cannot be unaware that the Communist Parties in Italy, France, United States, Canada, Scandinavia, Australia, and elsewhere have publicly criticized anti-Semitic literature in the USSR, discrimination against Jewish religion, and the depredation of Jewish culture. You are grossly misleading your readers if you suppress this important fact and misrepresent honest criticism of the inequality experienced by Soviet Jews...

I am fully aware of the cultural facilities that have been accorded to Soviet Jews since 1956. I welcome them as some mitigation of the crimes Stalin committed against the Jewish people, but they are meager, grudging, and inadequate to the needs of a vigorous intellectual community of some three million Jews. The striking cultural amenities supplied to even the smallest Soviet national and linguistic minorities illustrate injustice imposed on Soviet Jews."

I suggest that the authors of last Thursday's letter and any who might share their views, re-examine their data in light of the social reality existing in Russia.

Geoffrey Levine

What Did He Say?

To the Editor:

In the MDC's article about Dr. Joel Fort's speech at the University on the evening of October 18th your report stated that Dr. Fort advocated "the banning of alcohol and tobacco farmers". Not only is that not what Dr. Fort said, but it also misrepresents one of his basic contentions. What Dr. Fort asked for was the "banning of all advertising and promotion of alcohol and tobacco."

Later, during the discussion in the Colonial Lounge, Dr. Fort was asked specifically if he favored the prohibition of alcohol and tobacco. He answered that he did not and went on to explain that prohibition has not proven to be successful in reducing the use of a particular substance.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

THE EDITORS

A Long Time Coming

To the Editor:

Life is full of small pleasures, many of which can be experienced and appreciated only after suffering minor hardships and setbacks. Life in the University community is no different in this aspect; however, small conveniences are established to overcome some of these annoying setbacks. Unfortunately, some of these seemingly insignificant student services are often discontinued for lack of funds, only to be sorely missed once they are gone. One of these small conveniences deemed unnecessary by the "powers that be" was the freshman mugbook. Discontinued a few years ago, the publishing of this booklet was previously subsidized by student funds distributed "free" to students who found some worth in a collection of freshmen pictures, names and addresses. The students were not really receiving it free, but actually paying for the Mugbook indirectly, in that a small portion of their University bill was allocated for printing costs, whether they received one or not.

This year, midst nostalgic acclamation from many students to revive the Mugbook, Greek Council undertook the project, to bring to the Class of 1975 in particular and the campus community in general an improved version of the little maroon book that's been absent on this campus for the past two or three years. Unfortunately, Greek Council being made up of the fraternities and sororities at UMass, could not possibly fund the project by itself. Attempts to induce co-sponsorship with another student group and advertising by local merchants proved to be for the most part unsuccessful; for student groups on campus were too tight-fisted to gamble any significant sum of money on the venture, and local merchants had been flooded with advertising demands from a number of 5-College and local publications, which greatly reduced their available funds for further advertising in printed materials. To further complicate matters, 660 pictures of incoming freshmen were destroyed in late August, many of them irreplacably lost. Due to these problems deadlines were extended and costs of the project increased. Where we had once intended to distribute the Mugbook for a nominal fee to those that wanted it on Registration Day, we now realized sales wouldn't be able to begin until mid-October at a questionable rate of $1.50 per copy. However, we feel that the publication of the Mugbook is worthwhile and we hope that you, too, find some value in our book-whether that value be practical or nostalgic. Whether this project continues in the ensuing years depends on its current success.

Therefore, please accept our humble apologies for the delay and cost of this year's Mugbook and also our thanks for your forebearance. Also, I would like to take this opportunity to personally thank all those who devoted their time and effort to make the freshman mugbook directory and pleasures, and hope you feel the same. So, without any further delay or excuses, and with our best wishes to you for the coming academic year, we present the UMass Mugbook for the Class of 1975. It has been a long time in coming.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Defining His Role

By RICHIE GEFFIN

The greatest problem that a draft counselor runs into is the lack of understanding from the people that he counsels as to just what his role is. There are two great misconceptions that I run into very often that need to be dispelled.

First of all, the draft counselor is not a member of the selective service system. We can't write out deferments and we can't call up the local boards and direct them to do anything. What we can do is to give out the information that we have and let you know the best way to use it for whatever your purpose. The emphasis though is on YOU. We can't do anything for you; you have to be interested enough in yourself to want to do some work.

Secondly, draft counselors are not army recruitors. We don't know if you'll go to Vietnam if you enlist or if the Navy is safer than the Coast Guard. Furthermore we're not interested in that kind of information; we're not interested in anything that provides fuel to the fire. Most of us that are in draft counseling, are in it for two reasons; because we want to help our brothers and because we are politically opposed to war and the draft. Our main interest is keeping people out, we have no information in other areas.

On to things that we are interested in; freshmen, all is not lost for your student deferments. President R. Milhouse Nixon still hasn't issued the executive order that is necessary to do away with them; so we don't know if it will be retroactive to the beginning of the semester. Some local boards are processing freshmen as 1A anyway. Until Milhouse signs that executive order you are still entitled to a student deferment. You don't have to accept the 1A; you can still appeal for a 2S (student deferment). If you do nothing within 30 days you lose your appeal rights; you are saying to the board that you accept the classification (it must be appealed within 30 days of the date of mailing which is stamped on the classification card). If you have any questions see us in 923 of the campus center, or call to find out where the other counseling centers are located on campus.

Now, for politically oriented people we've started a new movement. In the past we've talked about people with high numbers sending in CO applications anyway, as a political statement towards war. Well, we would like to expand on that a little bit. People in Washington who make all the policy concerning not only CO procedure but the war policy also, have no contact at all with CO applications. So they are completely isolated from what we are saying. What we are suggesting is for people who are putting in CO applications or people just interested in making a statement about their feelings toward war, sending carbon copies of their CO applications to the white house and to the national director of the selective service system. It's about time that they heard what we have to say about war. Maybe we can turn some heads in Washington. Send a copy of your CO statement to anyone that you want to hear your views. Make sure that we are heard.

Free 'T'ai Chi' Film

A free showing sponsored by Free U., of a film on T'ai Chi Chuan will be screened on Wednesday the 27th of Oct. in the Campus Center room 175 at 8, 8:45 and 9:30 P.M.

T'ai Chi Chuan is an ancient Chinese calisthenic designed to center one's mind and body. T'ai Chi cannot be literally translated; the words relate to energy within the body, to life, to air and to the mind. Chuan refers to boxing.

The Chinese say that whoever practices T'ai Chi will gain the pliability of a child, the health of a lumberjack, and the peace of mind of a sage. T'ai Chi stresses slow respiration, balance, relaxed postures - it promotes deep breathing, digestion, the functioning of the internal organs and blood circulation.

"Nature is always in motion - Man also should strengthen himself without interruption."

I Ching

The film was produced this past summer by Demian, with the assistance of Ting Barrow of the Smith College Theater Department and Dave Newcombe of the UMass Photo Center.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo rides high when lights are flashing, the show is in progress and romance is on horizon. These persons are the spice of life if not exactly the salt of the earth. Natives of this sign are physically attractive to Aries, are drawn in same manner to Sagittarius, harmonize mentally with Libra. Leo is susceptible to flattery, is extravagant and is a better host than a guest.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Stress on originality, advancement, utilization of your natural pioneering instincts. Get going. Break shackles of restraint. There is room at top and a special place for you.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with ability to utilize knowledge. What has lain dormant is brought into play. Trust intuition. One who teaches has special lesson for you. Be receptive.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Dig deep for information about costs, priorities. Reject the superficial. Scorpio person can aid cause. Know this and throw aside false pride. Expand horizons. You can gain without overspending.
CANCER (June 21-July 22): Judgment, intuition may not be up to par. Defer to male, partner. Your time is coming, play waiting game. Intelligent concession now works to your overall benefit. Stress versatility.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Welcome change of scenery. Stress is on variety, communication. Get going on basic chores. Keep resolutions concerning work, health. Check appointments, reservations. Remember anniversary.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Accent on dealings with children, opposite sex. Changes due to occur on home front. One who previously disagreed makes surprising admission. Be gracious. Show that you are mature, understanding.
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Highlight security; take long range view. Build on solid base. Separate fact from fancy; heed advice offered by family member. Property values, taxes demand attention. Be thorough.
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent on dealings with neighbors, close relatives. Capricorn person figures prominently. Sense of humor now can become valuable ally. Know this, be willing to laugh at own foibles.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Collect what you need. Fill in gaps; tie loose ends. Better for finishing than for beginning projects. Know this and act accordingly. Aries person sets good example. Advertise wares.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Cooperate with Scorpio person. Cycle high, circumstances turn in your favor. You should strive for greater independence of thought, action. Welcome challenges. Take initiative.
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Association with hospital, institution, charitable project is emphasized. You do some fine work behind scenes. Quiet approach now is most constructive. Throw off secret fears. Be positive.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Stress on area related to hopes, wishes, friendships. Light touch should be advocated. Entertain and be entertained. Leave details to others. Do some personal campaigning. You become more popular.
IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you work hard and play hard; there are seldom halfway measures where you are concerned. Greatest financial security indicated in your middle years. Opposite sex finds you appealing. You usually work hard for what you achieve. But you are able to hold on to what you earn. In upcoming months, you will embark on new adventure destined for success.

Commentary

Bruins Sluggish

By STEVE GERSHMAN

Anyone watching the Bruin's lately should have noticed a very definite sluggish, lazy appearance. Since the beginning of preseason, this talented group has not come near its potential. With the talent on this team, the Bruins should win virtually all of their games and breeze through the playoffs. Unfortunately this won't happen.

Last season the Bruins ran rampant through the National Hockey League and broke an amazing number of records. But, come playoff time, the Bruins fell flat on their overconfident faces. All season long the Bruins read their highly touting press clippings and believed they were immortals. They expected Montreal to fall down in awe before their might. Well, someone forgot to tell Montreal to read the same clippings and that old tired bunch of veterans handed the Bruins a humiliating lesson.

During the off season, the Bruins management resembled bank tellers the way they handed out money. They made Tom Yawkey and the Red Sox seem cheap in comparison. For a team that lost the Stanley Cup, the Bruins are the highest paid team in N.H.L. history. So far they have spent more time counting their money than playing hockey. The Bruins management should have learned a lesson from the Red Sox collapse after the 1967 pennant. It is obvious that overpaying breeds content and laziness, a player's downfall. An athlete getting less money will be hungrier for championship money, than a player getting paid more. The championship may mean a lot, but face it, money is the name of the game.

Coach Tom Johnson started out right by cutting off the Bruins' outside activities. This should get the Bruins back to thinking hockey instead of their pocketbooks. The next step should be to bring up a few minor league stars to challenge some of the complacent veterans for jobs. Players like Ivan Boulderiv, Gary Peters, and Bob Stewart of the Braves are all major league caliber, and could shape up the Bruins. When a player sees his job in jeopardy, a sudden change usually appears. If this doesn't work, a quick trip to the Minors will do wonders fast. If the Bruins don't wake up soon though, Boston may be in for a disappointing spring again.

In other long races UMass runners did well. In the much acclaimed Gardner, Mass. 11 mile road race ten runners finished with varying results. Tom Derderian got a wrist watch for 13th place, Peter Crisci in 15th place got a pair of track shoes. Graduate student Dick Fahey, formerly of Holy Cross, finished 16th. Don Dunsky placed 17th and Chris Chambers ran in 22nd. Freshman Steve Brown placed 24th with Roger Natsaka, Wayne Lucas, Peter Stasz and Bill Seville following in the 120-man field.

There were 120 men and one woman in the field. UMass sophomore theater major Charlotte Lettis finished the hilly 11 mile course in 75th place. She has only been running since late June of this year when she gave up smoking.

Pete Stasz and Bill Seville also ran in a 6-1/4 mile race in west Springfield on Monday. Stasz finished 4th and Seville placed 17th.

Next Sunday's race will start at 3 p.m.

The top ten in Monday's Recreational Brownies and Cider orchard Cross Country race:

1. Brad Kron, Sofld	11:17.9
2. Orel Tauler, Spain	11:44
3. Ken Kimball	11:58
4. Brad Powell	12:04
5. James Lineham	12:16
6. Dave Sarrette	12:28
7. Bob Whitney	12:29
8. Jim Herren	12:35
9. Phil St. Pierre	12:35
10. Bob Kakerbeck	13:17

Frosh Gridders Bomb URI

By BILL BALLOU

If you liked Custer's Last Stand, then you would have loved Saturday's freshman football game. The University of Rhode Island Rams freshman team came out fumbling, and the UMass frosh, led by quarterback Fred Kelliher, came out firing, with the result being a lopsided 44-7 victory for the Redmen.

If any win can be classified as a total team effort, then this one by the Redmen fits the bill perfectly. Eight separate players put points on the board for UMass, Fred Kelliher threw for three touchdowns, Dave Modugno for two, and Tim Reilly passed for a two-point conversion. Offensively, Rhode Island could do nothing against a fired-up Redmen defense that consistently came up with the big play when needed and time and time again capitalized on Ram errors to set up scoring chances for the offense.

The first period of this game belonged to Fred Kelliher and the sticky-fingered defense that picked off two URI passes and recovered a fumble inside the Rhode Island ten to set up a score.

Right from the opening kick-off the Redmen marched 47 yards to the Ram 27 yard line before they were finally stopped and forced to go for three. John Ames got the call and banged it home from the 34 yard line to give the frosh a 3-0 lead. Counting the 10 yards in the end zone, it was a 44 yard kick, and went over the crossbar with plenty of room to spare.

Coach Bill Maxwell sent his reserves in to gain some game experience and it was like releasing hungry dogs in a butcher shop. They simply ate Rhode Island up.

In the remaining nine minutes there were four touchdowns scored, three by the Redmen and one by Rhode Island. The first came when cornerback Bob Parrott returned a Jim Conway punt 60 spectacular yards on a play that had the URI punting team wondering if maybe Parrott was just a mirage. New quarterback Tim Reilly hit Tom Szematowicz for two and it was 30-0.

The final two minutes saw Dave Modugno and George Siegrist do a job on the Rhode Island defense, with the result being two more scores for the Massachusetts frosh.

Modugno hit Gary Mika for one TD and Bob Blout for the other; Siegrist returned a kick-off to midfield and ran the Rhode Island defense ragged from scrimmage to set up Modugno's passing. Dennis Lombardo converted after both scores and when the end came, mercifully for Rhode Island, it was UMass 44 and URI 7.

In a game like this when so many people did so many things so well, it's hard to pick out any individual as being responsible for the victory.

Kelliher was terrific. He passed for three touchdowns and exhibited some great field generalship in doing it. Modugno punted very well and threw two TD passes in the space of 40 seconds. Bob Parrott made a clutch interception and scored on his remarkable punt return. Mike Facchini intercepted a pass and recovered a fumble to set up a TD. John Healy caught two Touchdown tosses, held the ball on the conversions, played on the specialty teams and probably passed out programs before the game. The list could go on indefinitely.

Sabulis Leads Double Life

By MARK VOGLER

(Ed. Note: This is the first of a series of player profiles.

You've probably heard of secret agents leading double lives. Well, here's a short sketch about Redman gridder Joe Sabulis who also fits in the same boat. The star linebacker lives in two different worlds, nearly as distinct as day and night.

He plays his position with passion and attacks from his post with as much gusto as mean old Dick Butkus. He loves the game as if he's been in it all his life and he refuses to throw in the towel however bleak the circumstances may seem. That's Joe Sabulis, All Yankee Conference choice for two consecutive campaigns and bucking for it again.

Never would you expect a guy so quiet and reserved as he to do battle on Saturday afternoons. Such a dedicated and conscientious student, how could one associate him with as rugged and a time consuming sport as football?

First year Coach Dick MacPherson may not have all the answers, but he certainly has high words of praise for the Gardner (Mass.) native. He goes so far as to label him the steadiest performer on the squad.

"Joe's a fine lad and a real intent football player. He always does what is asked of him, learns what he is supposed to do, and does it. He has good football games more often than not. He's probably the most consistent football player Saturday after Saturday that we have.

"He's just a great person. And the amazing thing about 'em is how quiet and reserved he is off the football field."

A former schoolboyer from Gardner High (Mass.), Sabulis captained both baseball and football while also competing on the hoop squad. Versatility was his trademark, yet he never established himself as outstanding.

Having played end both ways over the course of his high school career, his adjustment to linebacker on the Redman freshman team was not an easy one. But he worked hard at the spot and a collegian starting berth on the varsity mushroomed into reality the following fall.

As a sophomore he roomed with and played alongside of Tom York-an outstanding UMass linebacker in his day. This certainly paid dividends. Both were YanCon first team picks to the secondary unit as Vic Fusia's eleven copped the crown that year, only to be denied the coveted bean pot on the account of an ineligibility ruling. They were 6-3 overall.

Last season Sabulis not only was tops on the conference honor roll, but also got good grades on the All-New England team--first. He was a second stringer in the All East selections. With all this behind him he's a cinch to bundle up even more honors before he's through playing for UMass.

All this notoriety for Sabulis poses possibilities of his being drafted by some pro outfit. But at 6'3" and 210 lbs., he doesn't think his dimensions are big enough to make it.

As he put it: "Naturally I'd jump for the opportunity to play if drafted. But looking at it realistically, if you're not big and fast enough, you don't stand much of a chance. Likewise I imagine that my size will be a major hindrance, and I'm not one of the faster men at my position."

MacPherson's thoughts on the matter: "I think he's got to grow a little bit more and weigh a little bit more. At the present time he'll be a late round draft choice and should definitely be brought to camp by some professional team."

With the change of the coaching staff last spring Sabulis has had to adapt himself to MacPherson's strategy which would tend to differ somewhat from the Fusia system. Asked if this had caused him any difficulty or forced him to alter his style of play, he replied: "Well, I've had some problems this year containing the quarterback on the rollouts, basically because the other teams are going more to the outside than they did a year ago. But other than that I'm playing my normal game. As long as I read my keys right, respond to them well, and be where I'm supposed to be, things occur favorably."

"Let me say that we've had a pretty disappointing season so far. I feel that we can beat the rest of the teams, with maybe the exception of B.C. We still can muser a pretty good season. This squad personnel wise is really a good team.

"We make too many mistakes. But if we can cut down on mistakes we can really get going."

Powder Puff Football Playoff Action

By EARLE BARROLL

In last Thursday nights Powder Puff Football playoff action the Melville Whalers defeated the Field Goals 6-0 to emerge victorious as Residence Hall Champions.

The only touchdown scored, during the second quarter, by Janet Manning proved sufficient enough to capture the title for the Whalers. It was mainly a defensive game played by the usual first rate defense of Marcia Lappin, Jane Andrews, Janice Lazzaro, Corrine Karahalas, Bonnie Bufalo, June Manning, Pat Murphy and Karen Fruzzetti. They performed exceptionally well with two timely interceptions by Karen Fruzzetti and Janice Lazzaro.

After the first touchdown the strong Field Goal defense prevented the Whalers from successfully scoring again. The offense, consisting of Janet Manning, June Manning, Pat Murphy, Bonnie Bufalo, Nancy Fink, Karen Fruzzetti and Mary Young, did smoosh past the Field Goal defense for many first downs but no more points. Mere Schmidt came through with an exceptional punt in the third quarter which made the Field Goal offense's task that much more difficult, but the Whaler defense's job that much easier.

The victory was a true team effort held together by the coaches Paul Scalera, Wally Shaw and John Barnoski.

Also in Thursday nights playoff action Alpha Chi Omega defeated Gamma Sigma 12-0. The Alpha Chi coaches, Mr. Wolf and Mr. Mush stared with pride and disbelief as the Alpha Chi "Eager Beavers" rushed their way to the Sorority Division Championship. Neither the recent loss of star end Jean Hannigan and center Sue Torres, nor the poor playing conditions, prevented the super psyched Beavers from keeping the tough Gamma Sig squad scoreless.

Alpha Chi first got on the scoreboard when quarterback Alexis Klein broke through the strong GSS defense to get the initial big six. From then on, Alpha Chi completely dominated the first half. Although it was basically a defensive game, quarterback "Killer" Klein completed a pass to Betsi Acker to give Alpha Chi a 12-0 lead over previously undefeated Gamma Sigma Sigma.

The second half saw little action as both teams were kept from scoring further. Paula "Masher" MacDonald, "Evil" Evie Anderson, and Sylvia "Slushy" Brackett led the defense to a shutout of the service sorority. Also outstanding were "Dangerous" Dee Girouard, "Mugger" McGrory and "Sensational" Sue Stewart.

TONIGHT'S PLAY-OFF ACTION-Mushrooms vs. Whalers at 5:45 p.m. on Field 2.

UConn Ties Redmen On Late FG

By DAN KAMAL

STORRS, Conn. For those fans who might have come to the game at the last minute, Saturday, they didn't miss a thing. "All" the scoring in the 3-3 UMass tie with the University of Connecticut occurred in the last minute and five seconds.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

The way the game had gone, the clutch 26 yard field goal by Mark Palau with 1:05 left appeared to be more than enough to give the Redmen their second victory of the season.

But it was not to be as UConn quarterback Ray Tellier electrified the hometown Parents' Day crowd of 14,386 with a last minute drive of seven plays that covered 55 yards and was capped by a 37 yard field goal by Bob Innis with seven seconds left.

It would have been a particularly big day for Palau, the all-New England third baseman who played an integral part in beating the Huskies last year for the Yankee Conference baseball championship. The first-year kicker was quite jubilant after driving the tie-breaking boot straight through the uprights, but his jubilation, like that of his teammates, was short-lived.

As UMass coach Dick MacPherson said after the game, "The way our defense was playing, I thought we had them." However, three Tellier completions and a facemask penalty against the Redmen brought the Huskies right back.

Both teams had their chances to put points on the board, but neither could capitalize. UMass had a field goal attempt blocked midway through the first quarter when a bad snap from center delayed the placement of the ball just enough for the UConn defensive line to break through and block it.

Early in the second frame, a great defensive effort by the Redmen stopped the Huskies twice inside the UMass one yard line with Joe Sabulis making a good tackle on the other UConn quarterback. Rick Robustelli, on a fourth and six inches away from the goal-line situation.

Then, just before the end of the half, a Redman drive which started on the UConn 47 was halted by an interception by Husky safety Bob Warren on the five yard line. It was a play symbolic of the "almosts" throughout the game. "We told Piel all we needed was a field goal and that he should throw the ball away if he had any doubts, but inexperience took over. He's going to be with us for three years, and all he needs is confidence in his play calling. We'll stick with him," noted MacPherson.

UConn put on a sustained drive early in the third quarter, which ended in an Innis field goal attempt again from 37 yards out, but this one was wide. The way things were going at that point, a 0-0 tie, a very rare occurence indeed, was well within possibility.

Connecticut's third interception of a Piel Pennington pass, again by Warren, stalled another UMass scoring bid. By this time getting into the endzone for both teams appeared to be as hard as getting into a Cage concert last year.

Then a great punt by Jack O'Neil, whose boots had brought the Redmen out of trouble more than once in the game, put the Huskies back on their own 24. On the first play, Tellier was hit by UMass linebacker Tim Edwards and fumbled with Bill DeFlavio recovering. Seven plays later, after working the ball into the middle of the field, UMass went ahead on Palu's field goal.

Just like last year, however, the Redmen gave Connecticut a tie.

MAC'S MEDALS: Despite the tie, Coach MacPherson expressed his pleasure with the defense which "stabilized itself"...He singled out Jack O'Neil who was "super-he enabled us to get back in the ballgame with his punts"...He also mentioned linebacker Doug Winslow who did "a great job" and safety Ray Bouchard who "played exceptionally well"....

METALLO SWEEPS: Paul Metallo follows a good block and picks up a few yards against UConn Saturday at Storrs. The 5'10, 182 pound halfback had a busy day as he carried 32 times for 114 yards. (MDC photo by Paul Horwitz)

Harriers Win Sixth Straight

By JAY NESTOR

The UMass harriers are really rolling now with their stunning defeat of Holy Cross last Saturday. A fine one-two finish and overwhelming team depth characterized the Redmen victory.

Eleven maroon clad runners crossed the finish line before the third Crusader. Holy Cross could only place two runners in the top thirteen places in this Yankee Conference dual meet. It must be emphasized that Holy Cross was not considered a pushover, and the Redman domination shows how UMass has progressed over the season.

Tom Derderian led the attack as he won the 5.2 mile race with a time of 26.32. He sprinted out after the early leading Crusaders, and after catching them was never upended. Paul Segersten followed three seconds behind as he and Derderian accepted the front running chores. Dennis McCormack and Dick Crooke captured third and fourth places for the Cross and prevented complete domination by the Redmen.

Fifth to thirteenth position is virtually a UMass rollcall. Coach O'Brien pointed out that a Redman crossed the finish line every 5.7 seconds, and this means close knit running to say the least. Peter Crisci finished in fifth, followed closely by Mike McCusker, who has come on extremely strong since the beginning of the season. strong since the beginning of the season.

Bob Sullivan, Roger Nasatka and Don Dunsky rounded off the top seven. Rick Barry, Doug O'Connell, Chris Chambers, and Wayne Lucas all finished in front of the third Cursader, exemplifying the Redman depth. The final score was UMass-21, Holy Cross-40.

With the Yankee Conference Championship at stake this coming Saturday, Coach O'Brien is faced with quite a dilemma. It can all be summed up with a comment that he made following the meet, "I guess we'll have to flip coins to pick the top seven."

The fact is that there are thirteen members of the UMass team who have every right to represent the team at the Conference meet, but the rule says that no more than seven from any team can compete. This means that six will not run for the Varsity.

Whatever decision he makes, O'Brien will pick seven top rate runners, but he'll also be dropping six very talented runners. It's a problem that other coaches dream of having.

X-C Coach Exhausted...

"I'll shoot the guy who made up this course," said Cross Country coach Ken O'Brien after his 19th place finish in Monday's recreational cross country race. "He looked terrible," commented one of the varsity runners as the coach trudged laboriously up and down the slippery hills of the new orchard cross country course which he and his runners created earlier this fall.

The race is held every weekend sponsored by the cross country team. Twenty-five runners finished. Cider and brownies were served after the race. Prizes of an 8" x 10" photo of each runner finishing will be given to the top ten of this race at next week's run. Ten photos were offered to both men and women but only one women started the race. The top ten men are listed below.

Booters Drop First To Tufts, 2-1

By STEVE FERBER

In one of the most beautiful displays of passing prowess, the UMass soccer team dropped a heartbreaker to Tufts 2-1 on Saturday, knocking UMass from the unbeaten ranks, and making the chances slim, if not impossible, for the Redmen to receive a post-season tournament bid.

Tufts meanwhile was running its slate up to 7-0-0 and are likely to move up from their number nine slot in New England. But the story of the game were those missed opportunities by the Redmen. Coach Berryman's words of "so many opportunities" echoed through one's minds as UMass generally outplayed and outhustled the visitors, but found themselves still one goal down after 88 minutes.

With only 85 seconds gone in the contest Tufts struck, on the first of their two picture goals. Bill Harrison dribbled up the right side and centering the ball, hit Craig Weeks right in front of the nets. UMass goalie John Kiah had been drawn to the right side by Harrison, and had no chance what-so-ever as Weeks drilled it into the left hand corner. Thus UMass was down by a goal for the first time this season, and the fact that the goal came so suddenly must have whilted the Redmen's confidence.

UMass slowly gathered control, and at 11:55 came back to tie the game with their only goal of the afternoon. Steve Blanchette flew down the left wing after taking a pass from Mike Nugent, and in identical Harrison-type action, centered the pass to the net-bound Lindo Alves. Alves put it away for his 7th of the season and the Redmen had the equalizer.

Not until the fourth period was there another tally, but between those two scores, there was a great deal of Redmen domination to be seen.

The epitome of domination came in the first half of the second quarter when UMass controlled action for 12 straight minutes. Not once during those 12 minutes did Kiah touch the ball, and only once did the ball cross mid-field. UMass was putting on an incredible offensive show, but the ball simply wouldn't go in. Alves was close twice, and Blanchette nearly put one by, but all was for naught as the halftime score read 1-1. All of the Redmen's spectacular passing made it a spectorial delight, while frustrating the hell out of the UMass squad.

Ed Doherty, perhaps the biggest reason for the UMass ball control, was still going strong as the second 44 began. Doherty was all over the field, doing a tremendous job of hustling and tackling, and it was just a sad series that gave Tufts the win, and Doherty and his teammates the loss.

The huge throng of fans up on the hill saw a third quarter in which the Redmen bench was going absolutely nuts. Everyone on the bench was up, standing, and screaming, as if the game meant the East Coast Championship. It was quite a display of team support.

The game decider then came, with just under five minutes gone in the final period. It came as a result of the Redmen's failure to get back in time after one of their own corner kicks. Thus Tufts had a fast break, and as the Redmen defense back peddled, Tufts came hustling down the field, three on three. Gomez hit Harrison on the left wing, and again Harrison centered it. Again with Kiah drawn out Bill Gehling was there and into the right side went the game-winner.

The closest UMass came was on another Augie Calheno corner kick, on which Tom Coburn footed the ball just over the cross-bar from some five or ten feet out.

The loss put the Redmen at 5-1-1, and if nothing else, they could be proud of the fact that they held Tufts to their lowest goal production of the year. The Redmen, in defeat, did look strong, as their passing at times, was far superior to any of the six games previous to Saturday's battle. But their six game unbeaten skein was over and all the passing, all the opportunities meant nothing.

SCHOOL of EDUCATION UNIVERSITY of MASSACHUSETTS

FALL MARATHON '71 NOVEMBER 8 - 12

This insert is paid for and compiled by the School of Education.

PRELIMINARY SCHEDULE

OPEN EDUCATION INTEGRATED DAY

The Interstate Staff Development Cooperative (Interstate SDC) will offer a series of Presentation - Discussions pertaining to the integrated day concept of individualized education. Times and places will be announced in the final schedule of the Marathon.

THE INTEGRATED DAY

What is it? An introduction, film and talk by Peter Roberts, one of the directors of the Interstate SDC.

TEACHERS AND CHILDREN IN THE INTEGRATED DAY

Slide presentation of English infant and junior schools, followed by a discussion of the roles of teachers and students in the integrated day, with Peter Wilson, one of the directors of the Interstate SDC.

IN-SERVICE WORKSHOPS FOR THE INTEGRATED DAY

Slide-Tape presentation and talk by Dr. Masha Rudman, one of the directors of the Interstate SDC. (Presentation is on Summer 1971, Integrated Day Workshop, School of Education, UMass.)

EVALUATION AND THE INTEGRATED DAY

9:30-12:00 a.m., Friday, November 12. Presentations, panel and small group discussions. Included in the panel will be: Dr. Anne Bussis and/or Dr. Theodore Chittenden, Education Testing Service, Princeton, N.J. Co-authors of "Analysis of an Approach to Open Education."

Pat Carini, Director of Research and Evaluation, Prospect School, Bennington, Vt.

Mary Lilla Sherburne, Open Education Advisory, Washington, D.C.

Susan Thomas, Training, Development and Research Associates, Boston, Co-author of "Characteristics of Open Education: Toward an Operational Definition."

FALL MARATHON

DWIGHT W. ALLEN

Marathons over the past two and one-half years have shown that solid learning can take place in a context outside the normal course schedule and can stimulate fresh thinking about goals and programs in education. This week is a continuation of the expression of our commitment to a full and vigorous process of experimentation and search for useful educational alternatives.

This year the School of Education has dedicated itself to combatting the problem of institutionalized racism. We hold that racism is one of the most challenging issues facing social institutions today.

Wednesday will focus especially on the problems projected by racism in our society with many of the events being concerned with that issue. The various School Centers will be discussing their special concerns regarding racism. Workshops and discussion leaders will share with us their knowledge and expertise in finding solutions to those concerns.

Furthur details on the programs being offered for this day will be found within the preliminary schedule itself. Be reminded that we are expecting other contributions than those listed in this paper.

As usual the School of Education Marathon will be a platform for expressing new ideas in many areas.

Tuesday will be dedicated, mostly, to the Teacher Training Program at the school with several experts from the Northeast being on hand to make their contributions.

Running throughout the entire Marathon will be presentations on such educational concepts as the Integrated Day, Alternatives to Innovations, Special Education for Global Survival, Micro-teaching, Alternative Schools, and many others. There will, of course, be many suplimental media presentations also.

TEACHER EDUCATION DAY TUESDAY NOVEMBER 9

Tuesday, November 9 should be of particular interest to all University undergraduates who want to become either elementary or secondary school teachers.

The TPPC (Teacher Preparation Program Committee) of the School will present "The New Look in Teacher Education," dissemination information on the teacher education program for 1971/1972 academic year. This program has been designed to give you-the-student a variety of options in the planning of your program.

At a large general session on Tuesday morning all of these program options will be highlighted so that you can see the total program and your range of choices for next year. Late in the morning and on Tuesday afternoon there will be many smaller sessions where individual program components will be discussed in more detail. These meetings will give you the opportunity to meet with School of Education faculty members in charge of these programs and with other people you may end up working closely with next year. Small sessions will include such areas as early childhood education, urban education, international education variation on METS, METEP, Mark's Meadow internship, programs.

In addition there will be an open house in room 121 from 9 to 3 on Tuesday. Please come and ask any questions you may have pertaining to teacher education. Advisors, TPPC alternative program representatives, TPPC administrators, and career placement office representatives will be available. Refreshments will be served.

Tuesday, November 9 will be an opportunity for you to see the Teacher Education program in its entirety. In between you might also enjoy other marathon events scheduled for Tuesday.

Westfield Detention Center Players Will Perform at the Marathon

The Westfield players will be performing the play "A Trip for Tina" at the Marathon on Tuesday, November 9 and Thursday, November 11 at 7:30 p.m. The play is an attempt at a realistic presentation of some of the contributing factors that lead a kid to being committed to the Westfield Detention Center starting with the home life of the young offender.

The Players is a new theater group composed of the kids of the Westfield Detention Center. They are the individuals responsible directly for the play, including the writing of the script, props, stage work and cast of characters. The play has been shown several times in the five college area and has been enthusiastically received by those who attended.

A scene from "A Trip for Tina," a play by the Westfield Players, which reveals some insights on Juvenile Delinquency. Curtain time will be 7:30 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday at Marks Meadow Auditorium during the Marathon.

INSTITUTIONAL RACISM FOCUS ON WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 10

The School of Education has committed itself to deal with the issue of institutional racism as its top priority. In an attempt to operationalize that commitment, a steering committee was formed to initiate action and to aid in communications and education. As a part of that task, the steering committee will coordinate a program of films and speakers concerning racism during the Marathon. The major focus on racism will take place on Wednesday, November 10, although there will be presentations throughout the week.

Because of the deadline for the preliminary schedule, the rest of these presentations is incomplete. Professor Dalton Jones, from the African Studies and Research Center at Cornell University will present a workshop on Wednesday, November 10, intitled "Cognitive Development In Black Children: Perception, Language, and Social Learning". Films to be shown during the week include: "Huelga!", "Nothing But A Man," "Harvest of Shame," "Salt of the Earth" and a film concerning the imprisonment of Japanese Americans in concentration camps in this country during World War II.

Be sure to check the final schedule for a more complete listing of speakers and films.

Paid for and compiled by the School of Education.

This preliminary schedule serves two purposes. The first is to inform interested people that the School of Education at the University of Massachusetts will hold its Fall Marathon during the week of November 8-12. Secondly, it will give the reader an idea of some of the events that will be a part of the Marathon. It must be stressed, however, that the preliminary schedule is only a partial listing of events, and that the final schedule, available during marathon week, will contain almost double the number of events listed here.

CREATIVE RESOURCES

A self-evolving learning environment will be conducted by Ronnie Kleine and Linda Rabel for the entire period of the marathon.

The space of room 126 will be used to create an ongoing process of meaningful activity that will increase the level of not only interpersonal relationship, but also a relationship with the environment. Those entering will be required by the nature of the continuing activity to experience, hopefully contribute to the evolution of the identity of the space. Members of the community are invited to bring to it any item, thought, idea, activity, resource; tangible or intangible, to leave it or share it, or to come see what others have brought-structure, design, and content will be constantly changing as nature and needs become felt.

CENTER FOR EDUCATIONAL RESEARCH — COMMENTARY

"A difference to be a difference must make a difference. If the classroom doesn't make a difference to the student, then there's no reason why the student should warm a seat."

—Assoc. Prof. David Coffing
School of Education
University of Massachusetts

Assoc. Prof. David Coffing considers himself an environmentalist, his chief concern being human beings. And since the destination of a human being largely depends upon his learning (which may, or may not occur in the classroom), Coffing is concerned with the learning process.

The Educator contends that other educators, by ignoring the uniqueness of the individual in their classroom approach, are "defining ahead of time who they are going to flunk out. We define flunk-outs by the treatment we impose." he explains.

"Tradition looks at education as equal exposure to education...the little red schoolhouse. You can go there til you flunk out. But is that equality of education," questions Coffing.

"You don't have to flunk out anybody," insists the Professor, opening a Pandora's box of implications. "Everybody can come out the same. The objective of education should be everybody learns the same amount."

"We always think in terms of BETTER learners and POOR learners," says Coffing, suggesting another way to look at it. "Could be better learners are better equipped to learn under THAT situation."

Unaware

Woe! That's plenty to think about. A lot to tackle. And educators have hardly begun the most educators are unaware of the whole learning process. But all these variables interact nevertheless, assures Coffing. "All are operating at one time with different strengths."

Coffing warns, "The more capable we are of producing a goal, the more careful we must be in defining our goals. Now we don't have to define exactly where we are going, because most people don't get there."

"How do we know when a child is through with the ninth grade? We know because it's June—not that he's reached a certain level in his education. Some kids we held back if they reach the level in March. We don't really know what ninth-gradedness should be."

Coffing prophesies, "Once a common goal has been established, we can bring all children up to this level by determining what kinds of paths are best for what kinds of children."

Fathom the boundless implications...the potential of education that could be realized if the learning process of the individual were recognized as the key to education.

The Media

Rapidly gaining recognition as a powerful tool in the process are the multiple uses of audio-visual equipment—the media.

"From birth to high school graduation a student spends, on the average, 15,000 hours in front of the T.V.; 300 hours in front of a movie screen and 12,000 hours in the classroom. That's more time in front of the tube than in front of the teacher," observed Coffing. The indication is obvious — the media is a powerful influence on our lives. Geared to the individual's learning needs, it promises much.

"It's very important to consider what you learn from the 'Flintstones,' 'I Love Lucy' and 'Mission: Impossible,' " adds Coffing. "That's were the kids learn their social science...ways of dealing with people...what you can say to the boss...interpersonal relations."

Big Fault

"The big fault in education is lack of knowledge of the process," charges Coffing, who is trying awfully hard himself to nail down the variables and identify their relationships. He observes, "The key to education is matching the treatment to the learner's style."

Some students may be morning-afternoon people, others are afternoon-evening people, still others are morning- evening people, notes Coffing. Some students learn better in small groups, others in large groups, some through picture treatment, others by the printed word. There are many individual variables that should be taken into consideration revealed the Educator.

The learning environment itelf can be a weighty factor: its physical setting, characteristics, events therein, class size, acoustics, color of walls, presence of authority figure, presentation devices and percentage of media use, amount and kinds of student participation, observes Coffing.

He notes instructional variables of teachers will affect the learning process adopted by the student. "Course requirements are read by the students from the teacher's behavior, not his words. For example, the teacher says be able to apply principles learned. But the final exam deals with amount rate learned."

Learner variables include the student's motivation, abilities, attitude and aptitude, demagraphics (age, sex, social economic status, where person is in social environment, number in family, etc.) as well as starting knowledge of course subject matter, creativity in perceptual ingestion and problem solving. Of course. Yet who ever thought?

Course variables include "subject matter constraints, level of presentation adopted, and whether course is elected or required".

Show Them

Pursuing the diverse potential of film, Coffing noted, "One of the most powerful instruction strategies I know of to improve behavior, is to film it, look at it, and do it again. You don't have to tell people much when you show them their own behavior."

"Kideo-Video," emanating of the School of Education at UMass., does just that. Elementary school children plan their own program, then, armed with cameras and sound equipment, they film themselves. Their programs have been viewed on Channel 40 T.V.

Within the next 10 years, Coffing predicts networks will be owned by the school systems and universities. People will learn at home through individual programming. self-paced stores cassettes will plug into the family T.V. And the growth of cable television will witness a mushrooming of stations and programs to choose from.

"Wouldn't it be nice in an area where a portion of the population speaks Spanish," projected Coffing excitedly. "You could have one audio-track in English, another in Spanish. It's within our capacity."

Schools will become repositories of information, "like a library" revealed Coffing, peering into the future. Their role will include determining "how people process information best"...and arriving at the best formula for each individual.

Technology would enable the student to go to the library, "record an hour cassette in 45 seconds, and have his own copy to take home."

The improved efficiency will allow educators to pursue a new role, that of humanizer — making people better human beings. "More time could be devoted to humanistic explorations," continued Coffing. "That to me is the essence of education. We have to accomplish these things. Today families leave it up to the schools and the schools leave it up to the families."

Conservative Congressmen Concerned

U.S. Will Respect U.N. China Decision

WASHINGTON (AP)—The United Nations' decision to expel Taiwan will be respected by the United States, Secretary of State William P. Rogers said Tuesday, but the Nixon administration regards it as "a most unfortunate precedent." And some Congress members demanded retaliation.

"This administration deeply regrets the expulsion of the Republic of China and thinks the precedent is a most unfortunate one and will have adverse effects in the future," Rogers said.

Angry Senate and House conservatives urged a cut in U.S. contributions to the United Nations and some members demanded even more drastic action. Others called for continued support of the United Nations as the only hope for world peace.

Declaring "We have a new ball game," Sen. William B. Saxbe R—Ohio, moved to send the $3.2-billion foreign-aid authorization bill, which contains $139 million for U.N.—related activities, back to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

He said at least a week or two should be allowed to pass to give Congress and the country time to "digest" the U.N. action and its implications.

Saxbe's move came as the aid bill came up for Senate debate.

In moving to sidetrack the foreign aid bill temporarily, Saxbe noted that 42 of the 76 nations that voted to expel Nationalist China and 12 of the nations that abstained from voting are listed as beneficiaries in the bill.

To begin a heated and emotional debate now might well lead to ill considered action regarding aid for those nations, he said.

However, Saxbe later withdrew his motion when he became convinced it could not carry. But he said that to vote on the foreign aid measure-in the present atmosphere might bring defeat of the measure-something he wants to avoid.

Sen. Barry Goldwater, R—Ariz., said the United States should quit the United Nations outright and send its headquarters off to "some place like Moscow or Peking."

Senate leaders of both parties, Democrat Mike Mansfield of Montana and Republican Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania, said they have long believed the United States pays too big a share of U.N. expenses and favor cutbacks on that basis, not as punishment for Monday night's vote to seat mainland China and oust Taiwan.

Their position would increase the chance that there will indeed be a reduction in the U.S. contribution in the U.S. contribution, which now totals some $249 million a year.

Sens. James L. Buckley, R—N.Y., and Peter H. Dominick, R—Colo., were drafting legislation to reduce the U.S. payments. Buckley said he seeks a major cut. A spokesman for the New York senator said the measure probably would be proposed later this week as an amendment to the foreign-aid bill.

But other senators cautioned against a punitive cut in the American contribution.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R—Ill., said that would set a dangerous precedent, under which every time a U.N. member lost a vote it could retaliate by withholding funds.

Men on both sides of the issue expressed disappointment and regret at the expulsion of Taiwan.

"I believe, however, that to reduce American support of the United Nations would be an inappropriate response to this unfortunate vote," said Sen. Clifford P. Case, R—N.J.

The White House referred questions to Secretary Rogers. At the State Department Rogers told newsmen he hopes the United Nations won't be weakened but he pointedly told reporters the world organization faces a financial crisis and there is a problem "of whether the United Nations is living beyond its means."

"I think that may be the case," he added.

While noting there are some senators who think the United States is carrying too great a share of the U.N. financial burden, Rogers denied the Nixon administration will attempt to retaliate against the organization.

Rogers said "it just isn't so" that the United States did not really try to prevent Taiwan's explusion.

"We worked hard and so did the co-sponsors," he said, "I don't think there is any suspicion anywhere that this administration didn't do its utmost.

"We just didn't have the votes."

Rogers said one thing won't be changed, and that is America's committment to defend Taiwan and to maintain other obligations to the Nationalists.

"The Republic of China continues to be a respected and valued member of the international community," he said.

When asked what adverse effects could result from the U.N. vote, Rogers said "anytime you have national and international support of the magnitude we had you are bound to have some second thoughts about the United Nations."

World Capitals Laud U.N. Move

LONDON (AP)—The entry of Red China into the United Nations was applauded in many world capitals Tuesday but some officials in Asia regretted the ouster of Nationalist China.

Red China brushed aside all comment.

There was an atmosphere of shock and dismay on Taiwan, home of Nationalist China. A small protesting crowd demonstrated in front of the U.S. Embassy in Taipei.

Britain, which has voted for seating Red China since 1961, hailed the decision, saying the world needs Peking's help in solving problems. A Foreign Office statement said: "We welcome the General Assembly decision to seat Peking."

A West German Foreign Ministry statement declared: "Whoever wants an international easing of tensions cannot ignore China. The family of nations cannot successfully work toward cooperation when a country of this magnitude remains excluded."

An official source in Paris gave this French view of Red China's inclusion in the United Nations: "An act of good sense and realism, both in fact and in law."

A statement from the Vatican said the seating of Red China could aid the cause of peace and justice and was in the spirit of the 1965 appeal of Pope Paul VI for universality in the world body. A second statement expressed regret at Nationalist China's ouster.

There was an absence of comment from most European Communist countries, possibly reflecting the Soviet-Chinese feud.

In independent-minded Communist Yugoslavia, the Tanjug news agency welcomed the decision, saying it gave China its legal rights in the United Nations.

Reaction was more mixed in Asia.

The Philippine Foreign Office welcomed Communist China to the United Nations but said "the principle of universality was not served" by removing the nationalists. President Ferdinand E. Marcos said the Philippines would retain its "fruitful and friendly" relations with Taiwan.

Japan, which has been in a quandary over China policy for a long time, said it will "continue positive efforts" to normalize relations with Communist China.

Prime Minister Eisaku Sato told the House of Representatives that the U.N. decision will in the long run benefit Japan's interests. Sato repeated his position that Japan's effort to keep a seat for Nationalist China was transitional pending a settlement of the Peking- Taipei feud.

Two of Nationalist China's allies in anti-Communism, South Korea and South Vietnam, expressed regret over Nationalist China's ouster from the United Nations. South Vietnam called it an injustice.

But much of the comment from both progovernment and opposition legislators in South Vietnam indicated a feeling that Peking's admission was realistic and might contribute to a settlement of the Vietnam war.

MDC Closeup:

Physical Plant Provides Power, Pollution

By ALAN WRIGHT

There is only one building on the UMass campus that is open and operating 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, for 365 days of the year. It is the physical power plant, which is located directly behind the Campus Center garage and is responsible for producing all the heat, light, electricity, and steam power that this large University needs.

According to Chief Engineer Edward R. Gilbert, who has been at the plant for 15-1/2 years and heads a crew of 28 regular employees, there are approximately 6,038,040 total kilowatt hours purchased per month, along with the use of 88 tons of coal, 168,884,400 pounds of water evaporation (steam) and 312,000 gallons of oil. Of course, varying amounts of power are needed during the different seasons throughout the year. For example, there isn't need for heat production during the summer, but the air-conditioning systems must be kept running.

The billowing smoke clouds, which can be seen perpetually rising from the stacks and pipes of the physical plant complex, contain primarily sulphur dioxide and ash. There is always smoke being emitted because the stack-banked fires inside the boilers must always be kept alive and ready to produce power.

When asked just how harmful these contents of the primarily coal-produced pollution are, Gilbert was quick to refer to a recent issue of COMBUSION MAGAZINE. "Sulfate is now considered good for many green plants", it states. "Any residue is easily washed into the ground by rain." Also, much of the excess ash that is produced at the physical plant is collected and saved to be used with the gravel in making parking lots.

"Every car of coal that comes to the physical plant is first sent to Boston to be checked for its ash and sulphur content, which should be below 1%, although sometimes cars come in with as much as 1.93%" says the chief engineer.

One alternative to burning coal and oil for producing power would be natural gas or nitric oxide, which supposedly doesn't have as many impurities and wouldn't cause as much smoke. However, it is less economically feasible to use this resource. Anyway, operations are already underway at Tillson Farm to build another larger power plant which will also be burning coal and oil.

"We don't like to see a lot of smoke coming out of our chimneys any more than the students or any ecologically concerned person does", claims Mr. Gilbert. "But you see we have a job to do here, and that is to keep everything running, and in order to do that, of course, we must continually be providing power. I firmly believe that the Amherst air is more threatened by surrounding farmers spreading chemicals and dust on windy days than by the pollution that is emitted from the UMass physical plant."

Prison Official Here On Recruiting Drive

By MARGARET KENNEDY

Less than one month after the tragedy at Attica, prison official William Key came to UMass (this week) to recruit psychology and sociology students for work in federal prisons.

Key, a UMass graduate who is now an administrator at Danbury Prison, spoke about federal prisons in a tone different from that which most prison reformers would take.

"Many demonstrators don't know the facts about federal prisons," he said. "All penal institutions are not alike. They differ in the types of inmates they house, in the facilities available, and in the ways in which they're run."

"I cannot speak about prisons collectively; I can only talk about the prisons I've seen and those in which I've worked. Danbury Prison, where I'm stationed now, is not as bleak as many people think."

Danbury is a medium-security prison; most inmates have been convicted of such crimes as check forgery, embezzlement, narcotics violations, or objection to the draft.

"People are friendly; you can see smiling faces there. We do have one cell block which houses 40 prisoners, but everyone else lives in dormitory-style rooms. The cafeteria is comfortable and the food is good."

At Attica, inmates spoke of being "treated like animals"; is this the universal for federal prisons? Keys says no.

"The Federal Bureau of Prisons sets basic guidelines for prison operation, but each warden, with his staff, decides how he will apply these standards to his institution.

"We have some inmates who are learning to read and write, some who are learning to speak English, some who are taking post-high school courses with people from outside the prison.

"The men have a prisoners' advisory board which suggests changes within the prison. They have a law library. And they have a drug rehabilitation program which they run.

"But there's room for creativity and there's room for reform. We need new people to help make the reforms."

Journalism Students Hear Publisher

By BOB CALLAHAN

"It is the dream of every newspaperman and reporter to own his own newspaper," said Loren Ghiglione, the Editor and Publisher of the Southbridge News, in a speech before a group of Journalism students in the Student Union last evening.

Ghiglione has fulfilled this dream and is currently conducting a survey of the daily newspapers in Massachusetts.

He mentioned that this is the first survey of its kind conducted by a daily newspaper.

"This may be a catalyst for people to continue on," the young Editor and Publisher said in speaking about the unique survey which he is conducting. "We will distribute the results to our readers and if it goes well, people in Universities and Journalism may try to do something with it."

The survey conducted by Ghiglione is funded entirely by him and it involves the use of a questionnaire to rate the newspapers surveyed.

"We are trying to determine the paper's views of their strengths and weaknesses and what they are trying to do with their papers," Ghiglione said.

The survey which was started in July has met with little opposition from newspaper publishers and the results are expected to be printed in mid-December.

A staff of three is conducting the survey and the method involves a questionnaire of 25 questions. According to Ghiglione each surveyor has "a certain amount of expertise" in the field of newspapers.

You'd Better Watch Out

By DON POUTRY

A pedestrian was the victim of a hit-and-run accident yesterday without knowing it.

Ernest Chambers, a junior at the University, was crossing North Pleasant St near the Education Center at about 5 p.m. yesterday when he found himself in the path of an automobile. He grabbed the hood of the car and attempted to push himself out of the way.

As Chambers picked himself from the side of the road the car stopped and the woman who was driving it shouted for him to watch where he was going. He shouted back that she should watch where she was going as the vehicle drove away.

It was not until Chambers tried to walk away that he realized he had been hit.

Chambers was admitted to the University Infirmary with a badly bruised right leg. He reported the details of the accident to the police including the license number of the car which had hit him.

Professor Howard Ziff:

"Not Enough 'Bad News' In Today's Newspapers"

By BRIAN MARTIN

"There's not enough 'bad news' in today's newspapers" according to Howard Ziff, the newly appointed director of the department of journalism and journalistic studies here.

To prove this point he reached into his fifty-gallon garbage can and pulled out a newspaper. Sure enough, nearly every story was "good news". "Nurse wins award; settlement likely; investigation underway", he read aloud, skipping from story to story. "This is all up-beat stuff--the papers just aren't looking for trouble."

Ziff emphasized his concept of this role of the press by his feeling that the Viet Nam war has shown the press in its "finest hour". The Pentagon Papers were "long overdue" in his estimation.

"The press should be blowing the lid off city hall every day," he added.

Applying this concept to the first amendment, Ziff noted that it not only provides for freedom of the press, but it also assigns to the press the role of a protector.

"The press is obligated to shield the public from the arbitrary use of power by the government or any other force that threatens to diminish personal liberty", he said.

According to Ziff, democratization of the press doesn't occur when reporters can say what they want, but rather when the average citizen feels he is well represented and if not, he knows he can speak up.

"If I were interested in social welfare, instead of talking to a Harvard professor of sociology, I would go to a welfare mother for information", he said.

On the theory of objective reporting, the journalist used this analogy: "True--there is no such thing as a perfect circle but this doesn't mean that a circle can look like a square. The same applies to objectivity. We all agree that a perfectly objective report isn't possible but that doesn't mean that we shouldn't strive for it."

Professor Howard Ziff, recently appointed as director of journalism and journalistic studies. Does he really smoke a pipe or is this just for effect?

"Students of journalism sometimes panic when they find out that things aren't black and white. What they must remember is that there are different shades of gray", he added.

Distinguishing between these shades of gray and improving the quality of reporting will be the main thrust of the new department.

"I want the student to appreciate the depth potential of reporting" said the former Chicago Daily News reporter.

To this end, reporting teams under professional guidance will produce publishable reports after extensive investigation of an issue.

The technical side of the profession will also be stressed in the new curriculum. According to Ziff, "To do a good job as a journalist you must understand the media and appreciate the limits placed on it by technology."

As to whether this learning comes from experience in the field, Ziff argues that it does not.

"Newspapers don't spend enough time on new reporters to adequately train them and often the habits they acquire are bad ones because so many newspapers are bad", he explained.

Ziff plans to serve his profession by "putting better reporters in the field".

In The Nation And The World

Red China Arrives Soon

U.N. China Seat Remains Vacant

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—The United Nations made ready Tuesday to welcome Red China and to fly its red flag with five yellow stars from the Chinese flagstaff. With the ouster of Nationalist China, the Chinese seat remained vacant for the moment.

Reports circulated in U.N. corridors that representatives from Red China would arrive soon, perhaps headed by Premier Chou En-lai. A similar report came from the Peking correspondent of the Tokyo newspaper Asahi Shimbun.

Seven days of China debate were climaxed by Monday night's General Assembly decision to expel the Chinese Nationalists and seat Peking.

The Chinese Nationalists walked out before the vote and President Chiang Kai-shek on his island fortress of Taiwan voiced his defiance.

In an address to the nation, Chiang called the decision to oust his regime "infamous" and declared: "The destiny of our nation is not in the hands of the United Nations. It is squarely in our own hands."

A U.N. spokesman said no response had been received so far to Secretary-General U Thant's message notifying the Peking government of the assembly's action.

He said, however, that preparations for a Chinese Communist delegation are under way, including an order for a flag to fly along with those of the other 130 U.N. members in front of U.N. headquarters.

U.S. Ambassador George Bush, although deeply disappointed by the expulsion of the Nationalist delegation, called on Thant and assured him of continued U.S. cooperation.

A U.S. spokesman, in disclosing Bush's assurances, did not mention moves in Washington to cut U.S. financial contributions to the United Nations. But this was a topic of widespread comment at the United Nations.

A British spokesman said; "the financial predicament of the organization is grave indeed, and we certainly hope that the circumstances of changes in representation of members should not include a major worsening of the financial situation."

The United Nations already is prepared to take a huge loss through the expulsion of the Chinese Nationalists because of unpaid deficits in that government's assessments.

The Taiwan government, according to a U.N. spokesman, owes $11.9 million for past years, $6.2 million for the current year, and an additional $12.2 million for unpaid assessments on the peace keeping operations in the Middle East and the Congo.

Tuesday's wind-up session of the assembly on China consisted of explanations of votes by members who deferred their remarks because of the late hour of Monday night's balloting.

U.S. spokesman Nicholas King said the American defeat was due largely to last-minute defections of countries that had committed themselves to support the U.S. plan for "dual representation" with both Peking and Taiwan in the United Nations.

French-Soviet Pact Signed

PARIS (AP)—France has agreed to sign a "declaration of principles" with Russia governing future French-Soviet relations, diplomatic sources reported Tuesday night.

The declaration, without precedent in Western dealings with Moscow, will represent the "new step forward" the Soviets have been urging France to take during the visit of Soviet Communist party chief Leonid I. Brezhnev.

Sources described the document as the limit of President Georges Pompidou's willingness to develop a special political relationship with the Soviet Union.

The declaration was said to contain three main points on which the two powers say they agree:

The desirability of dissolving the political military blocs which divide Europe, the inviolibility of existing European frontiers and the principle of noninterference in the internal affairs of other countries.

The sources said that even though Pompidou agreed to the declaration he remained skeptical about the sincerity of Soviet intentions.

Simultaneously with the declaration, the French and Russians will sign a new economic agreement providing for increased trade and investment, the sources said.

The economic accord reflects the soviet need for Western investment and technology and the French desire of finally reaping some tangible benefits from their opening to the East.

Sources said the declaration was a compromise between Brezhnev's insistence on a treaty aimed at loosening French links with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, and Pompidou's reluctance to go beyond the French-Soviet protocol signed last year.

Brezhnev reportedly raised the question of a treaty during his opening round of private talks with Pompidou on Monday. Pompidou rejected the idea, sources said, and the two men went on to agree on a text for the declaration.

There were more cheers than boos for Brezhnev on his second day in Paris, but hundreds of police mingled with crowds and pounced on a few demonstrators that shouted "Brezhnev assassin!" and "Freedom for the Jews!"

Many of these who turned out to cheer the Soviet leader apparently were members of the French Communist party.

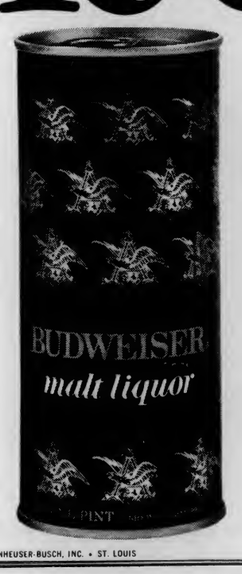
While Pompidou seemed prepared to help Brezhnev gain a diplomatic success on his initial visit to the West, the French president stressed that France remained a part of the Western system and would not abandon its allies.

Defense Minister Michel Debre told newsmen later that "the American military presence in Europe has been and remains an important element in the maintenance of the military equilibrium in Europe."

His statement was a way of telling the Soviets that Paris was not interested in Moscow's proposal of mutual reduction of forces in Central Europe unless force levels were pared in balance and political tensions had relaxed sufficiently.

Prof Risks Contempt Charge

BOSTON (AP)—A Princeton University professor scheduled to appear before a federal grand jury investigating the Pentagon papers case said Tuesday he might risk a contempt charge to establish the right to protect confidential sources for some scholars.



Professor Richard A. Falk is to appear Thursday before a grand jury in Boston which is reportedly investigating possible crimes connected with the leaking of the Pentagon papers to the press last summer.

Falk, 41, had been subpeonaed to appear before the grand jury last month, as had Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor Noam Chomsky and Harvard Professor Samuel Popkin. All are acquaintances of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, an MIT research associate who has said he leaked the war study to the press.

Falk asked earlier this month that his subpoena be thrown out, contending his appearance would violate his freedom of speech and damage his professional credibility as a scholar.

To Approach Moscow

Laird In Europe For Troop Limitation Talks

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird tried Tuesday to line up the Western allies for a joint approach to Moscow on reducing armed forces in Europe.

Laird conferred with Lord Carrington of Britain, Marie Tanassi of Italy and Helmut Schmidt of West Germany.

Earlier he collaborated with Schmidt in presenting to the Nuclear Planning Group—NPG—of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization a picture of what might happen if the Soviets made a major attack on southern Germany and the allies met it with a battlefield nuclear weapon.

Of the 15 members of the alliance, all but France agreed Oct. 6 to send an "explorer" to Moscow to sound out the possibilities of mutual, balanced force reductions. He is Manlio Brosio, the Italian who until September was the secretary-general of NATO.

Brosio is expected to make his first trip to the Soviet Union before mid-November.

But he does not have a common allied position to present to the Kremlin. Italy was worried along with Greece and Turkey that an agreement to cut forces in Germany would lead the Soviet Union to build up its forces already in the Mediterranean area.

An attempt was made to reassure the Mediterranean countries by an allied agreement that reductions made on the central European front should not diminish security on the flanks. This was also reached Oct. 6, but the concern persists.

The United States and West Germany are pushing hardest for mutual force reductions, with some support from Britain. An informed source said the United States would be interested in an initial mutual cut of as much as 10 per cent, but official spokesmen say it is too early to throw light on a figure.

Other European allies are more cautious because they are concerned that across-the-board cuts would be to the advantage of Moscow. Any U.S. forces withdrawn would have to move back across the Atlantic while Soviet troops would retreat only a few hundred miles.

Spokesmen say the discussions on force reduction have only an indirect connection with the business of the Nuclear Planning Group, which ends its quarterly meeting Wednesday. This session brought together seven of the allies. Their meeting opened Tuesday with a presentation by Laird on the overall nuclear situation, which is heavily influenced by the strategic arms limitation talks (SALT) between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The ministers then discussed with Laird and Schmidt the consequence of using nuclear battlefield weapons in a European conflict. Officials said it would take about two more years before guidelines can be agreed on how to deal with these consequences.

War Continues Around Saigon

SAIGON (AP) — Battlefield action flared near Saigon Tuesday, with five enemy attacks in the provinces surrounding the capital.

Killed were 18 government troops and one U.S. soldier, and 17 South Vietnamese and two Americans were wounded. One enemy soldier was killed.

The attacks included the daylight ambush of a U.S. Army engineer convoy 50 miles northeast of Saigon and the ambush of a South Vietnamese payroll convoy 40 miles north of the capital. The payroll, estimated at $7,000-$10,000, was saved, field reports said.

Lt. Gen. Nguyen Van Minh, commander of military region 3, which includes Saigon and 11 surrounding provinces, said four enemy regiments totaling about 2,500 troops have been ordered to step up attacks in the corridor north of Saigon.

A massive relief operation was under way in five northern provinces battered by typhoon Hester.

Government officials put the South Vietnamese death toll from last Saturday's typhoon at 100, and said 555,000 homes were destroyed and about 200,000 persons wee homeless.

The U.S. Command said American aircraft had flown 900 mercy missions, evacuating more than 3,000 civilians from stricken areas and lifting in 20 tons of relief supplies.

The command revised the total of American casualties upward to three killed and 51 injured by the storm. Revised figures also showed 25 helicopters worth $6.3 million destroyed and 33 others seriously damaged. The command said other helicopters suffered minor damage.

In Saigon, the U.S. 7th Air Force announced that the first squadron of F4 Phantom fighter-bombers to be withdrawn from Vietnam left for the United States Tuesday.

The 389th Tactical Fighter Squadron, with 18 Phantom jets, was based at Phu Cat on the central coast. The departure of the fighter squadron was part of continuing U.S. troop withdrawals.

In Phnom Penh, the Cambodian command said at least 30 Cambodian soldiers were killed in four days of fighting around two small towns about 30 miles south of the capital.

Many other soldiers were reported missing after as many as 1,000 enemy troops overran a two-company garrison at Sai Va, the Cambodian command reported.

High Court Declines Busing Plan Review

WASHINGTON (AP) — A unanimous Supreme Court declined Tuesday to review a massive busing plan for schools in Pontiac, Mich., scene of bombings last summer.

At the same time, the court turned down an appeal challenging a desegregation plan for schools in Forsyth County, N.C.

Pontiac school officials had contended in their appeal that whatever segregation exists in the blue-collar community is a result of housing patterns.

The Forsyth officials, meanwhile, had complained that their schools were subjected to wrongful racial balancing.

The court made no comment on either of these claims. The flat rejection of the appeals indicates that they may hold no weight with the justices at this point.

In other actions the court rejected unanimously an effort to convert an abandoned public school building in Brighton, Ala., into a private all-white school and ruled unanimously that Virginia cannot upgrade a two-year predominantly white college into a four-year school because it would interfere with the racial integration of the nearby black college.

The operator of a Washington state drive-in was granted a hearing in a new obscenity dispute. The central issue in the case of William Rabe of Richland is whether police may supress a movie shown at a drive-in on the theory it could offend passing motorists or neighbors.

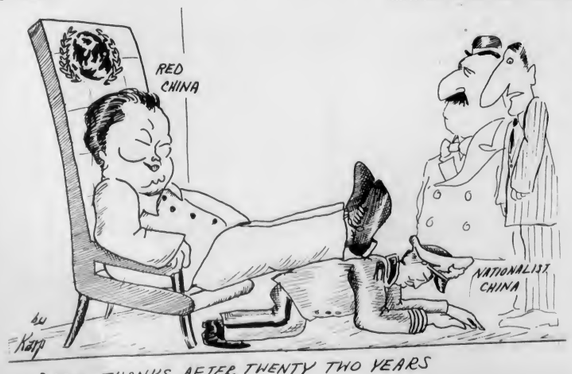
A Childish Gesture

The news of the United Nations vote on admitting Red China into the UN while expelling Taiwan has stunned most of us in the US who have grown up under the aura of American dominance in that world council. It seemed unthinkable, up until the time of the final vote, that the wishes of the United States should be so "disrespectfully" disregarded by the rest of the membership. However, this rude awakening serves a useful purpose.



Though many of us disagree with the expulsion of Taiwan, there are a few things worth keeping in mind. Primarily, it must be remembered that the UN is supposed to be a representative body. Though it has not been entirely successful in its application of this role in the past does not mean that this role can or should be forgotten in the future.

With this in mind, the statements of Republican Senator Barry Goldwater about banishing the UN to Moscow or Peking display a reactionary ignorance of the functions of any representative body. Would the esteemed Senator suggest that one of his colleagues on Capitol Hill be banished for opposing him on an issue? Perhaps he would like to see Congress moved to Chicago, New York, or, worst of all, Boston?

The days are gone when the United States could view itself as the world's policeman and the UN will no longer serve as the means towards this end. It seems inconceivable that people have not at least learned from the Vietnam tragedy that US imperialism has reached the end of the line.

The threat by members of the United States Congress to remove funds from the UN is a childish gesture. It manifests the true lack of real dedication that many have accused our legislators of in the past. If these people truly believe in world peace and if they believe that the UN has any chance at all of achieving that goal then any move to withdraw funds over a policy disagreement displays a true hypocrisy on their part.

Perhaps the US will evolve from this situation as a healthier political and international power than it has been in the past. The world has sat back too long and waited for America to dictate policy simply because of its economic supremacy.

SOME THANKS AFTER TWENTY TWO YEARS

Art Buchwald

A Great Honor

WASHINGTON--The worst thing that can happen to any public official in this country is to be mentioned for a top appointment in the government, and not get it.

It isn't just the rejection of the job that is hard to swallow--it is that while he is under consideration the candidate is being subjected to exhaustive investigation by everyone from the FBI to the Harvard Law Review, and his reputation can be destroyed forever.

The recent Supreme Court nomination circus that President Nixon put on is a perfect example of how dangerous it is to be mentioned for one of the highest positions in the land.

Take the case of Judge Chilblain Clamchowder. Judge Clamchowder, who had been appointed to the Fifth Circuit Traffic Court for the work he had done in carrying Tornado County for President Nixon in 1968, found himself listed as one of the "leading" candidates for a Supreme Court seat.

Judge Clamchowder told me in his chambers, "I knew they had just thrown in my name as a smoke screen and at first I was flattered to see my name in the newspapers.

"But then the Eastern establishment press started coming down here and asking about me, and my life has become pure hell.

"They talked to my second wife who said I had not only cheated on her, but also on my bar exam. Even if it's true, it's something you don't like to read about in the newspapers."

Judge Clamchowder continued: "Then some Democratic senators found out I hadn't paid my income tax for the past five years and they tried to make a big deal of it just to embarrass the Nixon Administration. They made it sound as if I was the first Supreme Court justice nominee who had ever cheated on his taxes.

"To make matters worse, the FBI discovered that I was a major stockbroker in the firm that prints all the traffic tickets for Tornado County. So I had to get rid of the stock at a great financial sacrifice.

"Then Jack Anderson found out about a Christmas party I had last year in my chambers for the meter maids, and while only two of them took off their clothes, he made it sound like an orgy. So now my third wife is suing me for divorce, and it's gonna be damn expensive, particularly since I don't have an interest in the printing firm any more.

"The American Civil Liberties Union then dug up the fact that I had donated $1,000 to buy dynamite to blow up all the school buses in Tornado County, and that made the newspaper headlines. Now I believe this was a personal matter and had nothing to do with whether a person would make a good Supreme Court justice or not.

"Finally, some smart-aleck law professor discovered that since I've been ruling on traffic offenses I have been reversed by higher courts 768 times.

"He also claimed I had fixed the tickets of 45 members of my country club. It turns out I had only fixed 40 tickets since I've been on the traffic court, but the media doesn't seem to be concerned with accuracy as long as it's a good story.

"The American Bar Assn. rated me as 'less mediocre' and this certainly hasn't helped me keep any decorum in the courtroom."

"From what I can tell, Judge," I said, "you might have done better by not being mentioned as a possible Supreme Court justice."

"Frankly, he replied, "if it wasn't for the honor, I would just as soon forget it."

Comic Relief

The same old issues of war, racism and poverty are there, but except for those who are immediately affected by them, they're not as exciting as they used to be. They seem to be old hat, and every liberal I talk to seems to be against them, at least in principle. After some thought and a few drinks, I have concluded that part of this apathy results from the lack of character. The great empathizing factor of personal leadership is gone and therefore the issues become relogated to the abstract.

No longer can one wonder at Khrushchev banging his shoe at the United Nations, or be amazed at De Gaulle's prominent proboscis or his even more prominent ego. In the good old days our opponents always afforded us some comic relief to offset the sometimes tedious struggle for justice. L.B.J. for instance always manged to be a composite of all human foibles. I remember he used to annoy even his supporters when he spoke in favor of civil rights and continually said "negra". Poor Lyndon, by the time he learned to pronounce the "O" they had changed their name to Black. And who can forget the grossest faux pas of them all, the exhibition of the scar from his gallstone operation? I can remember certain unkind Republicans remarking at the time that Lyndon's secret plan for reelection consisted of having a hernia operation and winning on a sympathy vote. His pulling dogs by the ears to make them bark and his turning off the lights in the White House to save money occasioned many a joke. But those days are gone for good, old Lyndon has retired into the sunset. Today the world somehow appears devoid of the characters who helped give life to the issues. Our anatagonists seem to be stripped of all human foibles.

Kosygin, Pompidou, and Nixon are lifeless nonentities in gray flannel suits. Whatever you say about Richard Nixon, you can't really say he's funny; pathetic yes, funny no. There is something almost mechanical about the old used car joke. The only thing that strikes you about Nixon is that he is singularly unstriking. All I can think of is his standing around the White House in his shorts until his suit comes back from the cleaners. Nixon just hasn't got the character of Johnson; he reminds one more of a puppet that learned to talk.

He doesn't vacation in the wild west of Texas, but in the middle American suburb of San Clemente-the citadel of WASPDOM. And he doesn't have a wife who goes around increasing the possibility of forest fires by planting trees. Richard is a bore and the whole world seems rather dead of late. But don't despair, a little comic relief is on the way, Lyndon is publishing his story of how the war began and there's nothing quite so funny as a good work of fiction.

The Aussie

Swords raised as they charge into battle;
Let us pray.
Our brothers
Who aren't in heaven,
Shallow be their graves.
As their kingdom's come,
I'll not be done,
In dearth,
Though I'll not be forgiven.
Give us this day
Our daily dead,
And believe us
As we believe those Who trespass against us.
Lead us not into annihilation,
But deliver us from evil...
For thine is the kingdom, the power, and glory forever.
And these soldiers were lost,
all but one.
He so handsomely dons his Aussie.
But no one knows him now
Without his blood-sweated brow.
Aussie burns
Below the ears;
Aussie eyes cry
Aussie tears.
Aussie jacket leathered high, never belted;
Shall this Aussie man but never die?

250 Hiroshimas

To the Editor:

In less than two weeks the government of, for, and by the military will unleash on us yet another in a long line of strategic surprises.

On the Island of Amchitka in the Aleutian chain off the coast of Alaska, an underground nuclear bomb test will take place. It is a 500 Megaton explosive equal to the force of 250 HIROSHIMAS.

It will more than likely cause earthquakes, tidal waves and radiation leaks - although the Atomic Energy Commission, who is putting on this show of strength, feels differently. But then how could they have legitimate fears - when this explosion will take place closer to Canada, Russia, and Japan than to the United States mainland. Thus the United States' concern is strictly power-oriented - lacking all human concern. The United States is concerned with the arms race. It must not fall behind the Russians in tactical weaponry and strategic arms. It must in the process, profess its arrogance to the world - its outright disregard for our gift of life and our gift of nature - and especially those gifts which belong to other peoples. Our arrogance is unmatched. And it is OURS. We are all guilty. We will share the guilt if this bomb is allowed to explode. Unless we speak now. The United States Atomic Energy Commission has no authority to make a decision of such crucial international importance. AND WE MUST TELL THEM SO.

The President of the United States, Richard Nixon, is the only man who can prevent this madness. And right now he sees no reason for such a prevention. Rather, advancement of our arms technology is of supreme importance.

And who stands to gain from this. Certainly not the citizens of this country or any other country. And not even the United States government and the Atomic Energy Commission - for this monumental "achievement" will no doubt be superseded by yet another more powerful explosive - and the Amchitka bomb will be obsolete.

So, who will gain by this insane destruction - especially if it is eventually used as a major weapon. No one.

But someone can prevent it. Us. By writing President Nixon of our concern, we can - if enough letters are written - change the course of events.

Your letters are read. And more importantly they are counted. Often times they have swayed the opinions and ideas of Congressmen and Senators as well as the President. The Lieutenant Calley incident is an example of such an effect. The President's mail was against Calley's conviction by a clear majority. And the President acted in response to this outcry.

Are we going to act in response to this outrage?

Embarassed

To the Editor:

Frank M. Baglione's article, "Right On To The People" published in last Friday's "Poor Richards" was downright embarrassing. Of course that should be my proper reaction since I am a member of an anti-war organization and Baglione poignantly illustrated what a fool I am. However my embarrassment did not stem from my own activities but rather from Baglione's and others like him. His narrow mindedness and outright ignorance of the power of mass demonstrations displayed in his article comes as no great surprise to me, but when it is printed on the front page of a UMass publication I am indeed embarrassed.

Mass demonstrations organized by anti-war groups have been the most important factor in limiting the number of Americans (spelled with a c not a k) killed or maimed in recent months. Nixon has not brought home troops because he wants to, but because he is being forced to by the display of massive disapproval of his policies in Indo-China evidenced by participation in demonstrations across the country. Future demonstrations will continue to apply pressure on the administration and ultimately end U.S. involvement in Indo-China.

Apparently Baglione did not attend our October 13th teach-in, for if he had he wouldn't have written the following: "Our October teach-in fell flat on its face. YSA and the Mobe could have held the whole thing on a bench outside the Student Union." It is an unwarranted statement. First of all, the teach-in was sponsored by the Mobe exclusively. Secondly, it attracted 220 people. (It would have taken a pretty big bench to seat them all.) Three quarters of a million people marched on Washington last April 24th. They were working for peace. It was a concerted effort to end an immoral war which is destroying our nation, not to mention Southeast Asia. It was the largest gathering of people for a political purpose in the history of America. Those who attended hardly viewed their activities as a "carnival". Their participation can only be described as noble. Baglione's article, packed with "inaccuracies" is much more difficult to describe. Perhaps embarrassing is the most applicable term.

Care A Little More

To the Editor:

There are times when we let ourselves become so caught up in ourselves that we forget about other people, to the extent of being cruel. We judge other people and ignore our own faults, until they are pointed out to us. Well, they were pointed out to us rather painfully in Friday's Collegian, when we read "If Only For The Sake Of Honesty." We were the three girls that Jacqueline Letalien picked up that day, and we made crude remarks about the guy we passed. We thought it was very funny at the time, and we even mentioned the incident to some of our friends.

Now we feel very ashamed, and we look at ourselves. Do we really mean the things we say and do? If we stopped to consider them, would we say and do them anyway? We can only hope not.

We are trying to apologize, to say how sorry we are, to Jacqueline and that guy, and anyone else we have unknowingly hurt by our ignorant remarks. The words "we're sorry" are so inadequate.....but we don't know what else to say....

Maybe someday we will stop making jokes in ignorance and start to learn and care. Maybe we will stop judging other people and judge only ourselves, for we all certainly need our own criticism. Miss Letalien's dreams for the future are really beautiful; if we all think and care a little more her dreams might have more of a chance.

Letters To The Editor

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Why?

To the Editor:

May we ask Norman Bender and Anne Dranginis a few questions?

1. Why didn't you mention the fact that the Leningrad Institute for Hebraic Studies is only for those on the post graduate level who would need the knowledge of Hebrew in politics and international discussions? And only for non-Jews.

2. Why didn't you mention the fact that in 1953 there were 16 Jewish theaters and two academies of Jewish dramatic art? Today there are no full-time Jewish theatrical groups.

3. Why is it that although each nationality group has its own school system to teach its language and culture, there are no Yiddish or Hebrew schools at any level in the USSR?

4. Do you know why the Russians let 3000 Jews emigrate? They wanted to get rid of Jewish agitators before the Communist Party Congress. They were embarrassed by pressure from the Brussels Conference on Soviet Jewry. And at that time, the Arabs were not cooperating with the Russians who then used the emigration of Jews as a bargaining point.

5. Why is it that in 1935 Jews represented 13% of all university students, 3.2% in 1960 and 2.5% in 1970? Is this a fight against anti-Semitism?

6. Why didn't you mention the fact that Birobidjan is in a state of decay, that 92% of its population is non- Jewish, that there are no Jewish schools there, and that Birobidjan is in Siberia near the Sino-Soviet border, far from the main concentration of Jews?

7. Why is it that in 1956 there were 450 synagogues and in 1969 only 55--approximately 1 synagogue for every 50,000 Jews? Why are there only three functioning rabbis now in the USSR, two of them over 75? Why are Jews prohibited from manufacturing phylacteries and prayer shawls? Why is Kosher meat unobtainable?

8. Why is it that, if the Soviet Union has such a "progressive policy toward the fight against anti-Semitism", the mere possession of a Hebrew text is enough evidence for conviction of anti-state attitudes?

9. Why are there no successors to aged rabbis?

May I quote a recent article in The New York Times Magazine which tells of the author talking to a young Soviet Jew?

"As we were about to part I asked, 'Some Jews have left for Israel, haven't they?'

'Some, but none are leaving now.'

'Are there others who would like to go?'

He froze for a moment and then, coming close to me, grasped my arm and whispered hoarsely: 'All of us! Every one of us is waiting for a chance.''

10. Why is it that Jews have made a total of 80,000 applications for visas and when a few, by some chance, are accepted, they are all taken immediately? Is it because the Soviet Union is such a Utopia?

(By the way, Mr. Bender, Spain no longer outlaws synagogues and a new one has just opened.)

It seems to us that YOUR attitudes are typical of the statements used for propaganda by the Russian Communist leaders who, no matter what they say, are anti-Semitic.

Soviet Space Effort Falters

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union's space effort has sustained another major setback with the death of Mikhail K. Yangel, the rocket scientist believed to have headed the space program since 1966.

The government news agency Tass announced Tuesday night that Yangel died of a heart attack Monday. He was 60.

The Tass obituary called Yangel "the outstanding scientist and designer in space rocket technology," the man who "raised a galaxy of outstanding designers and scientists."

Western experts believe Yangel became the No. 1 man on the Soviet space team nearly six years ago when the first space chief, Sergei P. Korolev, died of cancer.

The Soviet government has always maintained a heavy veil of secrecy over its space program to prevent another power from kidnaping their top scientists.

Korolev's status was announced only after he died Jan. 14, 1966.

Yangel's death was the fifth major setback suffered by the Soviet space program this year.

In April, the Soyuz 10 manned mission was aborted after linking up with the orbiting space station. Two months later three cosmonauts died returning to earth after a record-breaking manned flight aboard the Salute laboratory.

On Aug. 4 Dr. Gregory N. Babakin, 56, died after playing a leading role in the building of Lunokhod 1 moon robot.

The next month the program was hit by another failure as the unmanned moon probe Luna 18 crashed during an attempted soft landing in a rugged mountain range on the moon's Sea of Fertility.

Two weeks ago Soviet scientists were unable to keep the Salute lab in orbit. It disintegrated as it plunged back through the earth's atomosphere.

Tass said Yangel made a unique contribution to the Soviet effort to send unmanned probes to the moon, Venus and Mars and also had a big hand in manned flights around the earth.

He was a deputy to the Supreme Soviet, an alternate member of the Central Committee of the Soviet Communist party and a full member of the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

He received the nation's highest civilian awards: one Order of Lenin, two Hero of Socialist Labor medals and one Soviet State prize.

Yangel was born in 1911, the son of a peasant in Siberian village of Zyryanevo.

British-Irish War Blazes

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — British troops fought a blazing gun battle gainst guerrilla snipers across the Irish border Tuesday while huge funeral crowds elsewhere mourned the deaths of five Roman Catholics killed by army gunfire.

The deaths of two more victims of violence raised Northern Ireland's fatality toll to 135. One of the victims was a 26-year-old man who was gagged, blindfolded and shot through the head apparently by an Irish Republican Army execution squad. The other died of bullet wounds from a weekend gunfight.

British Army headquarters said snipers fired on troops preparing to blow up a frontier road to cut down arms smuggling from the neighboring Irish republic. The soldiers fired back in a 45-minute skirmish and reported two of the snipers appeared to be wounded.

In the nearby town of Newry, where soldiers killed three men trying to rob a bank Saturday night, thousands of residents lined the streets and jammed a church as the three coffins were carried through town.

Troops moved in when stone-throwing youths smashed a few windows, but there were no major incidents. Civil rights leaders charged the army had committed murder by shooting down the men, and urged townspeople to quit selling supplies to British soldiers.

In Belfast, an angry crowd of more than 8,000 watched the funeral of two sisters killed by army gunfire at a roadblock Saturday. A mob attacked troops when soldiers tried to photograph marchers in the cortege-apparently as suspected members of the IRA.

On the political front, about 15 rebel members of the provincial Parliament and Senate met with politicians at Dungiven Castle to form their own rival parliament.

Breakaway leader John Hume told "the Assembly of the Northern Irish People" that the rebel parliamentarians "had lost faith in the government of Northern Ireland....The age-old Irish problem is no nearer a solution....Citizens are separated from citizens by barbed wire."

As the rebel politicians met, Prime Minister Brian Faulkner opened a debate in the official Parliament on possible political reforms in the north. Faulkner submitted a "green paper"-a government document for debate that could lead to a bigger Parliament and Senate and changes in the way Northern Ireland holds its elections.

The document appealed to opposition members to sit down and talk over a possible "new start" in politics. But most of the key opposition leaders missed the appeal-they were attending the rival assembly meeting.

Faulkner admitted the proposed reforms were unlikely to calm the violence. "I don't believe that any kind of political proposals have any relevance to the IRA," he said.

Pakistan Claims Indian Attack

DACCA, East Pakistan (AP) — Pakistan claimed Tuesday that Indian artillery killed 23 Pakistani villagers in shellings of more than a dozen East Pakistani settlements.

A military spokesman said 2,300 artillery and mortar shells fell near the eastern border with India, where Pakistani military sources reported earlier that 585 persons had been killed in fighting with forces launched from India.

The spokesman pinpointed the areas of Kasba, Kamlapur and villages south of Comilla as receiving the most destructive shellings Tuesday. These areas also were mentioned in the earlier reports.

India and Pakistan have moved into a dangerous confrontation with armies on the alert on both sides of the border-in their dispute over East Pakistani refugees flooding into India.

The refugees are fleeing continued disruption in East Pakistan, which was torn by a civil war this spring and is still the scene of guerrilla fighting by holdout Bengali guerrillas trying to revive the independence rebellion crushed last March.

In other developments:

—Bombs which police believe were set by Bengali rebels killed at least seven persons and injured 30 in the Dacca area, police reported.

—Well-informed sources reported the trial of Sheik Mujibur Rahman, leader of the political group whose success at the polls led to the civil war, has been postponed until November. Sheik Mujibur is accused of "waging war" against Pakistan.

—President Nixon's aid representative in East Pakistan, Maurice J. Williams, said there will be no widespread famine in the province, only scattered pockets of food shortage. Williams said the expected famine has been averted partly because of the exodus of refugees.

—A World Bank group working on development in India said in Paris the Indian government faces a $700 million bill for caring for the refugees pouring across its borders. The bank group said other governments have contributed only about $200 million.

Evict Nixon

WASHINGTON (AP) — A march by antiwar demonstrators attempting to serve an "eviction notice" on President Nixon was broken up Tuesday by police who arrested between 200 and 300 of the protestors on minor charges. The confrontation lasted about an hour and produced no serious violence.

Arthur Barrett Explains Howard Johnson

Clearly defined concepts and standards have been the secret of the success of the Howard Johnson Company and will be the basis for the solid growth the company expects to attain in the future, according to Arthur P. Barrett, general manager of the division of company-operated motor lodges for Howard Johnson in Braintree, in a guest lecture appearance before department of hotel, restaurant and travel administration students at the UMass in Amherst.

The success of Howard Johnson restaurants, he said, is to a great extent the result of each featuring the same basic menu item prepared to the company's standards, so that the traveler whether in Maine or Florida knows the price range as well as the quality of the food. In order to maintain these standards, the company has plants and distribution centers to process and ship the food products to the restaurants, making possible stringent quality controls.

Mr. Barrett, a UMass alumnus, pointed out that in 1964, when the company moved into the lodging industry with its first motor lodge in Savannah, Ga., it was again a matter of being certain that the standards were being met.

He pointed out that Howard Johnson, now one of the largest restaurant chains in the world, has 865 restaurants in the United States, Puerto Rico, the Bahamas, Canada and the Netherlands. Of that toal, 564 restaurants are operated by the company and 301 by licensees. There are 433 motor lodges totaling 42,000 rooms throughout the United States, 376 licensed and 57 operated by the company. In addition, the Red Coach Grill division of luxury restaurants in the United States is expanding, with 29 now in operation.

According to Mr. Barrett, in the past 10 years, Howard Johnson's sales have gone from $96 million to nearly $300 million. The company has experienced six straight quarters in which sales and earnings improved over the comparable quarter in the previous year.

"At the present time," he added, "we have 30 restaurants and 23 motor lodges under construction with many more planned."

Kosowicz To Give Organ Recital

Organist Francis John Kosowicz will play a recital of his own compositions Wednesday, Oct. 27, at 12:10 p.m. in Grace Church on Boltwood Ave.

The recital, open to the public without charge, is part of the Grace Church "Wednesday at Noon" series. Kosowicz is a student at the University of Massachusetts who has studied with E. Power Biggs and Edgar Hilliar. His most recent recital was last May at South Congregational Church. He has also given recitals at churches in Boston, New Haven, New York City, Washington and other U.S. cities, in Bermuda and in Vietnam.

Born in Lowell, he attended Keith Academy there and Westford Academy. He also studied at Iona College, Manhattanville College and the Pius X School of Liturgical Music. The works to be played Wednesday will consist of new pieces for organ composed in 1971.

Nixonomics Talk Tonight

Michael Best, professor of Economics here at UMass will be speaking tonight at 8:00 p.m. in the Campus Center, rooms 174, 176.

Best's topic will be "Nixon's Wage and Price Freeze and the American Empire". Best will present a Marxist opinion on the wage price freeze. It will concentrate chiefly on who it hurts and who it helps in the context of american wealth and power.

Professor Best is being sponsored by the Free University and the UMass Poverty Committee.

Coalition To Meet Tonight

The Coalition for Peace and Justice in the Amherst area will be holding a meeting tonight at 8:00 to discuss November actions around defense of Political prisoners and demonstrations against the war in Southeast Asia.

A spokesman for the group stated that as the U.S. government commits more and more atrocities against humanity, the people in this country in particular must organize and demonstrate against these atrocities in a more united and forceful manner. He went on to say that the common tie between Blacks and whites in this country is not our common oppression but rather our common alienation from the U.S. government.

November will be the beginning of a fund drive for political prisoners and is being coordinated by the Emergency Defense Fund for Bay Area Prisoners. The Coalition's participation in that drive will be a key topic tonight. All interested groups and persons wishing to find out more about the Coalition are asked to come to the meeting tonight or call Bob 549-6877.

Massachusetts Shellfish Get Attention

The long-declining Massachusetts shellfish population is getting attention from an unexpected source-- the UMass School of Engineering.

The attention is in the form of a pilot program in cooperative shellfish management designed by the aquacultural engineering specialists in the UMass department of mechanical engineering. It is supported by a number of cooperating agencies--The Commonwealth Technical Resource Center of the University (COMTECH), the state Division of Marine Fisheries, the towns of Wareham, Marion, Mattapoisett, Harwich and Westport, the Southeastern Regional Planning and Economic Development District, and the New England Regional Commission.

"The basic goal is to increase the shellfish population of the areas and at the same time improve the condition of the aquatic environment," according to Professor John W. Zahradnik, aquatic engineering specialist who directs the cooperative project.

The project is going on in estuaries along Buzzards Bay in the southeastern part of the state, one reason being that bottom conditions (coarse sand and some gravel) and water conditions (tidewater flowing into marshes and mixing with fresh) are ideal for shellfish, particularly oysters.

The main focus of the research now is oysters but some work deals with clams and quahogs. Part of the project is a study in the Westport River, where the research includes the ecology of the river and shore.

The UMass group is working in several places and in several ways. Headquarters and laboratory is a red-brick warehouse on the west bank of the Wareham River in Wareham, being used through the courtesy of the A.D. Makepeace Co., one of the largest cranberry growers in the area.

This is also the site of the "oyster tower" designed by Zahradnik and funded by COMTECH. Pumped water from the river flows upward through the tower, nourishing oysters packed in trays stacked in the eight-foot high tower. The rig gives the oysters the tidal water they need and gets them out of reach of their predators.

The tower was designed not only as a prototype for commercial operations, but as a valuable source of data on oyster nourishment and growth in its somewhat controllable environment.

At several areas in the Wareham River, in the Mattapoisett River and in Sippican Harbor in the town of Marion, the UMass group is studying where oysters grow, what nourishes them and what kills them. They are charting oyster spawning and growing areas, checking the ecology of water and setting out rafts and submerged racks of oyster cultch--the material to which larval oysters attach to begin their three-year growth period.

The traditional form of oyster cultch is a chickenwire bag full of scallop shells. UMass researchers are experimenting with a wide variety of alternates--plywood frames, old auto tire beads, polymer materials and others.

The project in Westport is backed by a $10,400 grant by the New England Regional Commission. It stems from the Westport River Improvement Commission's concern over deteriorating conditions on the river. The objectives include a complete water quality survey and identification of pollution sources, a eutrophication study and a shellfish ecology program.

"The overall aim of all these projects," Zahradnik explained, "is to encourage the commerical shellfishery and to improve the management of the water quality in the estuaries. Benefits expected are of an economic, conservation and recreational nature."

by SYDNEY OMARR

Sagittarians are usually sympathetic to needs of animals. Virgo persons give most attention to their pets. Capricorn natives are possessive in connection with their domesticated animals, birds. Leo enjoys anecdotes about unusual exploits of pets. Pisces persons tend to be more desirous of cats than they are of dogs.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You are able to obtain money's worth. Key is patience. Select quality. Be a comparison shopper. Realize that all that glitters is not worthless. Means take unorthodox approach... then you gain.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Deal with those at top; bypass red tape. To do this, you need confidence. Get rid of senseless self-doubt. Sagittarius individual will open doors. One you admire is not out of reach.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Check details. Apparent minor matters build to crescendo if neglected. Aquarius individual plays prominent role. What you seek is not necessarily at a distance. Don't overlook the obvious.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be analytical. Seek reasons. Don't be satisfied that something merely happened; find out why it occurred. Key now is change, variety. Excitement of discovery is on agenda. Opposition could melt.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Pace may be slower than you like; time, however, is on your side. Avoid tendency to rush, act on impulse. Be especially considerate of needs affecting mate, partner. Review recent actions.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Much occurs in quiet, almost secretive manner. Don't judge by surface indications. Gossipy relative, neighbor does not have answers. Look behind scenes. Welcome chance to aid one who is confined.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): People tend to respond to your statements, actions in intense manner. Nothing seems medium--it's either hot or cold. Accent your own style; be creative. You do know what is best for you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): What appears to be opposition is for your own good. Protect security. Build for future. Immediate gains not as desirable as long range benefits. Realize this and respond accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Hold off on short journey. Get lay of land. Be familiar with directions, instructions. Relative who seems positive may be hiding doubts. Study Leo message. Do your own checking, evaluating.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Friend may be well-meaning but misinformed. Need now is for additional information. Protect valuables. Don't give up something for nothing. Express needs. Response will be positive.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): One who makes flashy promises should be viewed in skeptical light. Examine various avenues, alternatives. Change of pace is necessary. Trust your own judgment, intuition. Be independent.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent on writing, publishing. You are able to put ideas to work. Some restrictions are lifted. News from afar is positive. Encouragement is received. What was a barrier turns out to be paper tiger.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you draw people to you with their problems; law and medicine fascinate you. In November, you can make valuable social contacts. In recent months, you have had numerous contacts with Leo persons. What was started this year is due to bear fruit.

Professor Erskine Crossley of UMass has been elected vice-president of the Executive Council of the General Assembly of the International Federation for the Theory of Machines and Mechanisms.

The election was at the Third World Congress of the federation this fall in Dubrovnik, Yugoslavia, attended by 500 participants from 35 countries. At the technical sessions 200 papers were presented in Russian, German, Serbo-Croatian and English, with simultaneous translation provided.

The International Journal of Mechanisms, which Professor Crossley edits and which is published by Pergamon Press of Great Britain, was adopted as the federation's official journal. He is a professor of mechanical engineering.

Prof. Ricci, a specialist in work physiology at the UMass School of Physical Eduation, did the research under the auspices of the Institute of Work Physiology in Oslo. He was studying the adaptation of the fishermen to severe physical stress, working on boats out of the port of Svolvaer. He also lectured at the institute in Oslo.

It was announced at the 99th annual meeting of the American Public Health Association in Minneapolis that Dr. Warren Litsky, Commonwealth Professor of Environmental Sciences and Public Health at UMass, was elected to a three year term on the Laboratory Section Governing Council. Dr. Litsky was also named to the newly formed Editorial Advisory Board of The Nation's Health, the official newspaper of the Association.

Dr. Litsky also serves on the Editorial Board of Health Laboratory Sciences, a scientific journal of the Laboratory Section, on The Committee on the Microbial Contamination of Surfaces and the Committee on Food Protection. He is also vice-chairman of the Task Force on Standard Methods for the Examination of Water and Wastewater. Dr. Litsky holds Fellowships in the American Public Health Association, The Royal Society of Health, the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and the American Academy for Microbiology. He is a Diplomate of the Intersociety Academy for Certification of Sanitarians and is president of the Connecticut Valley Branch of the American Society for Microbiology.

"Workshop Z" Begins

On November 5-7, a group of concerned persons will gather at the Mt. Toby Meeting house to work on human liberation. The people who have planned this workshop have various experiences and skills. Some have been involved in non-violent direct action; others have led encounter groups; still others have been involved in the radical Christian movement.

The model they plan to use as a basis for the weekend is the women's support group. In fact, the weekend will be an experience of an action-support group. The assumption underlying this workshop is that the cause of people's oppression lies not so much within them as within the institutions and structures of society.

People who would like to participate should notify the United Christian Foundation at 545-2789 or drop in the office at 319 Hampshire House. While there is a cost of $15.00, there are scholarships available.

UNICEF Homecoming Winners

On October 16, the Friday night of Homecoming Weekend, a float parade was sponsored by the Greeks to provide an incentive to raise donations for UNICEF.

Representatives from each Greek house, Maroon Keys, Scrolls, and some dorms also took part. All in all seventy-five people collected for UNICEF, and $295 was raised.

A secondary reason the float parade was held was for the residents of Amherst, who have traditionally enjoyed it. This year about two thousand people watched it from the center of town.

Ten entries participated; the winning float was presented by Beta Kappa Phi-and Iota Gamma Upsilon, and it's theme was "UMass Rocks the Ram Funk Railroad." The winning car entry was decorated by Lamda Delta Phi.

ROTC Still Lives For Those Who Want

by Karen Pearson

Dickinson Hall, the low, inconspicuous building, overshadowed by construction and Goodell Library, houses the Reserve Officers' Training Corps. system.

The slightly-less-than-modern rooms, when not overrun by government or German students, are used to train the students enrolled in the military and air science courses. The Army occupies the first floor and the Air Force, the second.

The Air Force's air science program is primarily a four-year program, but it has recently been modified to include a two-year segment, that is "for those students who decide to enter ROTC in their junior year", said Col. Fisher, a professor of air science in an MDC interview.

In the four-year program, the first two years involve no military commitments, and the cadets take only an oath to uphold the Constitution.

During these years, the cadets are concerned with the history, tradition and organization of the military to continue as juniors and seniors, students are required to enlist in the Air Force and assume leadership, and management responsibilities in their studies. "A major concern is leadership ability," Col. Fisher said.

The cadets who qualify for and desire to become pilots engage in 35 hours of flight training at Turners Falls Airport and cadets are also taken by the faculty on tours to varied installations, across the country to see the Air Force in operation.

"We have a great need for pilots," Fisher said "because the physical qualifications for pilot training are stiff, and most of the students fail the physical." In addition are a battery of officer qualifying tests, much like the SAT.

The Air Force field is "very open", said Col. Fisher. "There are 50 principal career field areas, and these are subdivided into some 400 specialties ranging from pilot to medical service technicians. Most of the fields require a substantial technical background for both men and women."

ROTC is not viewed with great warmth by everyone who is overpowered by visions of the military as a spawning ground for calloused officers, wearing riding crops and spats, whose main occupation is ensnaring unsuspecting innocents and turning them into murderous robots. Many students in fact, consider any campus ROTC as disguised draft officers.

"Actually," emphasized Col. Fisher, "ROTC has been the target, and unfairly so, I believe, of public frustration with the war and incidents like Kent State. The main interest of ROTC is to afford career opportunities for students essentially interested in a military career, he said. Because he believes those interested in military careers are best suited for the program, he also prefers an entirely voluntary ROTC.

Air Science courses are open to any students, without obligation to become cadets. He encourages anyone interested in any aspect to inquire at the Dickinson office any time.

Booters Seek Vengence Today

By STEVE FERBER

Last year, the UMass soccer team lost two games. One of those losses came at the hands of Worcester Poly Institute, and today at Worcester, the Redmen will be looking to avenge that defeat, and get back on the winning track.

True, this year's version is not quite as powerful as last season's 9-1-1 powerful WPI team, but as of late, today's hosts have been on their game and should make it a difficult day for the Redmen.

Four games remain on the Redmen schedule, and to say that all four are "musts" is an understatement. Both the Conference championship and the New England tournament bid are at stake, and the absolute "must" games start with WPI today.

Tufts, the only team to spell LOSS for UMass felled the Engineers from Worcester by 6-1, while two other common Redmen opponents, Boston University, and Coast Guard, also came out on top against this 3-5 WPI squad. B.U., who played UMass to a scoreless tie, downed the Engineers 6-2, while Coast Guard shutout WPI 1-0, after having been dropped by the Redmen 6-2.

Going into their next to last game is WPI, and it is highly likely that they will employ that same 2-3-3-2 formation that gave the Redmen so much trouble last year. For most of last year's game the Engineers kept two forwards on the Redmen's center fullback, yet the Redmen only lost by a 3-2 score. Compensation for this should be the difference today, as UMass will prepare for this unusual alignment, and will most certainly have something to combat it with.

With nine goals and two assists, Jack Blaisdell leads WPI in scoring, and it was Blaisdell who scored two of the Engineers three goals last year. Thus a key will be keeping this fleet forward in check. Also on the worry list will be Jim O'Gray, who is the second leading scorer and will keep the Redmen fullbacks busy.

Worcester's small field will be one of the major concerns of the Redmen, as WPI owns the smallest soccer field in New England. But more than that the Redmen will be thinking about their post-season tournament chances. Having ranked fifth in New England last week, chances were high that UMass would make the four-team tourney. But having been upset by ninth ranked Tufts the selection question remains very much up in the air. Winning all four of their remaining games must be a foregone conclusion if anyone is to even dream of more than 11 games this season.

If the Redmen do make it by WPI, and then Vermont this Saturday, the tourney selection is likely to be decided one week from today, when UMass travels to Springfield, against the fourth ranked Chiefs. But winning today they must do, and winning big just might make a difference when it comes to selection time.

How well UMass will combat this year's tricky Worcester lineup will be answered today, as the 5-1-1 Redmen go against an Engineer ballclub that might have finally found its last season form.

Parmenter Late Bloomer

By MARK VOGLER

(Editor's Note-This is the second in a series of player profiles)

Time is a many splendored thing in the field of athletics. For some it denotes the endowment of experience and a higher performance level. For others, the lack of it serves as an all around inhibiting factor which brings out sure signs of greenness Time is either on your side or against you.

For Redman tackle Harold "Skip" Parmentor, things didn't come easy. As a gridder for Shrewsbury High he was very intent upon continuing in the collegiate ranks. But unfortunately for his sake, Parmenter underwent a two year dormancy in football while attending Worcester Quinsigamond Junior College--a school which did not support the sport.

Then a year ago he decided to transfer to UMass. In so doing he revived his keen interest in football and reactivated himself with junior class playing eligibility--not a simple thing to do when you're starting out on the same foot as freshmen.

It meant a lot of catching up to do. It posed a stiff challenge, mentally as well as physically. But Parmentor was eager to the task and met that challenge successfully. Although he didn't nail down a regular starting berth at defensive tackle, he put in enough time to earn a letter.

One year's experience makes a big difference in a player. At least it did in Parmenter's case. While he has yet to fully master the Redman system and techniques, he has progressed rapidly in a short space of time and has established himself as a first stringer in the UMass line-up. Had he two more years of experience under his belt, there's no telling what heights he could of hit.

Head coach Dick MacPherson refers to Parmenter as "the best native talent we have on the team." As Mac puts it:

"Skip has great size (240 lbs., 6'4"), speed, durability, and toughness. He lacks being great because of lack of experience and being out of football while attending the junior college in his home town where they did not play.

"He is improving continuously, but will not reach his potential by the time he graduates. He has all the physical talents the pros are looking for and should be drafted because that's the kind of young man they like to take a chance on. Once he learns the system and techniques well, they have a great talent at that position."

One of the best teaching aids that Parmenter has received in his stint with UMass has been that of team mate Bill DeFlavio, a two-time All-Yankee Conference tackle. Playing along side of DeFlavio has been a learning experience in itself. It has made him that much better a player.

SKIP PARMENTER

Parmenter claims that DeFlavio is such a hardnosed competitor that double and even triple-teaming usually proves ineffective against him.

"He's really a great performer to play with. He helps you out and makes your job that much easier. If they double team Bill, as sometimes they do, it leaves me a lot of pressure to clean up. Most of the time he's so quick that double-teaming him really doesn't mean much."

Parmenter, you can be sure of, is not at all too pleased with the 1971 UMass showing thus far. He sees the result as far below earlier expectations, but declares with confidence: "We still got a good football unit here at the university."

"There's nothing to be denied about us. If we ever get everything together on a good day, we're really gonna be awesome against our opponent. I hope we can stay healthy the remainder of the season and win as many games as we can. Then the complexion of the campaign might change."

Aspiring a high school coaching career upon graduation in the fall, Parmenter says he might give pro ball a whirl if the opportunity arises.

Fischer Advances To Finals

BUENOS AIRES (AP)—U.S. Chess genius Bobby Fischer defeated Tigran Petrosian of the Soviet Union in the ninth game of their match Tuesday night, thus winning the tournament, $7,500 and the right to challenge world champion Boris Spassky.

Fischer was triumphant in 46 moves, scoring his fourth victory in a row and his fifth in the match. The demoralized Petrosian, who won only one game and could find no way to block the enrushing American, received $4,500 as the loser. Three games ended in draws.

The biggest prize for Fischer was the opportunity to match his skill against Spassky, also of the Soviet Union, in a tournament next spring for the world's championship.

No American has ever held the world title and this is the first time in 23 years that anyone except a Soviet grand master has even been a challenger.

Oakland's Vida Blue Wins Cy Young Award

NEW YORK (AP)—Lefthander Vida Blue of the Oakland A's, who won 24 games in his first full season in the major leagues, was named winner Tuesday of the American League's 1971 Cy Young Award.

The 22-year-old Blue, who blazed his way to a 17-3 record at the mid-season All-Star break, then tailed off to finish at 24-8, became the youngest player ever to win the premier pitching award. Dean Chance, then of the Los Angeles Angeles won it at 23 in 1964.

Blue, who led the league with eight shutouts and a magnificent 1.82 earned run average, landed 10 the 24 first-place votes in the Baseball Writers Association of American balloting.

He was also the only pitcher named on all 24 ballots, accumulating 98 points, 13 more than Mickey Lelich of the Detroit Tigers, who received nine first-place votes and appeared on all but one of the ballots. Veteran knuckleballing reliever-turned-starter Wilbur Wood of the Chicago White Sox received the remaining first place vote and finished third with 23 points, followed by Baltimore's Dave McNally with eight points and Kansas City's Dick Drago and California's Andy Messersmith with one apiece.

Winners Response...

"Thought Lolich Would Win"

OAKLAND (AP)—"I really thought Mickey Lolich would win it, but I'm glad I did, said Vida Blue after becoming the youngest Cy Young Award winner in baseball history.

The 22-year-old left-hander of the Oakland Athletics found out he'd been voted the American League's best pitcher of 1971 when he returned to his apartment here late Tuesday and picked up the newspaper on the doorstep.

"This is great, I'm thrilled, he said, glancing again at the headlines about him.

Then he looked down the page and said with a frown, "The Vikings beat the Colts."

Blue, as an outstanding high school quarterback in his native Mansfield, La., idolized Baltimore quarterback Johnny Unitas and dreamed of someday playing for the Colts.

Instead, he signed with the A's and this year became one of baseball's all-time greatest drawing cards as he blazed to a 24-8 record and helped Oakland win a divisional championship.

"I guess a lot of people came out to see if I was for real," he said Tuesday.

Blue pitched before more than a million baseball fans this year, including his appearances in the All-Star game and the American League playoffs, in which the A's lost to the Baltimore Orioles.

Lelich of the Detroit Tigers passed Blue in victories with a late drive, finishing 25-14, and the A's star said, "If I'd participated in the voting, I'd have voted for him."

Senate Hears Wood On UMass Growth

By DON BISHOP

The subject of the future growth and expansion of the UMass system, was dealt with in a short speech by University President Robert C. Wood last night. He spoke before the weekly meeting of the Student Senate, at the Senate's invitation.

This talk by President Wood and the question and answer period that followed it, were the highlights of last night's meeting.

In their major business considerations of the night, the Student Senate considered the granting of operational funds to the Student Homophile League, the Boltwood Project, the Juvenile Opportunity Extension Program, the Orchard Hill Tutorial Service and the Amateur Radio Club.

These groups were not considered by the Senate for funding this year, last spring. They therefore requested funding from a $5000 discretionary fund.

Taking into account the necessity of saving some of this $5000 for use later in the year, the Senate granted funds only to the Student Homophile League and the Juvenile Opportunity Extension Program.

In his brief address on the future growth of the University system, President Wood gave some projected figures for the expansion of the 3 UMass campuses. By 1980, it is planned that the Amherst campus will have increased its student enrollment from 19,000 to 25,000, the Boston campus from 4,500 to 15,000 and the Worcester campus from 42 to 5,000 or possibly 10,000 students. This increase in enrollment will require an increase in the current State grant of $105 million to over $500 million, to the UMass system.

President Wood stated that this rather considerable expansion requires that UMass pause, reflect and discuss what the steps in this process should be. He emphasized that the University system not only must increase in size, but also must improve in the quality of its education.

Pres. Wood added that he will be interested in hearing the views of the student body and other major concerns on campus, on the subject of the future growth of this campus and the University as a whole. He urged that attention be paid to the report of the "Committee on the Future of the University" on the subject of University expansion. The report is due out sometime this month.

In the question and answer period that followed, Wood responded to questions from the Senate floor.

When asked whether any trust funds had been transferred to the Systems Office in Boston, Pres. Wood replied that some of them had. He maintained that they will be used in a "reserve" capacity, however, and that no programs on this campus will suffer as a result of the transfer.

Senator Nick Apostala raised the question as to how Wood proposes to give this campus some say in the future distribution of funds. Wood replied that with 30,000 people involved in the University, and many different opinions as to how these funds should be distributed, the only realistic approach would be to employ some "parliamentary process", whereby recognized groups could express their opinions. But he made mention of the fact that with the University being a State owned institution under statutory law, the final say on disposition of funds comes down to the Board of Trustees.

In response to a question raised by Senate Treasurer Richard Verrochi on prospective tuition increases for next year, Pres. Wood agreed that there will be considerable debate on this issue in the State Legislature this year. He made it clear that neither his office nor the Board of Trustees has come out with a statement on the question of tuition increases yet.

Amherst News

The Workings Of Town Government

Amherst Town Hall. Above the police station and next to C&C Liquors. That's where the local government is located; and is also the place where you can register to vote for the February 22nd elections, 1972.

Students have never taken much notice of Amherst government. But they may begin to make their presence felt in Amherst government in February, when two Selectmen and 80 Town Meeting Members will be elected.

Until May, 1971, to vote in Amherst elections, the applicant had to be a U.S. citizen, 19 years of age or older and a resident of Massachusetts and of Amherst for 6 months. Very few UMass students noticed this; very few voted.

Last July, of course, a constitutional amendment lowered the voting age to 18. To vote in Amherst elections now, you have to be a U.S. citizen, 18 years of age or older, a resident of Massachusetts and of Amherst for 6 months. Not much different from before.

Students never voted much in Amherst elections before. How much of an impact will they be able to make in the next election?

Mrs. Estelle Matusko, Town Clerk of Amherst, expects that most of the students who will register to vote in Amherst will register in time for the national elections next November. Town elections will next be held in February. In the Town elections, held every February, the Amherst Selectmen and Town Meeting Members are chosen.

The Town Meeting is the major legislative Body. It approves the budget, appropriates money, approves new projects, and makes most of the other decisions for Amherst.

The Town Manager is the chief executive of Amherst. He supervises and directs the administration of most town service departments, boards, offices, commissions, etc. He appoints people to, and can remove people from, most of the appointive positions in the town government. The Town Manager, ever since Amherst began its town manager system in the early 1950's, has been Allen Torrey, who the Daily Hampshire Gazette says is "the most powerful man in Amherst.

The Town Manager is appointed, and can be removed, by the Board of Selectmen. The Selectmen also appoint the members of the Landlord-Tenant Relations Committee, the Citizens Review Commission, the Zoning Board of Appeals and the Registrars of Voters.

There are 5 Selectmen. They are elected for three-year terms, and the terms are staggered. They are elected by the Town at large. If a voting block or coalition dominates town elections, the Board of Selectmen will be a homogeneous group representing the block. Student voters could substantially affect this dominant voting force.

In the next town election, in February, voters will choose Selectmen to fill two of the five positions. Those positions are now held by H. Hills Skillings and Stephen E. Keedy.

The terms for the 240 Town Meeting Members are also three years and staggered. In February, about 80 Town Meeting Members will be elected.

The place where a person votes is determined by what precinct he lives in. The town is divided into seven precincts.

Each precinct gets Town Meeting Members in numbers proportional to the number of its registered voters. The numbers of members for the precincts are revised every fifth year or in December of any year when the Town Meeting votes for reapportionment. As the town meeting Members are elected from the precincts rather than at large, there is possibility of more diversity among the Town Meeting than among the Board of Selectmen.

When the full impact of student registration is felt, probably sometime before the federal elections next year, Amherst will have to revise the numbers of Town Meeting Members that the precincts get. Precincts 2 and 3 will probably be given more members. Southwest is in precinct 2, and Orchard Hill, Central, the Quad and Sylvan are in Precinct 3.

If students register in Amherst for convenience in voting in national elections, and don't vote in local elections, their presence on the registration lists will still give more Town Meeting Members to the precincts they reside in.

SWAP Still Open

The S.W.A.P. Conference is upon us again, and the committee would like to extend an invitation to all students to participate.

S.W.A.P. (Student Workshop on Activity Problems) is an off-campus, informal gathering of students, faculty and staff which will be held this year on Nov. 19-21 at the Northfield Inn, Northampton, Mass. The workshops discuss University problems and from these discussions are prepared proposals that are presented to the University community.

Some of the problems to be delved into by this tri-partite body next month are: Chancellering (a real hot one this year, you know); Politicization (the evolution of the University); and Structure and Function of the University. Too numerous to mention are the subtopics assumed under these three umbrellas.

The various discussion groups will be led by several staff, faculty, and students, so here is the chance you've been waiting for to tell 'em all just what you think of UMass.

Application deadline is this Friday, Oct. 29. Pick yours up now at the RSO desk on the first floor Campus Center. Selection of delegates to the S.W.A.P. Conference is made strictly on the basis of the written application, so you don't have to be a Lee Sandwen to get picked!

Best Hits Nixon's Economic Policies

By MARY M. KURTZ

Arguing that none of Nixon's new economic policies could solve the problems facing the United States today, Michael Best, professor of economics, addressed an audience of about 75 people in the Campus Center last night.

Prof. Michael Best

The topic of the lecture, "Nixon's Wage and Price Freeze and the American Empire" was divided into three main parts.

Best first presented reasons why he felt the new programs are anti-labor, citing tax programs which favor increased corporate profits, cutbacks in government expenditures causing more unemployment, and the absence of controls on profits dividends, and interest rates.

"The government has stepped in to nullify contracts between labor and management, and has stepped in on the side of management," stated Professor Best, terming the new programs an attack on collective bargaining.

The second portion of the speech dealt with the reasons why Nixon acted when he did and why he reacted so strongly. Increased unemployment, inflation, a drop in industrial productivity and a deficient trade balance which is used to finance and maintain U.S. international involvement were the factors that prompted Nixon to act according to Best.

In the final portion of the lecture, Best discussed the fundamental problems facing the United States. These included the growth of foreign businessmen, the dying role of the United States in the international monetary scene and the increased militarization of our production. The maturation of monopoly capitalism, caused by several factors including an increase in production of non-consumable goods, and an "alienating" work process, was stated as one of the major problems facing this country.

Stressing his anti-labor platform, Best pointed out that the subordination of private needs to collective needs is supported by the fact that there is no freeze on taxes.

Reduced unemployment opportunity caused by corporations moving abroad, and the gap that exists between business profits and the satisfaction of human needs, were the final two processes discussed before Professor Best concluded his talk saying, "All of these processes have come to a head, none of which can be resolved by Nixon's new economic policies."

Brezhnev Accuses U.S. And Red China Of Intrigues

PARIS (AP) — Leonid I. Brezhnev accused the United States at a formal dinner Wednesday night of intriguing with Red China to settle the Vietnam war "behind the backs of the Vietnamese people."

Repeating a theme that has appeared frequently in the Moscow press, the Soviet Communist party chief said "backstage intrigues" or attempts to impose a solution would fail.

It seemed surprising that Brezhnev would use a dinner for President Georges Pompidou, his official host, as a forum to attack both Washington and Peking.

Brezhnev did not mention China by name, but the formula was a familiar one. After saying "American aggression" in Indochina was an obstacle to peace, Brezhnev added: "There is only one way to a solution of the Indochina conflict and that is an end to the foreign intervention in the internal affairs of the peoples of that region of the world.

"No solution can be found to this problem by attempts to impose a foreign will on Vietnam by force, or by intrigues carried on backstage behind the backs of the Vietnamese people."

Brezhnev's allusion to the possibility of a Chinese-American agreement on Vietnam was an indication of the persistent Soviet uneasiness about President Nixon's decison to visit Peking.

Brezhnev also spoke of the "energetic actions of our two countries favoring the convocation" of a European security conference. He said the conference for which Moscow has been pushing would take place next year.

His reference to preparations followed reports from diplomatic sources earlier Wednesday that Brezhnev and Pompidou had reached agreement in principle on a procedural formual clearing the way for a conference by the end of next year.

Sources said the formula involved a link between the completion of the Big Four protocol on Berlin and the ratification by West Germany of its treaties with Soviet Union and Poland.

Pompidou and Brezhnev reportedly agreed to a target date of autumn 1972 for the opening of the conference.

Brezhnev's visit here-his first to the West as general secretary of the Soviet Communist party-has been anything but a popular success.

Aside from a few devoted French Communists who applaud him in his rare public appearances, Frenchmen seem to have greeted the Kremlin leader with indifference. Jewish groups have been protesting the treatment of Jews in the Soviet Union and some have shouted hostile slogans at him.

Nixon 'Shocked' At Taiwan Expulsion

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon, giving a delayed reaction to Monday night's events that saw the United Nations admit mainland China and expel Taiwan, suggested Wednesday the result could be lessened U.S. support and a reshuffling of foreign aid.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said Nixon was shocked by what he regarded as "undisguised glee" and "personal animosity" on the part of unnamed U.N. delegates following votes by the world organization that marked a diplomatic defeat for the United States.

Reading from notes, Ziegler made it clear to reporters that he spoke for Nixon and the government in saying, "we would be less than candid" if warning were not served publicly that Monday's happenings could well erode public and congressional support for the U.N. and in the case of foreign aid for countries whose delegates joined in what he termed "a shocking spectacle."

The White House spokesman said he was talking about events that took place on the floor of the General Assembly following Monday night's votes, as seen by Nixon and others on television news programs.

The extent and direction of Nixon's reported shock, perhaps anger, were not clear.

The press secretary insisted the United States is not challenging the U.N. votes, but rather objects to the post-voting actions of some delegates as seen by Nixon on his home screen.

Asked exactly what certain delegates had done to shock the chief executive, Ziegler spoke of "the cheering, the clapping, the undignified actions on the part of some delegates."

In talking earlier about displays of "personal animosity," Ziegler said he meant that animosity was directed at American policy rather than at Nixon or the country as a whole.

The President, he said, supports the United Nations and wants to see it succeed. But he said "the shocking demonstration and the undisguised glee that was shown by some of the delegates...could have a detrimental effect on support for the United Nations in this country."

"It is not our intention to retaliate," said Ziegler. But he noted that some of the delegates whose actions were offensive to Nixon represented countries that receive considerable foreign aid from the United States.

"The shocking spectacle," he said, "could also effect foreign aid allocations because of the impact on Congress and the people."

At a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing on the treaty returning Okinawa to Japan, Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania told Secretary of State William P. Rogers that the U.N. decision to expel National China has created strong feelings against both the United Nations and the $3.2- billion foreign-aid bill now before the Senate. The bill contains funds for many countries that opposed U.S. efforts to keep both Chinas in the world organization.

"There exists no real friendly sentiment towards the United Nations in the Senate today," Scott told Rogers, adding that almost any move to cut the bill at this point would be approved.

"I'd rather cool the whole foreign-aid bill at this point," Scott said.

If an amendment is offered to cut U.N. funds, he added, "I'm afraid it would pass."

Rogers said, "We've got to be careful how we act as a nation" and said the United States should avoid getting into a position of saying, "We pay more so we expect them to do more for us."

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana sought to forestall until next year any move to chop U.N. funds in retaliation.

The regular appropriation for the U.S. contribution to the United Nations has already been passed, but the pending measure contains some $141 million for U.N. aid programs and subsidiary agencies such as the World Health Organization.

"There are cuts to be made," Mansfield told reporters, "but they shouldn't be made on the basis of pique."

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Pentagon acted Wednesday to close the National Guard and Reserves as an escape hatch for draft-eligible 19-year-olds by directing that they be given the lowest enlistment priority.

Dr. Theodore C. Marrs, deputy assistant secretary of defense for reserve affairs, said a 19-year-old signed up on a Guard or Reserve waiting list "is not home free."

WASHINGTON (AP)-Secretary of the Treasury John B. Connally held out hope Wednesday that controls over the U.S. economy can be lifted by the end of 1972.

However Connally, chairman of the Cost of Living Council, avoided any commitment as he opened the case for Phase 2 economic legislation.

Instead, he urged the House Banking Committee to approve the full extension-until April 30, 1973-President Nixon has asked for his control powers.

GANDER, Newfoundland (AP)-President Tito of Yugoslavia arrived in Newfoundland Tuesday under tight security on the way to his first state visit to the United States.

Royal Canadian Mounted Police stood guard during a short welcoming ceremony at the airport.

SAIGON (AP)-South Vietnamese rangers and armed elements pressed their seep in eastern Cambodia Wednesday, and two battles The South Vietnamese operating in the Krek region of Cambodia were unable to make contact with the retreating enemy but they reported they found 20 enemy bodies, apparently killed by air strikes.

LONDON (AP)-Prime Minister Edward Heath's Conservatives, helped by some opposition Laborites, seem headed toward an uneasy Parliament victory Thursday for leading Britain into the European Common Market.

But most Labor party lawmakers were enraged by what they see as the prospect of a group of their own colleagues bailing the Conservative government out of a fix.

Agnew Calls U.N. A Paper Tiger

WASHINGTON (AP)-Vice President Spiro T. Agnew said Wednesday the United Nations has become a paper tiger and a "propaganda sounding board for the left." But he added U.S. membership is worthwhile because "it's good to be in the other guy's huddle."

The vice president said the United States should reassess its financial contributions to the United Nations, the diplomatic importance it assigns the world organization, and its system for distrubting foreign aid.

He said the General Assembly made a bad decision Monday night when it voted to oust Nationalist China and seat Peking, "but I've never felt, honestly, that the United Nations has served the interests of the United States diplomatically in any important sense."

"The U.N. has increasingly become in recent years a propaganda sounding board for the left," Agnew said in an interview with The Associated Press, "and this indicates to me that it's going to continue this way..."

Aleutian Atomic Test Approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration announced Wednesday plans to proceed with a huge underground atomic blast in the Aleutian Islands, drawing expressions of dismay from the Canadian ambassador here.

Sen. Mike Gravel, D-Alaska, told newsmen the blast, testing a five-megaton anti-missile warhead, is scheduled for Nov. 4, but James R. Schlesinger, chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, told newsman a test date has not yet been established.

Schlesinger said, however, that preparations would be completed within a week, making the test possible by the Nov. 4 date.

Meanwhile, seven environment groups headed by the Committee for Nuclear Responsibility, are seeking to halt the test through court action, contending it might cause earthquakes, tidal waves, radiation leakage or other environmental damage.

Alaska Gov. William Egan said President Nixon and the AEC "in making this decision have taken and must assume-full responsibility for the safety of the people who would suffer the consequences if an accident occurs."

Congress had passed legislation last Sept. 22 barring the test before mid-1972 unless the President authorized it.

Schlesinger told a news conference Wednesday, "The Atomic Energy Commission is now planning to proceed with the Cannikin test. We have now received the requisite authority to go ahead including detonation."

"We have presidential authorization," he said in answer to a question.

Canada and Japan have both opposed the test, in which a hydrogen warhead with a force equivalent to 5 million tons of TNT would be exploded some 6,000 feet underground in remote Amchitka Island in the northern Pacific Ocean. It would be the biggest U.S. underground test although the Russians have had some in this range.

Canada's Ambassador Marcel Cadieux was informed of the U.S. decision in a meeting with Schlesinger earlier in the day. A Canadian spokesman said Cadieux expressed a sense of dismay and told Schlesinger there were international principles involved in a test whose effects might reach to the borders of other nations.

Environment groups opposing the test have argued that it might leak radiation into the Pacific Ocean.

Schlesinger told newsmen the administration has considered the environemental issues and believes the risk to be extremely small.

"Overriding requirements of national security have, of necessity, taken precedence," he said, explaining that the test is needed to make sure the warhead for the Spartan antiballistic missile works properly before the missile is deployed.

Congress has authorized its deployment by 1976. The Soviet Union recently conducted underground atomic tests of around the same size.

Schlesinger said the warhead has been placed inside its deep test hole and that work to seal the shaft "will begin today."

Closing the shift, he said, would "make it impractical to recover the device"; but he said if necessary the warhead could be destroyed underground by "tens of pounds of TNT" without touching off any nuclear explosion.

In that case, he said, the debris of the warhead including its radioactive components would be permanently buried, but there would be no large-scale generation of additional radioactivity.

Both Gravel and Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, criticized the administration's decision.

Muskie said the test might leak radiation "the consequences of which are unpredictable."

Schlesinger, however, said "the risks are exceedingly small."

The Amchitka Island site was selected in 1966, he said, "because of its remoteness and the virtual zero likelihood of any damage."

In a separate lawsuit, 34 congressmen have been trying to obtain disclosure of the administration's own private assessment of the test's possible impacts, contained in a report to the President from a special committee of the National Security Council.

Schlesinger repeated Wednesday the administration's position that this document was protected by executive privilege and should not be disclosed.

Child Guerillas Game

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The British army served notice Wednesday its troops here will shoot to kill children who fire on them in the war against Irish Republican Army guerrillas.

The warning was issued after two youths, described as being 12 to 14 years old, sprayed a British patrol in Belfast with submachine-gun fire and two more soldiers died in a bomb blast in Londonderry.

"The troops will shoot to kill any man or child or woman who happens to shoot at them," said Maj. Peter Johnson, Scots Guard company commander. Army headquarters said he spoke with full authority.

The two boys fired nine shots at Johnson's patrol Tuesday night and the major said his vehicle seemed the target.

"If children fire guns at soldiers, then they will be shot," Johnson said. He added that the boys wore the black berets of the IRA.

A Plea From Kent

(Ed. Note-the following letter was sent to us in the hopes that its publication would rouse the student body to assist the cause of the students of Kent State. We urge cooperation with and involvement in this cause.)

KENT STATE UNIVERSITY URGENTLY NEEDS YOUR HELP. Over 10,380 members of our campus signed a petition asking President Nixon to convene a federal grand jury on the Kent State affair. (To date, only a local grand jury; whose report was so biased that a Federal District Court Judge, upheld on October 22, by the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals, ordered it expunged from the record and physically destroyed; has weighed the evidence.) Last Wednesday, Kent's President, Dr. Glenn Olds, flew to Washington and presented petitions at the White House. He was assured an answer by the end of November.

Our mammoth task now is to get OTHER COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES to support our petition. Would you please help us by printing this letter and the following petition in your paper?

Dear President Nixon:

We, the undersigned, support the over 10,380 members of Kent State University in requesting you to convene a federal grand jury to investigate the Kent State affair.

1. Name Address

Please return, by November 22, to:
President of the Student Body
Kent State University
Kent, Ohio 44242

We cannot adequately express how important it is that members of your campus circulate this petition (we found that moving about with it rather than merely posting it got us over 10,000 signatures in ten days) and return it to us by November 22. If we flood Washington with petitions, the President will be unable to ignore the tremendous sentiment in the country for a high level investigation of the Kent affair.

Thank you in advance for your cooperation in this urgent matter.

In peace, I am

Sincerely yours,
Bill L. Slocum
President of the Student Body

No Women On The Court

WASHINGTON--It came as no surprise to most men here that President Nixon could not find a qualified woman to nominate to the Supreme Court.

"Heaven knows we tried," an Administration spokesman said, "and the pressure on the President was enormous. First Mrs. Nixon talked to him about it, then Martha Mitchell and finally Bella Abzug. But it just wasn't in the cards."

"Why?" I asked.

"Well, we investigated it and discovered women just weren't cut out to be Supreme Court justices. For one thing it takes a lot of physical endurance to sit on the court, hearing cases all day long, and our medical people told us women couldn't take the pressure. They have a tendency to fidget when they have to stay in one place too long."

"I hadn't thought of that but it's true," I admitted.

"Also we decided the Supreme Court is a man's world. When the Supreme Court justices get together in private session to discuss cases, they like to tell locker-room jokes and cuss a lot. A woman wouldn't be comfortable in such an atmosphere and it would inhibit the male justices in their work."

"It figures," I agreed.

"Another major consideration was the question of protocol. We had to think what effect a woman justice would have on dinner parties in Washington for the next 15 or 20 years. A Supreme Court justice outranks most people in the government, including Cabinet officers, and it just wouldn't look right for a woman justice to be seated on the right of her hostess. Putting two women next to each other at a Washington dinner party is unthinkable and could cause grave consequences in the social world for years to come. I think Mr. Nixon said it best: 'Presidents may come and go but dinner parties in Washington go on forever.'"

"What other objections did you find?" I wanted to know.

"As you know, the President said in his television speech the one criterion he used in his selection was that a member of the Supreme Court should be the very best lawyer in the nation. He said, 'In the legal profession, the Supreme Court is the fastest track in the nation, and it is essential that the justices on that court be able to keep up with the very able lawyers who will appear before the court arguing the cases.'

"Now the President wasn't just using a sports metaphor. What we did was lay out a one-mile track around the Supreme Court and we clocked several women nominees in races against male lawyers. We discovered that those women who agreed with the President's philosophy couldn't keep up the pace, and those who were fast enough to get around didn't have enough blue-blooded strict-constructionist breeding."

"No one can say the President didn't give women a fair test," I said.

Another factor that militated against a woman being appointed to the court was the fear that there would be mass resignations among the Supreme Court guards, who had been used to dealing with men justices all their lives.

"You can find any number of qualified Supreme Court justices, but it takes years to train a good Supreme Court guard.

"But there were other things we had to worry about as well. What kind of precedent would we be setting by appointing a woman to the Supreme Court? Suppose the next thing women would ask for was a seat on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, or an opportunity to conduct Sunday church services at the White House? Where would it stop?"

"God only knows," I said. "Why didn't the President make this perfectly clear?"

"As soon as he explains it to Mrs. Nixon, Martha Mitchell and Bella Abzug, he probably will."

Students-Give Them Bread And Circuses

By LARRY LADD
President, Student Senate

The chancellor's resignation and the issues it dramatizes have caused quite a ripple in the stagnant pool we call the university. Not since the tidal wave of the 1970 student strike has the campus experienced such a trauma.

The strike was a period of very intense conflict between and among students and faculty. Agony and hysteria prevailed as the University struggled internally to find direction. All factions ranted and raved at each other, and decisions were reached only after lengthy, hostile negotiations. Near the end of it all, newly-appointed Chancellor Oswald Tippo urged the formation of a University-wide governance system, incorporating the Faculty Senate, Student Senates, and representatives of the administration.

A special committee was appointed, composed of faculty, grad students, undergrads, and administrators. After a year of bargaining and hard work, the committee submitted its report. It recommended combining the three existing senates into a single "University Senate," which would have broad policy-making authority over most aspects of campus life.

Appointing a committee is a Pavlovian institutional response to crisis. Unfortunately, by the time the committee reports, the problem creating the crisis has once again been swept under the rug. The "problem" is forgotten until it again emerges (surprise!) in another crisis. During the resignation trauma, the forgotten problem of university governance again creeped out from under that rug. In this case, students and faculty were not fighting each other, but were confronting the encroaching Boston bureaucracy. But we found coordination and unity between faculty and students extremely ponderous and tenuous. Each senate met separately by a different schedule. Representatives met for long hours trying to guess what proposals would be acceptable to all three senates. Whether the results of these negotiations represented the true campus mood is conjecture. The senates surely wasted a lot of time and energy that could have been better spent meeting all together in one place, face to face, coming to a common resolution.

But this issue is only the latest example of the need for a University Senate. Faculty and students have disagreed on a variety of issues (ROTC, Picketing Code, Grading Policy, etc.) and have failed to reach agreement in negotiations. As a result, the Board of Trustees usually endorses the faculty position, giving students only bread and circuses. Such folly must end. We on the campus must be able to decide among ourselves, rather than leaving the decision to the trustees.

Before the recent "crisis" is forgotten, we must move aggressively to adopt a formula for a University Senate composed equally of faculty and students. This is no time for superficial solutions or endless elocution. Academic freedom must become bilateral. No faction has the primary claim to authority in this institution. Mutual isolation leads only to indecisiveness or coercion. It is time that we institutionalize our interdependence.

It is imperative that the campus become united against threats from without and committed to the responsible resolution of disputes within. If the campus is to stop tearing itself apart, that is where we must begin.

Letters To The Editor

Thank You, Thank You-Again, Thank You

To the Editor:

The fact that the Collegian published Mr Baglione's article last Friday "Right on to the People" surprised me, unless of course they did it to help publicize the Nov. 6 antiwar activities, in which case we must thank them. However, rarely in the history of our daily has an article so dense with misinformation, so rich in political myopia, and so colored with lies, graced the eyes of the University community.

Mr. Baglione speaks of our "leaders" beckoning us. Does he disregard the beckoning received in the mail by hundreds of thousands of young Americans, informing them that they are to serve their country for the next two years or until they are killed or maimed? Does he hear the U.S. govt. beckoning the dollars from the paychecks of millions of American working people to pay for a heinous war that is opposed by the overwhelming majority? To Mr. Baglione's one dimensional mind, the organization of massive, independent political action, in the streets, against that war, is merely a beckoning to loyal troops. He insults the nearly one million dedicated people who, in the face of vicious, well-publicized red baiting and dire predictions of failure, demonstrated in Wash., D.C., and San Francisco last April, not for a carnival, nor for a concert, but for immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia.

In the last five years, the war has become, Mr. Baglione, not the "repository of blame for each and every ill of our society", but rather, a focal point for many of those ills. No one but you sees it as the only "stumbling block to the achievement of a poverty-less society". You see, by spending between 20 and 30 billion dollars per annum, year after fiscal year, the process of decay engulfing our cities has been accelerated, aid to education has suffered on every level, working people of this country have had to face increasing unemployment, rampant inflation, diminishing real wages, and now a wage freeze. Most recently, the noble Nixon administration, in its zealous rampage of belt tightening, has tried to cut the meager sum allotted to the school lunch program for underprivileged children.

Genocidal, Mr. Baglione? What else would you call the killing and maiming of over one and one half million people, through the use of napalm, saturation bombing, search and destroy missions, and massive long term toxic defoliants?

Racist, Mr. Baglione? Has the fact that black and brown people are killed and wounded in numbers far above their proportion in the population slipped your mind?

Inflationary? If Mr. Baglione had taken the time to read the Mobe's Oct. 13 two-page leaflet relating inflation, unemployment, and the wage freeze to military spending, perhaps he would have been better informed. But then again, the Mobe doesn't play fair. It uses facts.

Mr. Baglione's incisive journalistic attack rose to the heights of criticizing Bella Abzug's figure, voice, and choice of hat style. These commendable efforts not sufficing, he reached deep into the very bottom of his noxious barrel, drawing out his two favorite weapons; the distortion and the lie. Antiwar sentiment and participation in demonstrations have, over the years, grown rather than diminished, Mr. Baglione. When referring to the efforts of the Socialist Workers Party, you were, I'm sure, speaking of the verbal commendation given this summer to the YSA-SWP as the best builders of the antiwar movement, by Jerry Gordon, who is a national coordinator of NPAC and who is not a member of the SWP. However, if you had taken the trouble, before slandering the SWP, to read The Militant, you would never have been able to make the asinine remarks you did. If, in aspiring to appear mature and sophisticated, you refuse to label the war as imperialist, or to indict the capitalist system as its cause (because Bill Buckley tells you it is childish to do so), you may continue to ignore the facts, but you will never change them. If, Mr. Baglione, you wish to dispute any of the charges made above, I am willing to engage you in public debate. If you do not, then the silence will be deafening.

Either way, Mr. Baglione, if your commitment to ending the death and destruction in Southeast Asia extends no further than the purchase of balloons, patches, and pop records, we of the antiwar movement will attempt to struggle on itbout you. But if it is more than that, we invite you to join us in Boston on November 6th when across the nation, the demand for immediate and total withdrawal will ring out again, louder and stronger than ever before.

Wake Up, Sleepy

To the Editor:

So far this semester there have been quite a few letters criticizing the large lecture halls at this University. It was suggested by one that the only true education is achieved by the Socratic dialogue. Another despaired of ever learning something from a lecture.

Might I suggest to these deprived students that if only they would listen and not sleep at a lecture they might learn something. The University attempts to compensate for these large lectures by having discussion groups as part of the course. If learning can only be accomplished through dialogue, why is it so few people ever talk in the discussion groups? I agree that there are much better and more expensive modes of education than the lecture system, but until someone comes up with a feasible substitution the student should take full advantage of what is offered him.

All An Accident?

Perhaps it's nothing more than an unfortunate accident that the organizational gains being made nearly every day by the antiwar movement, in building the Nov. 6 actions, especially in the field of labor support and participation, have been completely blacked out in the "respectable" press (N.Y. Times, Boston Globe, Newsweek, Time, etc.), the television and radio news media. Last April 24 having been the largest assembly of people for a political purpose in the history of this country, and Nov. 6 promising to be even bigger, does not seem to be among "all the news that's fit to print". Why does the media refuse to cover a significant, independent, political movement, when a large portion of that media (New York Times, Boston Globe among others) either directly or indirectly, espouses sympathy with that movement's goal? Where indeed do they find time and space for articles telling us that the antiwar movement is dead? How are they able to squeeze in a Commie-scare editorial or two, shortly before a demonstration?

The fact is that Richard Milhous Nixon, since the disasterous invasion of Cambodia and the resultant nationwide student strike, can do nothing without looking over his shoulder. Was the lengthly news blackout before and during the invasion of Laos an accident? Or was he testing the wind? Was his recent decree freezing wages labeled temporary at first because he thought an economy as sick as ours could be whipped back into shape in 90 days? Or was he looking into the streets, wondering about the reaction?

It certainly isn't congress he's watching for, over his shoulder. They're right under his thumb. It isn't George Meany and Leonard Woodcock, those fierce guardians of labor's interests, nestled as they are deep in his hip pocket. It's you. It's me. It's the million people who stood together last April 24th. It's everyone who feels the burden of the wage freeze. It's everyone who refuses to stay home on November 6th.

A concrete question faces each and every one of us on Saturday Nov. 6th. We know from past experience that antiwar sentiment is gauge very carefully by the administration, the acid test being participation in demonstrations. The cold political fact is that if you are not with us in the streets on that day, demanding immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia, you will be counted among Nixon's silent majority, your silence connoting agreement with his war policy. We are not guilt baiting you. We are not moralizing. We are stating that on that day, there will be no apolitical people. There will be no noninvolvement. The only practical question a week from Saturday will be, 'Which side are you on?'

Tom Moriarty

You Are What You Teach

To the Editor:

"Do you really believe in what you teach?—a simple question you should pose yourselves before lecturing your classes. Honesty is essential of all those with pretentions of analyzing realities and focusing in on truths. The value of History, if any, shows us over and over again there is but one thing all living creatures can be certain of, so why kid yourselves?

Being an educator is no light responsibility. To you it might be a salary, if so, earn it! In this country, unfortunately, PhD equals professorship, hence the intellectual apathy so prevalent in our Institutions of Higher Education. Friedmanns, Skinners, "Heretic Economists," Physical Scientists, Capitalists, Socialists do tell us your levels of incompetency before inculcating in your naive students your simplistic theories. (Excuse the redundancy of these last two words if you see it Professors.)

"Educators," you may not live to realize your mistakes, we, the students might—protect yourselves and warn us by measuring your inadequacy.

Douglas A. Chiriboga

Look To Yourselves

To the Editor:

Mr. Magwood's letter written to refute the sentiments expressed in my article "Right on to the People" does nothing less than give credence to that article's claims. The story, written for "Poor Richard's Magazine," which appears in each Friday's Collegian, was not, as Mr. Magwood assumes, a statement on the ineffectiveness of mass demonstrations. It was, rather, a satire on the "pop" atmosphere that pervades the anti-war movement and its annual conventions. The butt of the satire was those characters like Mr. Magwood who have become so inflated with sense of their importance and of the "holiness" of their cause that they fail to see how obnoxious and absurd their self-righteousness and moral agression are.

One must surely have lost all control of their rational facilities to proudly proclaim, as Magwood does, that 220 people attended the October 13th Teach In. It is absurd to believe that this is a significant number out of a school population of about 20,000! Such is the folly of believing that demonstrations are still the most effective means for accomplishing an end to the South Vietnamese conflict. Mr. Magwood should recognize that his tremendous energies should be directed toward attempts to register the new 18-20 year old vote and the support of anti-war candidates.

Demonstrations, I will admit, do provide a greater religious experience for those who require it. And they must provide tremendous gratification for the "High Priests" of the movement. Yet most people must have a more reasonable and sane attitude toward the predicament their country now faces.

It is not strange, then, that some people are embarrassed by the shrill fanaticism of the movement's devoted, their clownish antics and their sanctimonious strutting about. The pose they have struck is overly-serious and silly. They should not be so surprised, therefore, that reality mocks them.

Politella Gets Yearbook Award

AMHERST-Recognition as the 1971 Distinguished Yearbook Adviser in Universities and Colleges" has come to a University of Massachusetts faculty member, from the National Council of College Publications Advisers (NCCPA)

Dr. Dario Politella, associate professor of English and journalism at the Amherst campus, was presented with the plaque at Dallas, Texas, this week during the 47th annual convention of NCCPA and the Associated Collegiate Press.

A total of 1,320 delegates from 274 campuses in 42 states appeared for the convention, where Politella delivered a paper titled "Laugh-In, Campus-Style." The paper was based on his recently published book, "The Illustrated Anatomy of Campus Humor."

Politella has been a consultant to college yearbooks since 1950, when he joined the journalism faculty at Kent (O.) State University. He has served as student publications adviser at Syracuse University and Ball State University, as well as at UMass.

A nationally-recognized authority on the campus press, he is currently editor-founder of "The Campus Press Syllabus" magazine, after having founded and edited a similar publication at Ball State U., called "The Collegiate Journalist," and "The Sixth Estate" magazine at Syracuse U.

He is a prolific writer of magazine articles and books about the campus press. Among his book credits are two editions of "The Directory of the College Student Press in America," published by Oxbridge of New York. Politella has been adviser to the Index, the 102-year-old student yearbook of UMass on whose editorial board he served while a student here. He was also editor-in-chief of the campus newspaper, the Collegian, in 1947.

The plaque is presented annually by NCCPA to a single adviser chosen by his peers. The citation reads: "For Outstanding Service to Student Publications at the University of Massachusetts and to the Nation's Student Press."

Politella serves as editorial consultant to Scholastic Editor magazine of the University of Minnesota and to Photolith Magazine of Memphis, Tenn., which are distributed nationally to college and high school yearbook editors. His latest article appears in the current Scholastic Editor, titled, "Whither Yearbooks?"

He resides with his wife and two teenage children at Sunderland, Mass.

Referendum Called For To Decide Taiwan Future

NEW YORK (AP) — Leaders of a Taiwan independence movement called Tuesday for an internationally supervised referendum on Taiwan and predicted the island's 14 million inhabitants would choose neither the Communists nor the Nationalists.

Dr. Lung-chu Chen renewed his appeal for Taiwanese self-determination the day after the United Nations voted to seat Communist China and expel the Nationalist regime, which rules in Taiwan but claims to represent all Chinese.

"The future of the Taiwanese people is a question distinct and separate from Chinese representation in the United Nations," said Chen. "We have no doubt that in a free and honest election our people would opt for an independent state free of Chiang and Mao."

Chen, a 35-year-old teacher at Yale Univerity Law School, was referring to Mao Tse-tung, chairman of the Chinese Communist party, and Chiang Kai-shek, president of Nationalist China.

What Started On The Shores Of Lake Cayuga

By MARTY KELLEY
MDC Staff

Believe it or not it all started near the shores of Lake Cayuga and if you add the perspective of fate along with the usual attitudes of winning and losing, it's been a frustrating month gone by for coach Dick MacPherson, his staff, and the Redman gridiron group.

Lake Cayuga aligns the city of Ithaca, New York, the home of Cornell University and their Big Red football power. Before the semester started and the plot thickened, UMass surprised Cornell 27-27 before 8,000 partisans who left the stadium knowing Ed Marinaro would be a Heisman Trophy candidate, but subsequently that UMass would be a threat.

But fate began to wind its course at Ithaca and the old football stigma called the "injury" began to take precedence. Now with the season limping into its sixth week at Storrs tomorrw, the early season stigma has become a plague that has cursed a team destined for New England entity.

To retrace the discouraging saga of football '71 on campus, Coach Dick MacPherson got clipped below the ankles before the first fall whistle. All-YC fullback and "sure-shot" pro Dick Cummings, because of academics, was not to return to the backfield.

Well, that left a backfield of Piel Pennington along with Mike Sawyer and speedsters Paul Metallo, and Angie Dinardo. With 24 lettermen returning along with a potential All New England tackle, tight end, and defensive lineman, things looked fairly stable for rookie coach MacPherson.

Back home from Ithaca, the Redmen started a new segment of the football squad--the walking wounded corps. Officially indicted were Dennis Keating, Paul Metallo, Steve Schubert, Bill Hale, and Paul Hansen. And kicker Dennis Gagnon, recuperating from a thigh operation two weeks earlier, showed he'd have seasonal problems.

Well, Coach MacPherson was given a precarious but sentimental induction at Orono, three miles from his home town at Old Town. The 13-0 triumph proved little for the offense, and due to Maine's sluggishness, only a minor accolade for the defense.

But out of the natural loneliness of Orono, a kid by the name of Berra came to the surface. Tim Berra rambled 21 yards for the first Redman tally of the season. Ironically on the same play fullback Mike Sawyer was hurt and linebacker Dick Cronin instead of Cummings became the "bread and butter" man.

And before the East's finest 11 came to Amherst, with a 19 game hex over UMass, there was a new backfield. It was to be Cronin-Berra and no Metallo. The line behind this new duo was ever so thin.

Then came the Dartmouth travisty. With the speed, quickness, and discipline of a well oiled tank, the Big Green destroyed UMass with 450 yards of total offense and a 31-7 reminder.

When the Indians trucked north toward Hanover, they left UMass with another reminder. Striken with a costly clip, tackle Bob Donlin had his career cut short as his leg buckled beneath him. Now the leader of the offensive line was gone, Bill Deflavio hurt his ankle, and coach Dick MacPherson had a week to savor the situation before Boston University.

Once something goes bad, everything seems to go on you. And the injuries mounted. At halftime at Nickerson Field Coach MacPherson was a happy man, at the finale he was just a little bit greyer.

Piel Pennington put on a show (13-22-240 yards, 1 touchdown) in the first half that was emblematic of everything that was ever written about him. But the quarterback from New Canaan Ct. suffered a costly shoulder separation and Redman critics could only usher, what next?

Well, next on the agenda was Homecoming '71. Disparity hit the Redmen to the tune of 47-21 at B.U. as only two of the seven touchdowns scored were netted from scrimmage. The specialty teams had their day and so did the Terriers after three futile Saturdays in a row.

Pennington's loss was an unexpected fatality. It was a shame that a young Soph quarterback after 2 1/2 games had finally matured. At B.U. Pennington looked like he was well on his way to putting Greg Landry's passing marks to shame. If Mr. Pennington was healthy, B.U. the lesser, and Rhode Island, the transgressor, might have been had.

By SYDNEY OMARR

An outstanding person born under Taurus is Joe Louis. He can display the gentle or Venus nature of this sign, but when he was active in the ring the explosiveness of the Bull showed with startling clarity. The determination of Taurus was exemplified by the former heavyweight boxing champion. He often arose from a knock down to score his own knockout.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Friendships are reactivated. Social activity is sparked. Best now to leave details to others. Make overall plans. See beyond the immediate. Take initiative in gaining valuable introduction.

Special Awards...

For Making Sports Insane

By STEVE GERSHMAN

The following awards go to these deserving people who over the past two months have exhibited a unique action. Without them, sports would be merely a sane, boring way of life.

1. The "President Nixon Good Citizen Award" for patriotic gestures goes to Stadium Realty Co., alias Foxboro Stadium Plumbing. We thank you for complying with the inflation freeze by holding down the water levels in your stadium.

2. The "Front Office Patience Award" goes to the Buffalo Braves Management. It seems they waited an entire game before firing coach Dolph Shayes. Congratulations guys, this must have taken a lot of patience waiting an entire 48 minutes.

3. The "slick Operators Award" goes to the Miami Dolphins for their fine playing surface in the Orange Bowl. There were only 114 slips in two games.

4. To Frank Robinson goes "The Good Sportsmen Award" for his fine sportsmanship after the World Series. Frank said, "The best team lost", in one of his rare moments. Frank your sportsmanship comes close only to your play in the series.

5. The City of Philadelphia earns the " id Unemployment Award". In their wisdom they closed athletic facilities in the city for lack of money. Now they can take all this extra money and hire more police to watch over all the kids with nothing to do but roam the streets.

6. The "Togetherness Award" goes to the New England Patriots defensive backfield. They all managed to get injured at the same time, twice this season. Nice going boys, the team that is injured together loses together.

7. The "Dave Cowens-Bob Kaufman Love Your Opponent Award" goes to Lantz Rentzel and Bruce Taylor. Anyone watching the last 49's-Rams game could see the two of them showing their love with tender embraces, and friendly love pats. Oh, that smarts.

8. The "Magicians Now You See It, Now You Don't" or "How to Make a Sure T.D. Disappear Award" goes to Dave Smith of Pittsburgh. In front of a National T.V. audience Dave proved the hand is quicker than the eye. He managed to make the football and a sure TD disappear while all alone at the 3 yard line. Oh well, Dave, maybe you can make the ball reappear while you're running all those extra laps in practice.

9. The "best Dressed Athlete Award" goes to boxer Jim Jones, who in a recent middleweight bout pulled a first. It seems when he took off his robe in the ring, he had no trunks on underneath. It was quite a shock to Jim and everyone there. Maybe you started a new style in boxing, Jim?

10. And finally our proudest award, for our most deserving winner. "The Distinguished Goal Tending Award" for fine goal tending goes to the Sports Writers of America, who set an amazing record by shutting out Earl Weaver for the third straight year. Guys, you're goal tending is outdone only by your knowledge of baseball.

To all of you who received these awards, thank you for making Sports the insane thing it is. Congratulations, you all earned it.

...Has Continued Throughout The Season

As Marty Evans suffered embarrassment at B.U. frustration was the meal ticket for Rhode Island. In his first full fling, Evans fell to Bob Erhardt's superiority as the latter passed the Rams past UMass 31-3 for the Big Red's third straight thrashing in the month gone by.

And if you were at Memorial Stadium Saturday, you couldn't have left any less frustrated than Dick MacPherson. Bob Innis decided to wait to the final second of the fray to kick his first collegiate field goal as a shocking 37-yarder into the wind and the ultimate in pressure deadlocked a shocked UMass eleven, 3-3.

Fate forecasted that it was to end just that way. It looked as though Marc Palau's 26-yarder at the 14 minute mark saved the Redmen, but a season so far plagued by injury, misdeed and misfortune was not to change its course.

Indeed the 1-3-1 overall mark is a statistic that does not bear out the overview. In every facet of their game, UMass has been deprived unmercifully from that September roster that was to bring fame, fortune, and the beanpot back to Amherst.

Coach MacPherson's favorite cliche (that's soon becoming the team motto) is "close ranks and move on." Well, if the Redmen keep closing the gap, there won't be anyone around to finish at BC later next month.

But under the present condition you can't blame the Redmen for being 1-3-1. When you know you've lost your leader on both the offense (Donlin) and defensive)Deflavio) lines, you know you're in trouble. When your quarterback quickly proves he can pick apart most New England defenses, he gets filled, so now what do you do?

And when you lose your starting fullback before the start of the season (Cummings), have your backup man quit (Mike Sawyer), and have to resort to a determined linebacker (Cronin), you know there are going to be complexities.

It's midseason and the fastest man on the squad (Paul Metallo) is finally off crutches. Your split end and tight end (Steve Schubert and John Hulecki) haven't sprinted 10 yards without pain.

So what do you do for an encore? Poor Dick MacPherson shouldn't be pressed for one. Under these conditions only God can put wins on your side.

If at the season's advent things were as expected, you can bet that 1-3-1 mark would be reversed to date. "Mac" knows it. So do the players. But the personable head coach wants to take the blame, but the media won't let him. He's the type of guy who'll look you in the eye and say:

"Close ranks and move on."

"Close ranks and move on."

Weekly YanCon Picks

New Hampshire quarterback Bob Hopkins, Boston U. cornerback Mel Priester and Vermont halfback Gary VanDecar have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive, and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Hopkins, a 6'1 195-lb. senior, completed 8 of 14 passes for 157 yards with 4 touchdown passes of 46, 30, 22 and 5 yards. Hopkins set new career UNH records for most TD passes (28) and most completions (360) as the Wildcats beat Northeastern 37-7.

Priester, a 6'0 180-lb. senior, made a key interception to stop a drive and had 7 unassisted tackles to help B.U. to a 28-7 win over Rhode Island.

VanDecar, a 5'10 190-lb. sophomore, carried 32 times for 124 yards and a one-yard TD in Vermont's 13-10 loss at Hofstra.

(NOTE: Although new Yankee Conference members Holy Cross and Boston U. do not play enough league games to qualify for the Conference championship their players will be listed in the weekly award winners and statistical rankings.)

"As Of One Minute To Go..."

By EARLE BARROLL

After Saturday's game at UConn some "grandstand coach" came up to Dick MacPherson and told him, "you don't deserve to win when you're first and goal from the six yard line and don't score."...A very brilliant deduction to say the least!!!

Not one to let an opportunity like this pass MacPherson responded, "Well, UConn was first and goal from the six inch line and didn't score so they don't deserve to win either."...Nothing like a "take this" to one who thinks he has put a coach down.

The moral to this game ending performance is this: if you can't get six from six either settle for a tie or run to the nearest soundproof room to avoid the brilliance of those who think they "know so much".

Well this was Saturday and yesterday at the Newman Center MacPherson just couldn't think of a better atmosphere in which to spring this "moral".

And while he was at it he sprung a few more hardened facts on the UConn game that bore fruit in context and interest from the large gathering at the weekly Quarterback Luncheon.

"As of one minute to go in the game, I felt I had done a hell of a job," Mac said. "Before we went ahead we had a decision to make on whether to try for the touchgoal.

"I felt the offensive line was doing a terrible job. We weren't moving them (UConn defensive line) out and I was pretty confident that we could get three points and I was also pretty confident that we could stop them."

The status of quarterback Piel Pennington has not changed according to MacPherson. "He will be in the same situation for the rest of the year and will need an operation on his shoulder at the end of the season."

Mac also had his two graduate assistants who help coach the freshman team with him, Ernie Smith and Tom Cataldo. The word from them was "optimism for next year's varsity" as they have many good boys who they feel will be seeing a lot of action for the varsity.

Due to exams the seniors who usually make the weekly luncheon were not able to make it so Smith and Cataldo were called in as a last minute move and as Mac said after they finished with their encouraging reports, "I'm glad there were tests today, you fellas have made me feel a lot better."

But on a serious note the first year head coach added, "By no means have we given up this year. I feel we're getting better and don't think we're looking to next year with this crop of freshmen.

"I want no part of a program that thinks like this."

As for this Saturday's game with Vermont MacPherson said his offense was going to have to go right at the Catamount defense.

Shuffled Line-up Keeps JV Booters On Winning Trail

By JIM PINSKY

It may have taken half the season but it appears the UMass J.V. soccer team has jelled. They impressively thrashed Tufts J.V. 4-1 on Saturday to up their season mark to 3-2. Following a discouraging loss to Amherst Coach David Jekanowski decided to shuffle his lineup. His two major moves were to switch center Tony King to halfback and put Steve Richter in goal. Both moves paid off handsomely as King scored two unassisted goals and goalie Richter held Tufts to one score.

The Redmen dominated the whole game moving the ball freely and keeping the pressure on Tufts' goalie. One major statistic that was representative of the game was that Tufts didn't get a single shot on goal in the second period.

The Redmen opened the scoring at 5:30 of the second quarter when Steve Sormanti took a long throw in from Alan Long and converted it for a score. It wasn't until 4:15 of the third period before UMass got their second score. This time it was Tony King unassisted. Then Tufts got their sole goal on a mixup in the UMass defense.

Things were soon back to normal and at 13:10 Tommy Donovan banged home a rebound to give the Redmen a safe 3-1 lead. Tony King put in the final UMass goal at 16:46 of the fourth on a corner kick. With a 4-1 lead Coach Jekanowski pulled the starters and gave many players their first taste of action this year.

With only two games to go the J.V. faces the last week of the season with their work cut out for them. Trinity is here Tuesday and in what shapes up as their toughest game they face Springfield on Friday.

Springfield beat UConn 6-1, and UConn beat the Redmen 2-0. On the other hand the Redmen defeated Holyoke who in turn handed Springfield their only loss. No matter what it shapes up as a tough battle.

IT'S ON THE LINE SATURDAY-The UMass cross-country team puts its Yankee Conference title on the line Saturday at UConn. After romping through the conference during the regular season the Redmen are rated as the team to beat in this meet, but they will receive some stiff competition nevertheless from other strong Conference individuals and perhaps a hungry Huskie group to keep them busy throughout the five-mile course.

And on the right is the creator of the toughest cross-country course in New England, Ken O'Brien, head coach of cross-country at UMass. On Monday night he ran the weekly recreational race and after finishing in a near state of exhaustion stated, "I'll shoot the guy who made up this course." (MDC Photos by Tom Derderian)

Second Generation Varsity Football

By JOANNE RESTIGHINI

(Editor's Note-This is the third in a series of player profiles)

When looking back upon the past seasons of UMass football, the name Lou Bush brings to mind memories of a 141 lb. halfback who, in the early 30's, earned recognition as one of the greatest players in the history of the University. Continuing a tradition started by his father is Bill Bush, left cornerback for the Redmen.

If you ask Bill if his father has been a major influence in his football career, he'll tell you that his father has only "slightly influenced" his career and that he plays football because he enjoys the game and because he gets something out of it. In fact, Bill admits that the biggest thrill of his life has been being able to play football.

"I never thought I'd be able to play collegian football because of my size." Bill, 5'11", 185 lbs., is rather small as his father was when he played football. However, Bill's size has not stopped this determined player as it did not stop his father.

"The game of football is like the game of life. You have to learn to take the ups and the downs," admits Bill

BILL BUSH

Surely, every player has experienced these ups and downs, just as Bill has. After playing the position of quarterback in his freshman year, Bill switched to the defensive line in his sophomore year. During this year, he played the best game of his career against Delaware in which he intercepted two passes and led the Redmen to victory. He can also painfully recall the UMass-Dartmouth game in his junior year in which he suffered an injury.

As for this season, the Senior from Greenfield admits that the defeats have been "a shock to the whole team, especially the seniors. "We have a lot of pride and we don't like to lose." Nevertheless, Bill feels the coaching staff this year has been one of the best in years.

"This year there's a great deal of togetherness between the players and the coaching staff. They're all very honest with us and we respect them for it."

Bill will not be walking away from football when he leaves UMass. Majoring in Physical Education, he plans on being a coach of football in the future.

As for Lou Bush, he is still active in the sport. He is an official for some smaller school football games.

Asked if his father comes to all his games, Bill grins and admits that he doesn't. "He gets too nervous!"

"Warpath" Tonight

Tonight at 7:30 Marty Kelley and Ken Best will host UMass line coach Bob Harris and Redman stars from the UConn game, Marc Palau and Paul Metallo on WMUA's "Warpath". The topic for this weekly segment will be the Vermont game on Saturday and a brief look at the UConn game. Tune into WMUA 91.1 fm, the Voice of UMass sports.

Booters Tie; Story Tomorrow

In a hard fought contest the UMass soccer team battled W.P.I. to a 2-all tie at Worcester. The Redman record now stands at 5-1-2. Lindo Alves scored his ninth goal of the year on a penalty kick with ten minutes remaining in the game. For the complete game story see tomorrow's sports page.

Students Walk Out On Faculty Senate

By ANNE STADNICKI

Student representatives walked out on the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday in protest of the stand the faculty took during discussion of student participation in faculty personnel decisions.

Larry Ladd, Student Senate Vice President, and one of the five student representatives, explained: "The whole direction of the debate was against any significant student voice in the decision making process as to what professors will be hired, fired, promoted and given tenure." He walked out in the midst of discussion along with Senate President Lee Sandwen, Senator Nick Apostola and two unidentified students.

Five student members of Faculty Senate committees and the Student Senate President have the right to sit in on Faculty Senate meetings. They can take part in the discussion, but cannot vote. The student contingent which walked out were the members of this group.

The controversial issue which brought on the discussion and eventually the walkout was a motion presented by Joseph Burroughs, Chairman of the Tenure and Grievance committee in the Faculty Senate. He moved to ask the various schools and faculties making up the University to report their individual department policies regarding student participation in faculty personnel decisions.

An amendment to the motion came from the student representatives through Prof. Robert Wellman, Secretary of the Faculty Senate. He suggested that the Faculty Senate endorse voting student participation in faculty personnel decisions on all levels in all departments.

After some discussion the amendment was ruled "out of order" by Faculty Senate President David Booth because "it did not directly relate to the motion presented", he said.

Whether students should be involved at all in decision making in the University was brought up in the following discussion, and after a statement that none of the individual departments or colleges should be able to vote among their own faculties on allowing student input in their departments, the student representatives walked out.

Questioned afterwards, President Sandwen said that the Faculty Senate's views on the subject of student input and vote are "out of context with reality".

"Outside agencies such as the Board of Trustees and the United States government say that students are qualified to choose a chancellor and to vote in elections," Sandwen charged. "Why won't the faculty believe that students are competent to judge in personnel decisions that affect their lives?"

He said that in his opinion the Faculty Senate discussion revealed a completely different attitude towards student participation in the affairs of the University than that projected during the crisis period after Chancellor Oswald Tippo's resignation. The interaction and cooperation of that time were unique and we had hoped they would continue, but obviously they haven't," Sandwen said.

He compared the situation now between the students and faculty to the situation a few weeks ago between the Faculty Senate and the Board of Trustees. The Board took little note of resolutions brought by the Faculty Senate representative to the Board at the October 7th meeting. Sandwen said the Faculty Senate refuses to take note of students, who should be an integral part of the operation of the University.

In other business, Chancellor Edward C. Moore spoke on the public higher education system in Massachusetts. He is working to coordinate UMass with other state and community colleges systems, and state supported public institutions.

Questions arose from the Faculty Senators as to why no faculty people from UMass-Amherst were involved in the Master Planning Report recently compiled. The report deals with policy and projection for all the higher education institutions in the Commonwealth.

Also considered at the weekly meeting was the possibility of a legal counsel for the Faculty Senate. The suggestion was sent to the rules committee to be studied.

Search Committee Names Chairwoman

The Chancellors Search Committee met today in the Board Room at Whitmore Administration Building and chose a graduate student as its temporary chairwoman.

Nancy Arny agreed to act as chairwoman for a few weeks, at which time the committee will elect a permanent chairman, according to Robert Sprague, undergraduate member of the Search Committee, also student senator.

He also said the committee has agreed to send representatives to the forthcoming S.W.A.P. Conference.

S.W.A.P. (Student Workshop on Activity Problems) is an off-campus, informal gathering of students, faculty and staff which will be held this year on Nov. 19-21 at the Northfield Inn, Northampton, Mass. The workshops discuss University problems and from these discussions are prepared proposals that are presented to the University community.

Sprague maintained that the committee members will attend because the conference will deal at least in part with role and selection of a new chancellor for the UMass, Amherst campus. "It will be a very valuable experience for us because it will be very helpful to hear how students feel about choosing a chancellor. Basically, we're going to listen rather than talk," he explained.

The Committee will meet again Wednesday, November 3, at 4 p.m. in the Herter Hall Lounge, to discuss organizational and administrative matters. The following is a list of the constituencies on the committee:

Trustees	John W. Haigis	22 High St., Greenfield, MA 01301
	Mrs. Carolyn Rowland	282 Beacon St., Boston, MA 02116
Deans' Council	Wendell R. Smith	School of Business Administration
Faculty Senate	Terence Burke	Geography, Morrill Center
	Micheline Dufau	Romance Languages, Herter Hall
	GlenGordon	Government, Thompson Hall
	Warren Litsky	Environmental Science, Marshall Hall
	Leland Roblee	Chemical Engineering, Goessman Laboratory
	Donald St. Mary	Mathematics, Arnold House
Graduate Student Senate	Nancy Arny	34 Dickinson St., Amherst, MA 01002
	Blaine Dunn	Box 16, McNamara Hall
Student Senate	Patty Asack	30 Puffton Village, Amherst, MA 01002
	Jackie Berryman	50 Meadow St., Apt. 67, Amherst, MA 01002
	David Dunkin	Pierpont House
	Robert J. Padgett	405 Webster House

Haffty's Holes Arrive

By DAVID GREEN

The Harlem Globetrotters? Well, not exactly but the UMass intramural basketball league does have its own bunch of comical characters that tries to pass itself off as a team. Haffty's Holes are their name, and if they don't beat you on the basketball court, they'll definitely show you up before game time, at halftime and during timeouts.

Bruce Haffty, namesake as well as coach of the team, and his gladiators have been friends since their days in North High School in Worcester. Now seniors they have been carrying on North's losing tradition for three years at UMass. "This year will be different" vows backcourt ace Lou Groccia, "we're out to win." That remains to be seen. But if they don't win games the Holes will surely win friends.

Haffty's Holes have put together a show that will add much more than basketball color to the intramural league. Starting off with softball uniforms, they even have an accordian player to psyche them up with a fight song. Add to this cheerleaders, also in the gold and blue of true Haffty fanatics, and basketball at UMass has its first sideshow.

Bruce Haffty

The "Holowettes" hail from Melville House. They are one more step in the true philosophy of intramural sports: play to win but above all have fun. Haffty's Holes epitomize this idea.

Their offense is potent yet, unfortunately, their defense, as one team member put it is "porous". Enhancing the bright uniforms are the player's nicknames. Fred Rosenthal is known as "Rosy", he's the Walt Frasier type. The engaged member of the Holes is "Wedding Bell Bill" Dagillis. He plays like Don Nelson. "USCG" is Coast Guard veteran Joe Gosselin (you'll see a Dave Cowens in this one). Rebounding like Jerry Lucus is "Head" Tom Peabody and shooting as if he were Earl Monroe is "The Stick" Lou Groccia (no explanation needed for his handle).

There is just one thing wrong, how can a team of Nelson, Lucus, Cowens, Frasier and Monroe lose? Find out next Monday at 9:15 on court #3 in Boyden.

New RSO Budgetary Procedure

To RSO Groups Requesting Senate Funding

In order to make the budgetary procedure of the Student Senate more equitable to all groups involved and to insure that the student's money is spent for the most useful purposes a new budgetary procedure has been implemented.

Please pay attention to Article 4, Section 8, Chapter 3 sub-sections C and D. Your group, according to this By-Law is required to submit a written rationale for funding and an estimate of the number of persons involved in your group to the Budgets Committee!

We will be asking for your groups rationale very soon this semester so please begin compiling your information. Your budget cannot be heard unless you have given us your rationale.

Please remember these guidelines for funding in writing your rationale:

1) The prime consideration of the Committee is reviewing each individual request will be based on whether the organization fulfills a useful role to the undergraduates of the University and if the organization does fulfill a useful role and whether it really requires the funds it is seeking.

2) The Committee cannot fund any religious organization or any organization which is in any way affiliated with a religious organization.

3) The Committee cannot fund any organization that is involved in blatant political activity (Under the Board of Trustees ruling, this means any organization which endorses candidates or works for the election of any candidate, organizations which are opposed to certain policies but do not endorse candidates are not included under this restriction).

4) The Committee in most instances, is not allowed by the Senate to fund overnight off-campus trips (off-campus conferences, that is).

5) The Committee, in most instances, is not allowed by the Senate to fund weekend meals for undergraduates who are off-campus because of duties connected with your organization.

6) Compensation is given for weekday meals missed for undergraduates who are off-campus because of duties connected with your organization. Compensation is at the current Dining Commons rate of $4.45/day for all three meals.

7) The Committee cannot fund administrative personnel unless students are clearly unable to perform the task.

Your groups rationale should be typed or written in a legible form so that the Committee will be able to read it. For more information, call the Student Senate office at 5-0341.

BY-LAWS: Art. 4, Sec. 8, Chap. 3, Sub Secs. C & D:

C) The committee starting first semester will review each group, paying only attention to the reason(s) by the group should be funded.

d) Each group must furnish the committee with a written rationale for funding including past activites, present activities and future plans. Also the number of persons involved in he group and the number who recieve benefit from the group on their estimates must be presented to the committee.

McGovern Speaking Here Sunday

Senator George McGovern will be speaking in the Student Union Ballroom Sunday.

Senator George McGovern (D-S. Dak.), an announced candidate for the Democratic Presidential nomination, will make a campaign swing through western Massachusetts on Sunday, October 31st, stopping at UMass in the evening.

Following a speech at the First Unitarian Universalist Church in Springfield late Sunday morning, the Senator will travel to Amherst for a reception in his honor, after which he will speak in the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30 P.M. Senator McGovern's speech, concerning the youth vote and political change, will highlight a voter registration rally being coordinated by John Stevens of the Amherst Registration Drive Coalition.

Two weeks ago the Coalition, comprised of the Young Republicans, the Young Democrats, the Universities National Anti-War Fund, UMass Students for McGovern, and the People's Community Union, succeeded in registering some 616 UMass students during a special eight-hour registration session held in the Campus Center.

Senator McGovern and Senator Alan Cranston (D-Calif.) have introduced legislation which would give students the right to vote where they attend college. Introducing the bill last July, Senator McGovern commented: "This legislation is designed to make sure that petty bureaucratic rulings in local communities do not deny millions of 18-to-21-year-old first voters the right just given them by the 26th Amendment to the Constitution."

"It would be tragic if the right to vote just gained by millions of young people was denied them by the accident of residency during the school year and by narrow rulings by local election officials.

"What I have found as I travel the country is great fear on the part of many students that they will be disenfranchised merely because they are students and merely because they do not live at home during the year."

Speaking at a voter registration rally in Bend, Oregon, last week, Senator McGovern remarked: "There is no question in my mind that the power young voters have is enough to decide not only who will be the next President of the United States, but which way the country is going to go in the years ahead." The South Dakota senator has for many years opposed American military involvement in Indochina and what he considers excessive defense spending in light of critical domestic needs.

OEP Rejects Investigation Request

By ANNE STADNICKI

The office of Emergency Preparedness (OEP) has rejected the Student Senate's request for a full investigation into the legality of the University's collection of rents and fees increases. Student Senate President Lee Sandwen said the Senate plans no further action at this time.

The OEP notified Student Senate Legal Counsel Richard M. Howland last week that they would not conduct the investigation which the graduate and undergraduate student senates had called for in a joint session October 6th. At that meeting, the senates approved a letter to the OEP, written by Howland on the subject.

Howland said that the interpretation of President Nixon's freeze which was communicated to him last Friday made all of the students' efforts useless. If the ruling had been made final previously, the Senates would not have gone through all motions they did, he said.

It had been believed formerly that if the University had issued bills at different rates, for instance the usual and the increased rent rates, the freeze would not apply if at least 10% of the students paid the higher rate. The student senates' case was developed around the fact that the University did not satisfactorily prove to the senates that 10% of the students had paid their bills within the required time period. Howland appealed to the OEP for an investigation to decide whether the increase had been established legally.

The ruling made last week in essence said that the students had no case to present. If even one person paid the rents at the increased rates, then all would have to pay, according to the OEP.

UMass students all were issued the bills at the increased rate, therefore when one student paid, the freeze applied, according to the ruling.

Howland said that the University is capitalizing on an opportunity to avoid the freeze, while students comply. He suggested that the University could voluntarily return the increase (about $25) to the students, as did the University of Wisconsin, but "when some sort of austerity could be practiced the University prefers to fight lofty financial battles, leaving the student behind."

Interested In Spending A Semester In France

By JOANNE RESTEGHINI

How would you like to spend a semester studying in a small, quaint town where the sun shines down on the picturesque scenery and surrounding mountains and where fun and adventure awaits all those interested?

No, this is not Amherst, Mass., but rather Grenoble, France, situated by the Alps. For those University of Massachusetts students taking part in this program, sponsored by the University, Grenoble will be their home from February to June.

According to Professor William Gugli who will be in Grenoble as an advisor for the students, this trip may be called "A French Experience". The students will learn things about France and the French people that they could never pick up from a textbook.

As of now, half the students going to Grenoble are French majors. For these students, courses will be offered in literature, civilization, language and grammar at an adjunct to the University of Grenoble set up especially for foreign students.

Students going, who are not French majors, will be taking about the same courses. However, they will have to pursue study in their particular area of interest.

All of the students going will be living with French families or in hotels or apartments.

An organizational meeting was held Wednesday night, in Herter Hall, at which, approximately seventy- five students were present. However, the number of students definitely going is not as known yet.

Britain Joins The Common Market

LONDON (AP)- Parliament voted Thursday night to take Britain into the European Common Market, giving up a thousand years of independent power status for a role in a united Europe.

The historic decision, Britain's most important foreign policy shift in this century, came when the House of Commons voted 356 to 244 to accept entry terms in principle, a Conservative government majority of 112.

Earlier Thursday the House of Lords, traditionally dominated by Conservatives among the hereditary and appointed peers, ratified Common Market membership, 45 to 58.

A year-long battle remains to push detailed enabling legislation through Parliament in time for Britain to join on the target date of Jan. 1, 1973.

The opposition Labor party is committed to fighting it all the way. But Prime Minister Edward Heath is staking the survival of his Conservative government on getting it through.

Three other applicant nations-Ireland, Norway and Denmark-must still decide whether to accept the entry terms offered them.

Together with Britain and the six founding members-West Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg-they would form the largest free trade market in the world, with a population of some 250 million people, and rival the economic power of the United States or the Soviet Union.

In the longer term, enlargement of the Common Market could pave the way for creating a political union speaking as a third superpower in world affairs.

The massive majority cut across party lines as dissident Labor lawmakers defied party discipline and voted with the government in favor of joining.

It was a personal triumph for Heath, the man who led Britain's first bid to join Europe in 1961, an attempt later vetoed by French President Charles de Gaulle.

The vote approved this notion:

"That this House approves Her Majesty's government's decision of principle to join the European communities on the basis of the arrangements which have been negotiated."

Crowds gathered outside Big Ben, the huge clock of the Westminster parliament near Heath's residence, No. 10 Downing Street, awaiting the result.

In the jammed House of Commons lawmakers sat on the floor to hear the closing stages of debate, with all the seats full.

There was uproar in the ancient chamber when the result was announced by Speaker Selwyn Lloyd, a one-time Tory foreign secretary. Cheers of the protagonists mingled with the jeers of the antagonists.

Some lawmakers threw their order papers to the floor in obvious frustration.

For former Prime minister Harold Wilson the result was a forewarning of worse things to come.

About one third of his followers appeared to have defied party policy by voting with the government. This could well spark something of a civil war in the Labor movement with loyalists seeking the scalps of the defectors.

Heath discarded the idea that the globe-girdling British Commonwealth could offer an effective alternative to the common market as an economic, military and political grouping.

And he discounted the idea that Britain on its own can exercise any realistic influence in the world on issues of economic and fiscal policies.

"We are dangerously vulnerable to protectionist pressures if no satisfactory outcome to the world's problems is achieved," he said.

Wilson lashed the Heath government's acceptance of the terms offered by the six-nation continental group.

"The terms involve an intolerable and disproportionate burden on every family in the land," he cried.

He accused Heath of "grovelling to his French patrons" and said this had weakened British interests in the present world monetary crisis.

Then, responding to the challenges of his opponents, Wilson set out what a future Labor government's attitude would be if it took office after Britain had become a member of an enlarged community.

"Today is not an end. It is a beginning," he said.

"One Parliament cannot bind its successors.

"We would nevertheless recognize the signature of a treaty.

"We would give notice that we would not accept the terms negotiated by the Conservative government, the burden of the common agricultural policies, the blows to the Commonwealth..."

Many of the lawmakers were red-eyed with weariness. The House had sat through the preceding night. Altogether more than 220 of the 630 members of the chamber had spoken since the debate began six days ago.

About 3,000 people packed the roadway outside the House of Commons, waiting for the vote.

The crowd was mostly silent, but at its center was a hard core of anti-Common Market demonstrators brandishing Union flags and placards condemning "the bureaucrats of Brussels."

When the vote came over transister radios among the throng, a great roar went up: "We're going into Europe."

Court Nominee Heads Six Corporations

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Lewis F. Powell Jr. holds stock worth nearly a half-million dollars in six corporations of which he is a director.

Three of these corporations paid Powell's law firm nearly $400,000 in legal fees during 1970.

This material, compiled from corporate proxy statements filed with the Securities and exchange Commission, illustrates the financial stature of Powell, a 64-year-old lawyer from Richmond, Va.

Powell will soon be submitting his own detailed financial statement to the Senate Judiciary Committee, which will conduct confirmation hearings for him and William H. Rehnquist, both of whom were nominated last Thursday by President Nixon.

He has indicated he would put his holdings into a blind trust or take whatever other action the judiciary committee might require. He said in a newspaper interview that he would do "whatever is necessary and proper" to eliminate potential conflicts of interest and resign directorships with commercial connections.

Based on mid-week stock prices, the six holdings in corporations of which he is a director were worth $452,732. The largest segment was 8,200 shares worth $181,425 in the Ethyl Corp., a Richmond-based firm which is the principal supplier of the controversial lead-based additive used in some gasolines.

Powell holds 4,175 shares worth $101,244 in Commonwealth Natural Gas and 1,600 shares worth $97,600 in Philip Morris, the cigarette manufacturer.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Spiro T. Agnew says he wants President Nixon to decide "in a cold, hard, practical political way" whether to keep him on the Republican ticket in 1972.

He said the only basis for that decision should be what is best for the effort to re-elect the President.

PARIS (AP) — American peace negotiator William J. Porter invited Hanoi and the Viet Cong Thursday to respond to the Saigon government's decision to liberate nearly 3,000 Viet Cong prisoners by freeing some of the American and South Vietnamese prisoners in their hands.

The second-string Communist negotiators at the 134th session of the Paris peace talks ignored Porter's appeal.

MARSEILLE, France (AP) — "What's your name again."

It was no casual encounter that prompted the question, but an effort by the Kremlin's No. 1 man, Leonid I. Brezhnev, to change his image as a humorless Russian party bureaucrat.

The butt of the joke was Andrei A. Gromyko, who was Soviet foreign minister for eight years before Brezhnev succeeded in ousting Nikita Krushchev and becoming Gromyko's boss.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The credit card industry collects a "windfall" from consumers by failing to correct billing errors, a New York congressman said Thursday.

Rep. Jonathan B. Bingham, D-N.Y., said the average consumer who attempts to straighten out an erroneous bill is likely to be ignored unless he "commands some special influence."

Court Upholds Atomic Test

WASHINGTON (AP)—A U.S. Court of Appeals refused Thursday to halt an underground atomic test explosion on Amchitka Island, but ordered the government to let a federal district judge inspect secret documents on the so-called Cannikin blast.

Government attorneys at the Justice Department and lawyers for environment groups opposing the test held separate strategy huddles to decide whether they would appeal the dual decision.

A spokesman for the environment groups said they would make a new effort to halt the test.

The court had given government attorneys until 4 p.m. Thursday to deliver the documents or appeal the decision, but it later extended that deadline at the government's request until 10 a.m. Friday.

The environment groups said their further action would await the Justice Department's next move.

The government plans to explode a 5-megaton nuclear warhead designed for the Spartan antiballistic missile almost 6,000 feet under Amchitka Island in the remote Aleutians chain of the northern Pacific Ocean.

Japan, Canada and environment groups in the United States have opposed the test blast, saying it might touch off earthquakes or tidal waves, leak radiation into the ocean or atmosphere, and harm wildlife.

Last Sept. 22 Congress voted to bar the test before mid-1972 unless the President directly authorized it.

President Nixon gave the Atomic Energy Commission written permission Wednesday to go ahead with the test.

AEC Chairman James R. Schlesinger announced Wednesday that preparations for the shot would be completed within a week, and Sen. Mike Gravel, D—Alaska, told newsmen it was scheduled to take place Nov. 4.

Schlesinger said the date had not yet been fixed.

Meanwhile, seven environment groups had sought a preliminary injunction against the test, while 34 congressmen in a separate action sought disclosure of official comments on its environmental hazards, particularly documents by Environmental Protection Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus and by Russell E. Train, chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality.

District Judge George Hart ordered the government to submit the documents for his private inspection, but Justice department attorneys appealed the decision to the U.S. Court of Appeals here.

The environment groups, headed by the Committee for Nuclear Responsibility, requested a temporary restraining order, but Hart denied that request, and the environment groups then also appealed to the Court of Appeals.

The three-judge panel Thursday denied the restraining order but upheld Judge Hart's order that the documents be produced

Scientists Urge National Cancer Tests For Women

NEW YORK (AP)- Scientists are urging the federal government to set up a national screening program to detect possible cancers in women whose mothers were given a hormone-like drug during pregnancy.

Harvard Medical School scientists reported last April the first indications that administration of the drug-diethylstilbestrol appeared to cause a rare vaginal cancer years after in the daughters of women who had taken the drug to prevent miscarriage.

The Food and Drug Administration said Thursday that its analysis of that report and the 60 additional cases found since then has shown that the connection between the drug and the cancer is "statistically significant."

A spokesman for the agency indicated, however, that no decision has been made yet on a surveillance program.

Diethylstilbestrol-DES-is the same drug used as a "morning-after" pill to prevent conception after intercourse. The FDA conclusion, and a new warning against use in pregnancy, does not affect the contraceptive use since the problem area is in surviving children of women who take the drug during pregnancy.

But theoretically, there is a risk of unknown degree if a woman takes the DES for contraception and if, for some reason, it fails and she becomes pregnant. This risk is then to the female offspring, one expert said this week, but the link here is tenuous.

The morning-after pill is given in far lower total dosage.

Newsmen Denied Access To Attica

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP)-A federal judge refused Thursday to grant newsmen immediate access to riot-scarred Attica state prison for interviews with prisoners.

But Judge John T. Curtin of U.S. District Court left the door open to further consideration of the newsmens' req. st.

He said he would meet Nov. 12 with lawyers for newsmen and the state to see if they want to present more evidence "concerning the final resolution of this action."

The judge's ruling favored the stand taken by state correction officials and Attica Supt. Vincent Mancusi, who balked at letting newsmen inside the prison a little more than a month after a five-day riot that claimed 43 lives.

"It finally became apparent," Judge Curtin said, "that the main reason for forbidding interviews was, as Mr. Mancusi testified, that certain types of news stories can be inflamatory; can have a devastating effect upon the climate; can provide a difference of opinion."

At a hearing several weeks ago, Mancusi testified that permitting interviews inside the prison could affect the safety and security of the institution.

He noted that the state was conducting an investigation of the riot at the prison and that prisoners' rights could be violated because anything they said during an interview could be held against them. He also said there was a shortage of space for interviews. Six newsmen testified that they had tried in vain to interview Attica inmates.

Gus Szlosek

It Seems Pretentious

I, Gus Szlosek, am about to break a taboo I have imposed on myself for three years: I am about to write a serious "editorial". If anything can be really serious. Of those of you who recognize my name (only my vanity acting up), I am sure most of you will not read beyond the point where you are actually convinced I am serious (although some of you may read all the way to the end of this and not be convinced). I don't blame you--if you are forced to take anything seriously, it makes you uncomfortable. But that is exactly why I am writing this.

I began writing "satire" (hah!) because, besides the boost it could give my ego, I had some confused idea of a commitment to satire: shaking people up enough to make them think about the serious issues lying underneath the surface humor of my stories. I felt that humor was the best way to get things said, simply because stating anything seriously appeared to be such a bad way. First of all, it seemed pretentious (as does this article itself). I still feel this way--how can I think of the serious editorials of the COLLEGIAN or any other paper as being anything else but pretentious? Not to mention the cliches, and the predictability of them all. I've read them all before (that, by the way, sounds like a cliche to me. But then it's the best way I can say it. Or maybe just the easiest way?)

Besides this, I felt serious articles could not say anything, anyway. I have the confused notion that as soon as anything is formulated concretely enough to not quite be able to express it in words, it excludes any number of equally valid simultaneous thoughts. In other words, unintentionally or not, it's all bullshit (as, once again, this piece is). Humor, or satire, working as it does by indirection and implication, seemed to me to be a more worthwhile and honest effort, because it did not express any one idea too clearly, at the expense of others. My audience (if and when it existed) would have to make their own judgements, because there was nothing concrete enough in what I wrote to accept or reject offhand as stated fact. People would actually have to think.

Those of you who have read this far, and remember past articles of mine, probably realize by now that the quality of my articles doesn't justify the pretentiousness of what I am writing now. But that is exactly why I am writing it (no, it isn't). What I have written before is too easily accepted as "humor" and nothing more: playing with words for comic effect, while never dealing with any real issues, never dealing with anything that makes my audience uncomfortable enough to actually think. I must say I have not done this conciously. Instead, what I am basically trying to say is that I haven't shown any real talent for what I am trying to do.

Don't get me wrong (although I don't see how you can avoid it). I am not sitting around waiting for a flood of denials, unsolicited affirmations of my talent with which to build up my ego. I have enough basic conceit to "know" that I can create humor, even what could pass for satire. But what I mean is entirely different--I can make you laugh, but not at what really should be laughed at. I can't even make you laugh at yourselves.

Don't expect this pseudo-revelation of mine to cause any great change in my articles from now on (as if you even care). It's sort of a case of knowing what I should do, but not being able to. If I write any more articles (and I lack time more than inclination, I think), they probably won't be any better than the old ones. They may even be worse, if I start writing too self-consciously toward an audience.

In fact, I'm not even sure I know what I should be trying to do, let alone how. I really don't think Art Buchwald is a great model to follow. After years of reading his same style, I can't see that he has made any great accomplishments (at least recently). I don't know if he could do any better if he weren't committed to grinding out three articles a week besides everything else he does. In any case, he seems to have failed any great ideals he might have had, as completely as I have failed mine. That takes some punk nerve, my critiicizing an old pro like Art Buchwald. But I'm not doing it just to be cool, like so many melodramatic rebel-actors I have read (in the COLLEGIAN and elsewhere). I really mean it--although not vindictively in this case. (Isn't it amazing what simple, clear language I can use in my humor? And how when I try to write something serious, the words all come out abstract and unclear? See what I mean about serious articles?)

I don't know if I'll have the nerve to print something so stupid-sounding as this, for everybody to see (assuming the COLLEGIAN people will think it worth printing). Although I must admit there is some perverted sort of attraction in acting out your neuroses in front of fifteen thousand-plus people. Look at everything else in this newspaper if you don't think so: the editorials, the people in the news, even the cartoons (Is it only the characters in PEANUTS who have these hang-ups, or is it the cartoonist, too?). You would be doing it, too, if so many things weren't holding you back. But why not try? All it takes is a certain amount of confidence in the drawing-power of your own unique mental defects. It helps even more, I suppose, if you don't think they're defects. I suppose I don't really think mine are. And I don't think other semi-habitual writers are self-aware enough to see their "talents" as defects.

But, so much for that. I guess I've given the COLLEGIAN some last-choice filler for their editorial page, if they really need it. I hope that if they do print this, you haven't wasted your time reading this far. In any case, I hope you can forget it. Don't take it too seriously, don't let it make you uncomfortable (vanity again). If I have reached you at all, you aren't the people I have tried to reach, anyway. You are aware enough and sensitive enough already (your turn for vanity). So forget it. This was all just a joke, anyway. And unless you skipped to this last sentence without reading what was in the middle, you fell for it. (?)

Cables From Round The World

WASHINGTON—"Mr. President, I have some cables I would like to read to you."

"Yes, Mr. Rogers. Go ahead."

The secretary of state started to read:

"Because of recent actions taken by your government, I must warn you that we are going to take strong measures that might eventually lead to a break in relations between our two countries."

"Is that from Kosygin?" the President asked anxiously.

"No, it's from Premier Trudeau of Canada."

"He's probably bluffing, but alert our SAC command anyway."

"Here's the next one, Mr. President. Your perfidious and outrageous behavior toward our country has forced me to take action which will cause grave consequences for the entire world."

"It sounds like a note from North Vietnam."

"I'm afraid not, Mr. President. It came from Japan."

"But Hirohito didn't seem mad when I saw him in Alaska."

"This was just delivered this morning, Mr. President. 'The running dogs of the United States imperialism will soon realize that we will not be pushed around and that we are not paper tigers who can be sacrificed on the altar of the American dollar.'"

"Let me think who that could be from," the President said. "I know--it's from Chile."

"You're wrong again, Mr. President. It's from Denmark."

"Little Denmark?" the President said. "But they're in NATO."

"I know sir. It surprised us too. Here is another one. 'The betrayal by the Americans, though it did not come as a surprise, has not gone unnoticed in this part of the world. We shall reciprocate in kind until we have you on your knees begging for mercy and screaming for forgiveness.'"

"That has to be Castro," the President said.

The secretary of state shook his head. "It's from Chiang Kai-shek in Taiwan."

"Well, you can't win them all," the President said.

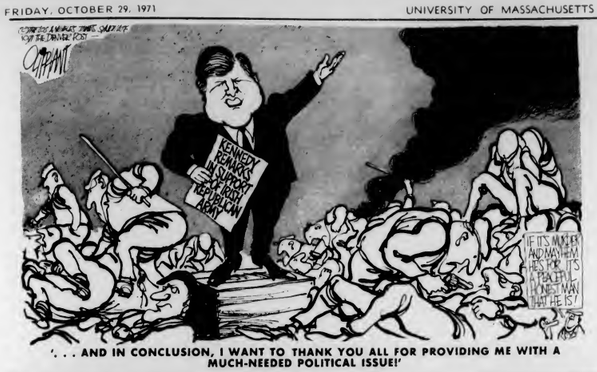
"This one was delivered verbally to our ambassador: 'Tell your President that his recent actions can only be interpreted as a personal affront to 40 million people, and we shall demand full compensation for any losses suffered by his unilateral action.'"

"That has to be Egypt," the President said.

"Would you believe it came from the Vatican?"

"Connally said the surcharge would cause some difficulties, but I didn't think we'd be in this much trouble. Mr. Rogers, don't you have any cables with good news in them?"

The secretary kept going through the flimsies.



Finally he came up with one. "Here you are, sir. It reads: 'Dear Mr. President. I wish you to know how grateful we are for everything the United States is doing and how all of us here consider that you are not only a great President, but a brave one, who will do the right thing, even if it's unpopular and could hurt you politically. Your courage has been an inspiration to our country and we sincerely hope we will be friends for years to come.'"

"That's more like it," the President smiled. "I knew Prime Minister Heath would come through."

"This isn't from Prime Minister Heath, sir. It's from Chou En-lai. He gave it to Henry Kissinger last Thursday."

Letters To The Editor

Play It Again, Sam

To the Editor:

The primary purpose of this letter is not to harangue, but to point out a serious deficiency in the cultural offerings of the University. Hopefully it will elucidate thought towards eliminatng a "blind spot".

Why, may I ask, in a university approaching 30,000 students in enrollment is there only a small number of operable pianos? Many of those that are available are of shoddy quality and have been neglected. For those of us, (myself included) that play piano often and need the opportunity to practice, there consequently is no such opportunity. The University rents out large numbers of pinball machines, for instance, but has invested practically no money at all in pianos. The music building has but a few practice rooms available, and they are always taken over by trumpet players and clarinet practicers, even though these musicians do not use the piano in the room. There is color TV in the lounge of the Student Union, but only one piano in the ballroom, which is usually taken over by casual plunkers. The one piano in good condition is the Yamaha conservatory, which lies in an auditorium and consequently is rarely available. The virtual lip-service paid to musicians in the few lying in Southwest is laughable, in lieu of the condition of these instruments.

I well realize the problem of frequent tuning and potential vandalism with pianos, but as I see it, the problem arising from not offering pianos to those students that wish to use them is far greater. The University is the only large institution that I know of having little or no musical facilities in this area. By neglecting the needs of its students in this and other ways, UMass invites severe criticism.

I would suggest that the University seriously consider increasing the number of pianos available to music students and jazz musicians such as I, but in a manner so they are equitably distributed. Having the present pianos scattered all over the University in unlikely places is disgraceful. Having few others than the ones mentioned is deplorable. Undergoing a program by which these facilities could be enlarged is commendable. The University cannot afford to squelch the talent of its musicians; it is up to those responsible to remedy the situaton.

Give Them Oil

To the Editor:

Last week the House passed and sent to the Senate a bill to settle native claims in Alaska. This is the first time the House Interior Committee has let such a bill get to the floor of the House. Why are Wayne Aspinall and his fellow Congressmen suddenly so interested in justice for the American Indian? Oil. Until the native claims are settled, a freeze on land use permits delays the infamous Alaska oil pipeline and exploitation of other oil deposits. If the House bill or one like it passes the Senate, Alaskan land will be up for grabs, with oil deposits as the prize and wildlife, rivers, the land itself, and the American people the losers. Conservationists, while agreeing that the Eskimos, Aleuts and Indians deserve justice, strongly believe that rational planning of land use -- wildlife refuges, national parks, wilderness areas, as well as development -- is necessary. If the natives and the State are permitted to choose land amounting to over a third of the area of Alaska, such planning will be impossible. Now is the time to keep Alaska free from the greedy, heedless spoilage that made the rest of America what it is today. The Senate bill (S.35) is expected to reach the floor early in November. Now is the time to write to Kennedy and Brooke to urge them to support planning before Alaska is fed to the Wolves.

One Night's Rest

To the Editor:

The coming of fall, suggests the arrival of change in our life style, of brisker air, brilliant foliage, jackets, homecoming and football games. To Van Meter North, it brought insufferable heat and intollerable noise.

On October 20, 1971, my roommate and I retired as usual in room 241. It was warm and the usual noise level was hazily present. I began by taking off blankets, then sheets, and finally when the room began taking on the general feeling of a sauna bath, I investigated for fire. There being none, we realized that we were victimized by the date syndrome. Forget what the temperature reads outside--if it's the 20th of October, you're supposed to have heat. UMass gave it to us in room 241 with no way to turn it off, because the heating system is antiquated.

However, the joy of the evening was not yet complete. Not only were we going to be roasted to death, but we were going to be treated to a plumber's nightmare version of the anvil chorus. Pipes hanged in frightening cacophony assuring us that if we chanced to fall asleep in spite of the heat, the noise would guarantee insomnia. The guarantee was effective. The problem is that the guarantee also appears to be endless. There is no relief in sight and apparently short of legislative action there will be none. Frankly, I'd trade ecology, the Vietnam situation, and women's lib for a night's rest.

As in previous years the MDC will continue to print letters to the editor. The only requirements are that they be typed at sixty spaces, double-spaced and absolutely no longer than two pages in length. All letters must be signed and the author's address and telephone numbers must be included. No letter will be published without this information. Also, no letters will be printed without the name of the author. Please note this change in policy.

All letters are subject to editing either for content or space according to the judgment of the editors. Also, due to space limitations, we do not guarantee that all letters will be printed.

Whose Fault?

To the Editor:

In support of Jim Dempsey's letter to the editor about the 500-MEGATON nuclear bomb scheduled to explode soon on Amchitka Island near Alaska, I have written and mailed a letter to our dear President urging him to stop this unbelievable happening. We have no time to lose. My particular interest is more on the San Andreas Earthquake Fault than on the Arms race or other ecological matters. I wish to followup on Mr. Dempsey's plea to use myself as an example - it took less than 15 painless minutes to write Mr. Nixon yesterday and I beg others to do the same. Are we to busy to at least try to save our World?

Perhaps They'll Learn

In recent years there has been growing student pressure to have a voice in decisions regarding faculty personnel decisions. We want and deserve to participate in such decisions as who should be hired, who should be promoted, who should be granted tenure, and who should be fired. Yesterday, in a meeting of the Faculty Senate, this issue came to a head.

The Tenure and Grievance Committee of the Faculty Senate presented a motion to that body asking the various colleges and faculties to report their individual policies regarding student participation. That motion itself was quite inconsequential and non-commital. It simply asked the various campus units to report their present policies.

The representatives of the Student Senate who were present put forth an amendment to that motion. We are tired of the inaction and delays that have so often characterized the Faculty Senate. Our amendment stated that "The Faculty Senate endorses the concept of voting student participation at all levels of faculty personnel decisions." The significance of this amendment was that the Faculty Senate would commit itself to the idea that students have a legitimate right to a voice in deciding whether teachers should be fired, promoted, or granted tenure. Since students are in an ideal position to evaluate the effectiveness and value of a professor's teaching ability, this seems a very reasonable proposal.

Our amendment was ruled out of order by the presiding officer. Since the amendment did not contradict the main motion, it is clear to us that the decision to rule it out of order was a violation of the good faith that has characterized our recent relations with the faculty.

In addition to the ruling, the debate in the Faculty Senate was the usual "students are irresponsible, it's none of their business" dribble. Could it be that our recent cooperation and understanding, which was the result of our united stands regarding issues surrounding the Tippo resignation, was only a passing fancy on the part of the faculty? Maybe they only want to hear from us when it will help them politically?

Administrators have learned from bitter experience that institutional rigidity provokes angry student protest. The faculty has not yet learned that we can no longer tolerate bureaucratic inertia or parliamentary ploys. If the lesson must be learned the hard way, so be it. We walked out of the meeting when it was clear that the Faculty Senate has not been a good student of recent history. We still have some hope that they will learn.

Pace Yourselves

In response to Charlotte Lettis' article of Oct. 26, 1971)

Dear Charlotte,

Go and get 'em. It ain't easy to train people to thinking they ought to run the human race by pacing themselves. Winning is trying to run, the energy to persist and the effort to convince others to regain the lost self. Your daily running work-outs become public advertisements for personal emancipation. Madison Ave. knows that power. I'm sure you realize it too. Liberation comes through action. Keep moving. Others will follow.

Going From AK47's To Needlepoint

CAN THO, Vietnam (AP)- Hands that once held an AK 47 rifle now do needlepoint. Last year's guerilla is this year's volleyball champion.

He may have lost his freedom when he donned the maroon pajamas of a prisoner of war, but he gained privileges, a full belly and the right to watch television. He's encircled by barbed wire but no one is shooting at him.

If he's lucky he will be freed next week to mark President Nguyen Van Theiu's inauguration and South Vietnam's National Day. If not, it's back to the volleyball court.

The government has announced 618 Viet Cong will be freed and 2,300 others will be accepted into its "Open Arms" program. The POW camp here had obviously been spruced up for a government sponsored tour by foreign newsmen Thursday, but in any case its 2,994 inmates live better than they did as Viet Cong guerillas.

New arrivals are given haircuts, sprayed with insecticide and issued two pairs of pajamas, a mosquito net, a blanket, a straw sleeping mat, cooking utensils, a spoon, toothpaste, towel, comb and soap.

They sleep on rough wooden platforms in tin barracks, 80 men to a building. The accommodations are crude by Western standards but luxurious compared to the swampy sanctuaries they once inhabited in the Mekong Delta.

The daily food allowance for each is equivalent to 13 cents, enough to buy rice, fish and a little meat. Vegetables grown in the prison garden and fish raised in two prison ponds supplement the diet.

Prisoners who behave are allowed to work on road gangs and construction projects outside the camp for a daily wage of 8 piasters, or 3 cents. They can spend this in a small post exchange that stocks soy sauce, condensed milk and canned mackerel.

Draft Counselor's Corner

Women Are Needed Too

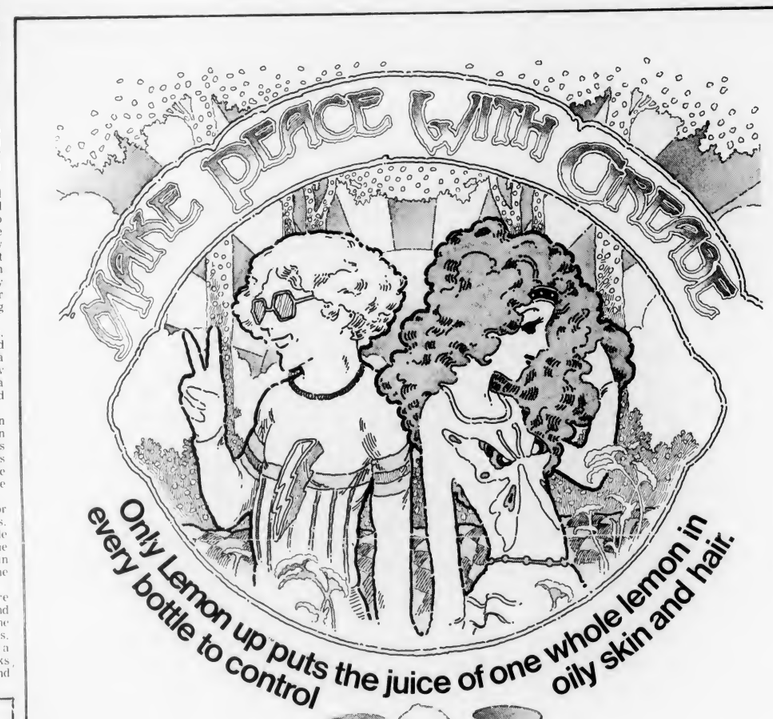
By BARBARA MYKSIN

Yes, women can definitely be involved in the draft. No, I'm not advocating drafting women-Nobody should be drafted. If you agree with that point keep reading because things can be done to stop the immoral conscription.

One way is to become a draft counselor-women are terrific draft counselors. Unfortunately you just missed a training course for draft counselors but there will be another training course in the spring or Draft Counseling Services can provide information about training courses in other areas during the year.

If you don't have the time or inclination to become a draft counselor (even though its a great way to meet men) there are many other ways to help stop the machine. Find out where the draft board is in your hometown, then register. Or write the board a letter telling them you're 20 and you're refusing to register. Find out about the conscientious objector stand, if you feel that you religiously, morally, or ethically object to war write out a C.O. form and send it to the local board, state board or even King Richard. You'd be surprised how difficult and enlightening writing a C.O. form can be. How many people spend their whole lives superficially believing things and never really know what they stand for. A C.O. has to take a stand, its the only way to make the killing machine stop and consider a warm body as something more than a lottery number, a knee ailment, or cannon fodder.

The draft touches almost everyone's lives-your boyfriend, brother, or lab partner might be the next one to go. If you think he'll look good in shit green and you like making brownies let him get drafted. If not, do something-ask him about his draft status, if there's any question at all urge him to get some draft counseling. If you know someone who's going for a C.O., try to help him-your moral support can mean alot. Vote for candidates that are against the war and opposed to the draft.



The main point I'm trying to make is GET INVOLVED. Just because our shirts have darts on the side don't excuse us from being concerned about the draft. Our brothers are dying, do something to let them live! PEACE.

Halloween Party , For Kids

The Amherst and University police are cooperatively sponsoring a Halloween party and parade for the children of the University and the Amherst community.

It will be Saturday night, October 30th. The parade will start at 6 p.m. at the Town Common and will end in the High School parking lot. Refreshments and treats will be extended to all in the parade and who attend.

An interesting and enjoyable evening for all.

NES Holding Fifth Orientation Sunday

The Northern Educational Service tutoring program will conduct its fifth orientation session this Sunday at 7:30 P.M. in room 163 in the Campus Center. All NES tutors are urged to attend this important meeting.

The previous orientation sessions attempted to relay a variety of background and supportive information to the tutors. This included a program explanation, tutor responsibilities (to the program and tutee), tutoring tips, a presentation of books and materials that NES provides and their use and finally some role playing. However, this Sunday's session is a little different.

The NES Coordinating Committee feels it has a major responsibility to the tutors in not wasting their time. The commitment to tutor is great enough and the preparation for this commitment should be efficient in its presentation and valuable for the tutoring experience. Therefore, an evaluation is in order.

This Sunday's orientation session will be devoted to an evaluation of what NES has done to prepare tutors for the educational experience in Springfield. Each session will be evaluated and discussed separately. Every attempt will be made to get feedback from the tutors who were victims of our orientation.

Hopefully there will be praise and positive comments but realistically we are looking for negative feedback. We need to know our NO! NO!

This is an important meeting and it is hoped that as many tutors attend this session as possible. Since the evaluation will be done by individual sessions a tutor can still be helpful by attending even if he or she missed one or two meetings.

We of the NES Coordinating Committee feel that this is a good chance for a tutor who is also a student to voice his or her opinion on what was instructionally put on in these sessions and have these opinions really mean something as to changing what went on. This is something that seldom happens in the traditional classroom.

Poisonous Mushrooms Powder Puff Champs

The poisonous Mushrooms proved deadly Wednesday night as the big green machine demolished the ladies of Alpha Chi Omega 50-6. In so doing, the Mushrooms became the first Women's Powder Puff football champions boasting a perfect 7-0 record. To earn their playoff berth the Mushrooms first had to eliminate the powerful Whalers from Melville. This game proved to be the big Green's only true challenge of the season as they squeaked by Melville 18-12. However, the score is not the true story of the game as numerous penalties and costly mistakes repeatedly hurt the otherwise unstoppable Mushroom offense. The Whaler's defense should be commended for their stingy tactics.

Wednesday's encounter was of a different light as the Mushrooms put points on the board in the first two minutes of play. The defense lead by Mina McDaniel, Jan Morin and Joy Cavagnaro forced ACO into a safety situation as the Mushrooms were once again on the move. At this point it was all big green offense as Nancy Lindberg returned the punt for a quick six points. Again it was Nancy Lindberg all alone in the end zone for another two. The game proceeded in carbon-copy fashion as the score climbed rapidly with Chris Cronin returning a punt unchallenged. End Vicki Pagel and flanker Nancy Lindberg were repeatedly found open in the end zone for the big passing play. Credit must be given to the Green's offensive big four of Vicki Pagel, Mina McDaniel, Chris Theberge and Nancy Lindberg, who continuously withstood the defensive rush. The remainder of the game was all formality as the Mushroom offense of Lindberg, McDaniel, Theberge, Page 1, McCarthy, Cronin and Nealon proved unstoppable. The big green defense could not be contained as the likes of Cavagnaro, Morin, Gendall, Turdick, McDaniel, Pagel and Lindberg remained overpowering. Other members of the team who deserve recognition are Sue Chapman, Beth Fay and Carole Pierce, all of whom did not finish the season due to injury.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces often displays remarkable ability to perceive beyond the known senses. Pisces is psychic that statement is true, more often than not. Pisces can weave through a labyrinth and emerge with answers, often too subtle for the average person to grasp. Some Pisceans seem always to be gleaning secrets not accessible to the rest of us.

ARIES (March 21 April 19): Confusion could be order of day. Key is to do some sorting, sifting and choosing. Get rid of nonessentials. Put a halt to clutter, material and otherwise. Stop taking advice from so many sources.

TAURUS (April 20 May 20): Don't mix friendship and finances. The two now do not go together. Refuse to become involved in money dispute. Some acquaintances would like to make you the villain. Don't be manipulated.

GEMINI (May 21 June 20): Accent diplomacy. You get nothing now by trying to force your views. Take it slow and easy. Emphasis is on one step at a time. Otherwise, you build but lack solid foundation. You will comprehend.

CANCER (June 21 July 22): Obtain valid hint from Aries message. Subtle touch is required. Some who respect you want reassurances. Obtain source material. Don't underestimate intelligence of those who share interests.

LEO (July 23 Aug. 22): Don't overbid. What you want is within financial reach if you are not too anxious. Be eager, enthusiastic without being tense. Meaning will become increasingly clear. Display strength.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 Sept. 22): Complete arrangements for improving property, other possessions. Get promises in writing. Be alert for legal loopholes. Don't get caught in tangle of empty phrases. Be a shrewd observer.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Pace yourself, obtain what is needed. Don't go to extremes. Now outlook can bring you out of welter of confusion. Some who perform basic services may be late or absent. Stress self reliance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 Nov. 21): Intuitive intellect works overtime. Means you perceive what to do ahead of others. Heed inner voice. Hold off on money deals. Don't sell yourself short. Enthusiasm should not be turned to recklessness.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 Dec. 21): You may be seeing through light of wishful thinking. Pull in reins toward reality. Stop trying to be too many places at once. Concentrate efforts. Opposition is there, but is temporary.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 Jan. 19): Hold off on journeys; it practical. Relatives, neighbors and associates offer conflicting advice, statements. Wait for air to clear. All facts are not on table. Study Sagittarius message.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 Feb. 18): Friendly rivalry could develop into something more serious. Protect self in clinches. Money is involved. Changes are necessary. Communicate views. Be sure your side of story is on record.

PISCES (Feb. 19 March 20): Delay demands. Those in positions of authority are apt to be reluctant to accede to requests. Diplomacy is your ally. Personality conflict is in picture. Adopt low key attitude, approach.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are a natural teacher, willing to aid underdog. You want to direct, to outline plans, but you usually have good of others in mind. Recent confusion is due to evaporate. You will be on more solid ground.

JV Soccermen Hold Off Late Trinity Surge To Secure Win

By JIM PINSKY

Sometimes it doesn't pay to be kind. Leading 5-0 going into the fourth quarter J.V. soccer coach David Jekanowski, figuring he had the game all wrapped up, decided to let the second team see some action. But he acted a little too soon as he had to return the starters to the line-up. All's well that ends well though as the team held on for a 6-4 victory over Trinity.

The game started out great for UMass as they scored three times in the first half while holding Trinity scoreless. The first score came when Alan Long scored on a long throw-in at 12:23 of the first. Then Steve Sormanti scored at the beginning of the second quarter and less than three minutes later Mark Rypysc added another.

The second half started out like the first. Tony King with an assist from Jim Vollinger made it 4-0 at the beginning of the third quarter. Greg Tudryn was the next to score as he outraced the Trinity goalie for a score at 15:48 of the third. Then the second team came in at the start of the fourth. At 5:27 of the fourth Trinity got its first score but the Redmen bounced right back at 7:46 with Don Flick scoring this time. Trinity scored at 9:51 but no panic set in yet. The dam finally burst a few minutes later as Trinity scored twice in succession closing the gap to 6-4 with still seven minutes left in the game. Figuring the lead wouldn't hold out, Coach Jekanowski was forced to return the starters, who held on for the victory 6-4.

Coach Jekanowski said following the game, "I guess you can't coach with your heart. Those guys (the second team) work just as hard as the starters, and they deserve a chance to play. Most of them have seen maybe three minutes of action all year."

Except for the fourth quarter the game was the J.V.'s best to date. They outclassed Trinity in all aspects of the game as they readied themselves for their big game with Springfield on Friday.

N.E. Mixed Tourney Here Tomorrow

By JOAN FASSNACHT

For over twenty years there have been men tennis tournaments and women tennis tournaments in New England, but they never got together, that is until tomorrow, when UMass will host the first New England mixed doubles tournament on the Boyden tennis courts.

Thru the coordination and continued hard work of Sally Ogilvie, the women's tennis coach, and Steve Kosakowski, the men's coach, six schools will participate in the tournament, making up 17 doubles pairs.

The idea for the tournament came last spring, when Miss Ogilvie decided something should be done in this field. Eight schools were contacted, six responded, those six being Amherst College, Hampshire College, Mount Holyoke College, Springfield College, UMass and Worcester State College.

Three teams will represent all six schools with the exception of Hampshire College, who will be represented with only two doubles teams. As far as Amherst goes, UMass will be supplying their women power, thus six UMass women will be participating tomorrow morning, and afternoon.

At 10:00 a.m. the teams will begin play, as each match will be decided by an 8 game pro set. The subsequent matches are planned on the hour, every hour, and after the third round matches, taking place from noon until 1:00, there will be a break for lunch, and then resumption of play in the semifinal and final rounds.

Leading the list of UMass men's players will be Alan Goldberg, last year's varsity captain, and Yankee Conference singles champion. Goldberg will be playing with sophomore Gretchen Shafer, and will represent UMass in the number one doubles position. At number two will be Ted Donohue, a freshmen who has impressed Coach Kosakowski in the midst of so many freshmen disappointments, and Janet Shockley, a senior, who will be wrapping up her fall tennis season tomorrow.

Both UMass and Amherst appear to be the favorites in tomorrow's tournament, as this six school tourney might just be the start of something big in the way of New England mixed doubles in the years to come.

Redmen Host Improved Vermont

By EARLE BARROLL

"In the past Vermont football teams have not been treated with respect by UMass football teams. But this year we can't look beyond them or anyone...not with the record we have."

And so the plot thickens, the atmosphere is set and Dick MacPherson has painted another picture for the UMass fans to gaze at tomorrow at Alumni Stadium when the Redman tangle with the Catamounts beginning at 1 p.m....This will not be a game indicative of past UMass-Vermont routs.

According to MacPherson Vermont is a vastly improved club from last year and somewhat like the Redmen in that they feel they're a better club than what they've shown on the field.

The Catamounts opened with a shocking 20-7 upset over UConn, but what has followed has been nothing less than a demoralizing of any high aspirations they had after the first game surprise.

Bob Rodgers is the man the Redman defense will have to stop. He's one of the premiere backs in New England and has rushed for nearly five hundred yards at the midway point in the season.

Two previous home games for the UMass squad have met with disaster at the hands of Dartmouth and Rhode Island. "The squad realizes they haven't played well at home," said MacPherson, "we've some nice things on the road and it's about time we did the same thing at home."

Five weeks have elapsed without the taste of victory for the team and to this quest for a win MacPherson commented, "Even though we had a tie last week at UConn, the guys feel they put a lot of the game together. They're much better club than they've shown and I feel it's time they demonstrate it to the home fans.

"All the people know is what takes place on Saturday. We can be well prepared before the game but if we don't play well come Saturday that's all that counts to the viewers.

"It's like being prepared for a test and then coming out and knowing you flunked...we've flunked enough exams for the year."

Piel Pennington will be at quarterback for tomorrow's game. The big guy had his shoulder separated in the Boston University game three weeks ago and last week at UConn came back after a week's layoff to start, but he could not complete the game.

MacPherson emphasized though that Pie[illegible] racticed much better this week.

The remainder of the squad is intact, perhaps the best physical shape for the team this year.

Remember this is a year unlike the past...respect is the key word according to the coach, but if you don't think a victory wouldn't be sweeter than a little respect just stand by the door after the game where that key of respect will be inserted and guaranteed you'll end up flat on your back.

Booters At Home In YanCon Showdown

By STEVE FERBER

Two weeks ago URI came to UMass for a crucial YanCon soccer battle. Well, tomorrow Vermont comes, for what may be the most important Yankee Conference game of the year. At 10:30, across from Boyden Gymnasium, two YanCon powers will go into a contest in which one team will be looking to clinch a tie for the title, the other looking to take over sole possession of first place.

Other than UMass and Vermont, both New Hampshire and Rhode Island are still in contention for a share of the YanCon title. UNH and URI both own 2-1-0 conference marks, while Vermont stands 3-1-0 after pounding Maine this past week 4-0. The Redmen are 3-0-0 in Conference play, and last year went into a similar situation when a 1-1 tie came of it all. Last year's contest saw the Catamounts outshoot the Redmen, and in fact that game was the only one in which the Redmen were outshot, despite absorbing two losses.

The visitors are 7-2-0 and are presently ranked 10th in New England. In YanCon action Vermont has beaten UConn 3-2, UNH 3-2, Maine 4-0 while losing to URI 3-1. UMass' side reads like this: beat UConn 4-0, URI 3-0, Maine 2-0, thus the Redmen will be looking for a fourth consecutive conference shutout.

In the two week period between conference matches, UMass managed a 1-1-1 record, against the likes of Coast Guard, Tufts and WPI. The latter game resulted in a 2-2 tie, on Wednesday afternoon, and the players are still talking about the condition of the WPI field, with the rocks, and the bottle tops and the holes in the nets, which the referees had to patch up before gametime.

Now sixth in New England, having dropped from fifth place as a result of the Tufts loss, are the Redmen. Harvard, Wesleyan, Brown, Tufts and Williams own the top five positions, as Tufts made the most striking move of the year, zooming from ninth place all the way into fourth.

As a result of the latest ratings, tourney hopes are dimmed somewhat for UMass, but the Yankee Conference title is all that should be on the Redmen's minds as tomorrow morning's battle will feature a star Catamount forward, and a Vermont netminder, both of whom made the all-weekly YanCon team.

Peter Breen, only a freshmen, has eight goals this season, and was selected as the outstanding offensive player for the Conference on the basis of his three goals and two assists this past week. Jim Kiely is the standout goalie, who has allowed 1.5 goals per game, and has provided the defensive backbone that has made Vermont a conference contender while earning the YanCon goalie spot this past week.

UMass knows what they have to do for a loss means no conference title, a win means an automatic tie, irregardless of the UMass-UNH game next Saturday. Vermont has won four in a row, while the Redmen have been stubbling, and the inability of the Redmen to get back on their feet could shoot this whole season to hell.

Metawampe's Picks

A quickie for the people back home on the reservation. Haste makes waste but if I should not hasten I will be wasten by some spirit from the southwest area...I quicken my steps with the pride of a 6-2-1 record of last week that received the supreme accolade from my forefathers chief aid Benuay when he said "goo!!!;; So like the naked injun that runneth through the clear cold waters of the pollutant clear lakes in the great lands in the west I take my hardest trek of the week that I will face...A trek into the depths of college football...I just hope I don't get a cheap shot.

Harriers YanCon Favorites

By JAY NESTOR

The Yankee Conference Championship is at stake tomorrow, and the UMass harriers will be venturing confidently to Storrs, Conn., in an effort to defend their championship.

UMass is the favorite in this meet on the basis of their undefeated record against Conference rivals. No other team can come close to the depth that UMass possesses, and it is thought that at least three of the Redmen harriers have a chance of walking away with the individual title.

Coach O'Brien made his highly selective decision on who will represent the squad, earlier in the week. The first four picks were the easiest with Doug O'Connell, Tom Derderian, Paul Segersten, and Bill Gillin pretty well established as the front runners of the team.

Peter Crisci, Bob Sullivan and Rick Barry were named to the much sought after back up spots.

In the opinion of O'Brien, all seven harriers have the ability to finish in the top ten of the Conference. This would guarantee a Redman victory.

Although no particular team possesses as much depth as the Redmen, a few Conference rivals boast top individuals who will give the UMass front runners quite a run for the first position.

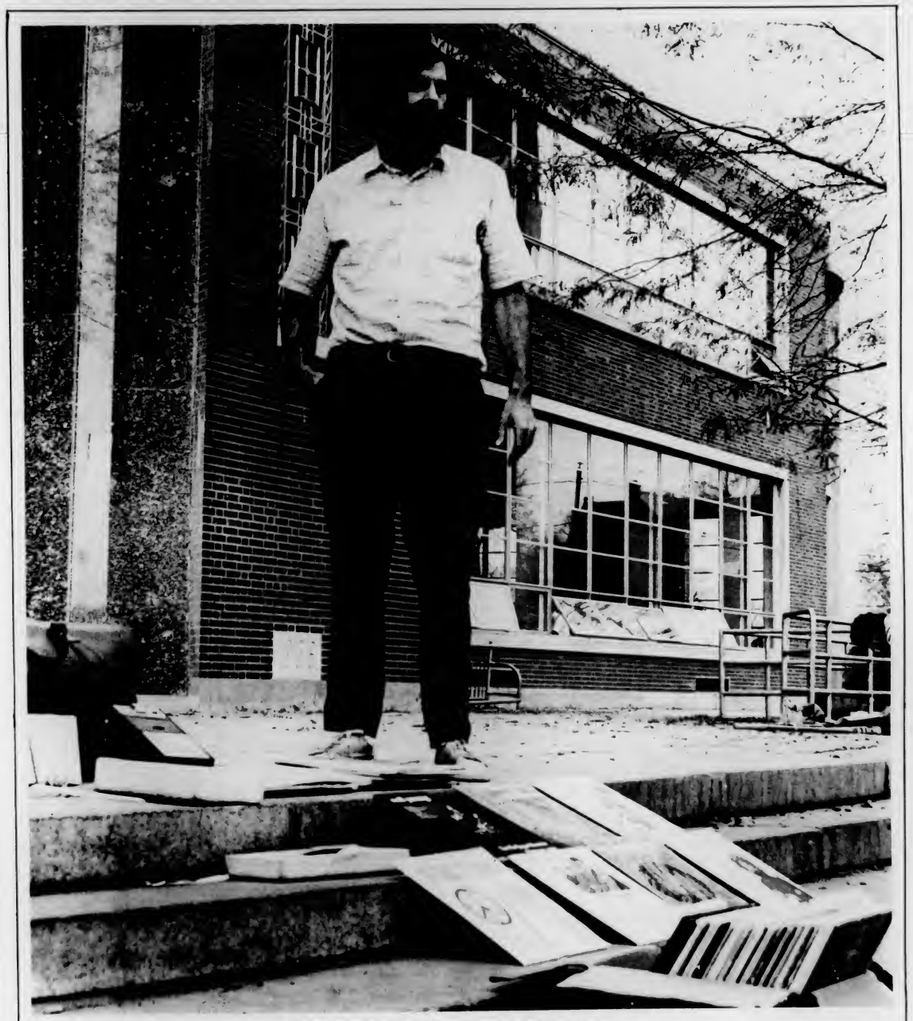
Perhaps the greatest threat is Allieu Massaquoi of Boston Univerisity, who has been running well all season. UConn's Peter Bortolotti and Bob Ancona both are top ten threats. Ed Shorey of UNH could pose a problem. Mike McCormack and Dick Crooke of Holy Cross are solid performers. A couple of harriers from URI possibly could break the top ten. Maine and Vermont seem to be pretty much out of it in terms of both top performers and team depth.

The meet will be run over the tough UConn course which features some rugged uphill grinds. This really shouldn't hinder the Redmen who ran their home meets in the Orchard, which is about as hazardous as a course can get.

The Redmen have come along way since the beginning of the season, when they were cited as a rebuilding team. It seems that Coach O'Brien has done his rebuilding very rapidly, and if everything holds solid, his team should emerge as Yankee Conference Champions again.

HARRIER HIGHLIGHTS: The individual title could possibly be the setting for a close race between Doug O'Connell and Bill Gillin. These two have proven to be a fearsome duo. Tom Derderian is always unpredictable and has the ability to run away with it also.

The Redman strategy will be simply to pile all seven runners into the top ten positions. If every team fields the seven man limit, the race will number fifty-six individuals. This means it will not be too crowded, which is an important factor due to the close running quarters on the UConn course.



All the UMass runners will be looking for a good race, not only because of the title at stake, but they must also fight to keep their team positions for a berth on the squad to run the New England meet. Some of the harriers left behind on this trip are hungry to taste some Championship competition and stand ready to challenge the top seven.

CONFERENCE RIVALS-UMass and Holy Cross will both be competing for YanCon Honors at UConn tomorrow. The Redmen will be out to defend the title that they won last year. (MDC photo by C. Lettis)

A Beginner's Guide To Bootlegs

By STEVE FELD

It all started about two years ago when someone, somehow, got ahold of some old Bob Dylan tapes, never before released. To these he added the famous "Basement Tapes" of Dylan and the Band and even a song from his Johnny Cash Show appearance. It was called "Great White Wonder" and it was a double album. It sold anywhere from $10.00 to $25.00 easy. It had a plain white cover with no printing, and a label to match. Copies began to multiply and soon it became available in every major city.

Then the Rolling Stones toured America and someone taped their concert in Oakland, California. They called it "Liver Than You'll Ever Be" and it sold tremendously. Soon a Beatles' album came out, and another Dylan. The whole thing spread like wildfire. Thousands were being sold all over the country. They went through their ups and downs and today they are in full bloom and easily accessible at UMass.

Basically, bootlegs are records (or tapes) that are recorded and/or released without the knowledge or consent of the artist or the label. Therefore, there are no royalties paid to neither and all the profits go to the bootlegger. Some insist that royalties are paid to the songwriter, but this isn't usually the case. It is considered a form of thievery, although there is always the argument that the airwaves are free.

There has been a lot of talk as to the ethics of bootlegging. The main arguments here are that the artist should have some say as to what material is released under his name, and the one of royalties. Realistically speaking, I see little validity in either point. Hardly ever will someone buy a bootleg in place of a regular album. It will usually be bought in addition to it. And it serves as good publicity for the artist, so the record companies shouldn't bitch. A lot of performers were kept in the public eye in between albums because of them. Since bootlegs are only of established and popular artists, the money is, for the most part, negligible. Bootlegs also add a "human" element to the image of the performers. They are also considered a "status" thing among the artists, themselves.

If it wasn't for bootlegs look what we would be missing. There would be no live Beatles' albums, and their concerts are a page out of history. There would be

TAKE TWO

Notes From Yale: 1996

By Nathaniel Hayden

I live in Crestdale, a moderate size suburban middle and upper middle class black community located seven miles from Rosemont in central New York. To make a long story short, I'll put in an article that I saw while looking through some of the microfilm copies of the Albany Daily News:

Wednesday, June 9, 1982 A huge area of land located approximately forty miles southwest of Albany has been designated as the site of a satellite city, the construction of which will be subsidized by the federal government. It is hoped that the city, which will be called Rosemont, will provide close to a quarter of a million jobs.

A large group of middle and upper-middle income blacks in New York and Boston got together and decided to buy some of the land around Rosemont to build black towns. These communities are known as Crestdale and New Nairobi. Most of the dwellings are co-operative apartments and single family homes. I think the main purpose for the creation of these communities was to be in the position to say to whites, "See, we can do it too." They are very much like the Jewish ghettoes on Long Island or outside of Boston. The only major difference I can see is that instead of going to the Catskills during the summer, our parents go to several resorts which have sprung up recently near the Adirondacks.

The intense competition in both towns is pathetic. In my high school each year, elite scholars are chosen from the top 1% of each class, scholars (up 2-5%, honor students from the top 6-10% and the avant-garde from the top 11-20%. Whenever a student graduates in one of these categories, his parents usually have a huge party for him. I call these parties the BPO's, which means the Big Pay Off's. The pressures are unbelieveable. I'll mention them anyway. Each year, our principal went to a public meeting with principals of all high schools in the Metropolitan Rosemont area, to compare the percentages of kids from each of their schools who would be attending the "good or best" colleges and universities the following term.

During the junior year in high school, students who would represent Crestdale High on the student quiz show on television called "It's All Academic" were selected from the top fifth of the class. My God, I think the way in which kids fought over the opportunity to appear on the show exemplifies the Rat Race perfectly. Several months before a panel of four is supposed to appear on the show, each school has preliminary screening. They line up about ten prospective panelists in the dining hall. They are barraged with questions for about twenty minutes. The two or three who get the highest number of points are told to prepare for another barrage the following day. The one who answers the highest number of questions correctly becomes the one who will go on the panel of four who appear on the show. The same procedure is followed for the other thirty or so kids being considered. The method fluctuates according to the number of kids who are interested. A large number of the students who are eligible try out each year. This is because if our panel wins the game, the students involved are given a full scholarship for their first year in college.

The pressure created by the intense competition is phenomenally destructive. If a student doesn't make it into one of the IVYES or one of their subsidiaries and instead goes to the state university, he often feels as if his life has ended. They actually think their lives depend on which college they attend. Another thing, if you say you want to be anything besides a doctor, lawyer, engineer or professor, you're considered a drawback. Recalling that fact immediately reminds me of all the times I trembled when I got less than a 90 or A on an exam. I knew that my parents would take some kind of sanctions (such as depriving me of my paltry allowance for a couple of weeks) and my teacher would strongly urge me to cut down on my extracurricular activities (like eating, sleeping, etc.).

I would say that the pressure waned slightly after we took our SAT's and Achievement Tests. Then it was simple, we would either live "the good life" or be damned to a fate worse than death depending on the results. My results, 770 verbal, 690 math and achievement tests marks in the low 700's and mid-600's, were in the words of my father, "barely acceptable".

Instead of bridge and mah-jongg, our mothers play Keep the Kids in the Cultural Center game. From the age of three through high school, just about every kid is coerced into attending the local Black Cultural Center. There they are force fed black history, black drama, etc. I agree that it is good for blacks to be well informed in these areas, but I know that what we are taught in the schools is sufficient.

The pressures created by this intense competition goes into other spheres of one's life besides school. Even your social life depends on how well you are doing in school. An avant-garde girl would be harshly ostracized if she ever dared to date a boy in the middle or lower half of his class. I remember two occasions on which I was refused dates not because of my appearance or the like, but because as one put it:

I really adore you Harlan. You're always bright and witty. I just don't have the time to go to the Snack Shoppe with you. I can understand how you feel about my frequent refusals to go out with you. I would like you to take into consideration the fact that I am a scholar. Academic ratings such as mine are not easy to come by. I have only enough time in a day for the essentials. I just can't let my rating slip. We can always go places during the summer----. Oh, no, I just remembered. I'll be up at camp Wigonqua all summer, beginning right on the last day of school. I'm sorry Harlan. I really wish I could manage the time. I hope you understand.

Racism is rampant in Crestdale and New Nairobi. There isn't a single white family in either community. There are a few Puerto Ricans scattered around New Nairobi, but this is nothing more than tokenism. Even in racist white suburbs, there are a few Super Niggers sprinkled around. The most intolerable thing is the exclusion of Puerto Ricans. Hell, they're as oppressed as if not more oppressed than blacks. It's probably because people have the feeling that they should wait around for a century or two before we "accept" them.

"Racism is rampant in Crestdale and New Nairobi. There isn't a white family in either community."

The impact of this chauvinism on my fellow black college students is worth noting at this point. What do we do when we are freed from the system for long lengths of time? Here at Yale, and at most of the Ivy League schools for that matter, the black students come predominantly from the following communities:

1) Crestdale 2) New Rochelle 3) New Nairobi Bethesda Chevy Chase 5) Shaker Heights

Any black student who isn't from one of the "Big Five" is ignored. He or she is automatically excluded from the big events that take place amongst black students. Due to this, a large number transfer to the University of Michigan and other state universities where students from the "Big Five" do not constitute a majority. Since there are large numbers of blacks now applying to colleges, admissions officers choose blacks from the same communities which produced the highest number of students who stayed until graduation, i.e. the "Big Five". This of course has caused the majority of black students from the Big Five to grow larger in numbers. Black students who are not from one of the Big Five are often ostracized because they are not members of "The Nobility". "The Nobility" was created seven years ago by students from New Nairobi at Harvard. Membership in "The Nobility" is bestowed only on black students from the Big Five who are in the top half of their college class. I was thrown out once because a couple of terms ago, my ranking dropped down to the 47th percentile! The organization is a direct result of the continual pressures that I spoke about earlier. The most successful students are the ones who completely accept the pressures. Thus, it was their idea to create "The Nobility."

I'm sitting here wondering, "What the hell are our parents going to gain by continuing the pressure? What more do they want? I'm going to list some of the statistics that Crestdale High School recently issued:

The college acceptances and rejections are all in. Of the students who will definitely graduate, 87% will enter four year colleges, 8% will enter junior colleges, and only 5% will not continue their education. Here is a list of the number accepted by a few of the top colleges and the average board scores of the entering students compared to the average board scores of the freshmen classes at the prospective schools:

DUE TO THIS EXCEPTIONAL CHIEVEMENT, THESE STUDENTS WILL EACH RECEIVE A FULL SCHOLARSHIP FOR THEIR FIRST TWO YEARS AT THEIR NEW SCHOOLS. CONGRATULATIONS.

"He went to Hampshire College, which at that time was considered a very experimental college."

One of my friends who is a student at Cornell told me that until recently every application from either Crestdale, Northeast (Crestdale), New Nairobi Central, or New Nairobi South H.S.'s was immediately stamped ACCEPTED. Of course there is a degree of hyperbole in that statement, but the percentage of students from these schools in the population of the elite colleges in phenomenally high. The situation has become so bad (or good, depending on your opinion about Crestdale and New Nairobi) that each year thousands of parents, white and black, beg to be allowed to move into one of the communities, or at least be able to pay to have their children sent to one of them. The most frightening thing about all of this is that fact that after graduation from college and graduate school, members of "the Nobility" usually return to the towns of their youth. These two processes, the ever-growing number of applications for residency by newcomers and the return of "the Nobility" will increase the "Big Five" to enormous proportions. Therefore these pressure compounds grow bigger and bigger, snottier and snottier every year.

These towns have been lauded by many whites as "Symbols of the Emergence Of The New Black Man". Many others want to stop it because it is a grave threat to the status quo. What can I say, however? The System has taught me how to compete successfully with the ever increasing demands society is making in order to move up the socioeconomic ladder. The System has given me a great deal of confidence. The thing I don't like about it is that everything is rigidly, precisely defined. When every point in your life is clearly mapped out before you, the only thing you can do is follow it. You don't dare go to the right or to the left because there is an ever present feeling that if you do, you will be plunged into an abyss from which there is no escape.

My father is quite different from me. He always liked to have things clearly delineated. It's weird. He went to Hampshire College, which at that time was considered a very experimental college. It's hard to imagine him, MY FATHER, in an experimental college. He tells me that even then he knew that he wanted to become a lawyer. When I asked why he went there he told me, "I knew that if I had enough self-discipline to study hard and graduate from a school such as Hampshire, I would have little difficulty adjusting to law school. I once read that the more experimental the college one attended, the better one does in a traditional graduate school". I have often argued with him because he had practically prepared a blueprint for life at the age of seventeen. It always ended with him asking the question, "Would it have been better if I had been a dilettante, not knowing in which direction I was heading?" To this question I have no reply, and it forces me to ask myself what I would have done.

To the Editor:

This letter is in reference to the article printed in last Friday's Collegian, by Frank Baglione, entitled "Right on to the People". I, first of all, find it difficult to believe that Mr. Baglione: 1) attended the SMC teach-in, 2) attended the April 24th Demonstration in Washington and observed what took place, 3) has bothered to look at the student movement on campus since April, presuming that he has ever done so.

About 220 people attended the SMC teach-in and then continued the action into the communities of the surrounding area by distributing over 20,000 leaflets. The October 13th action was part of a national day of community work, extending antiwar and Nov. 6th information throughout the United States. YSA as a group in no way conducted or instigated this action which was planned at our national antiwar convention in New York last July. I want to make this point clear, because the Student Mobilization Committee is a non-exclusionary independent antiwar organization, supporting no party, or political candidates. We recall Mr. Baglione's assinine political accusations from last semester, and they were as illogical and tiresome then as they are now.

If the most significant event during the April 24th demonstration was the physical attire of Bella Abzug, then Mr. Baglione appears to have missed the point of the demonstration. Of the 750,000 people who attended the action, he is the first I have heard of who found nothing more there than a reason to vent his demented sexist values.

Apparently Mr. Baglione doesn't believe that the phenominal surplus production of military goods, along with years of unchallenged military spending, has had any connection with the present U.S. inflation or the wage freeze. The list of organized labor endorsements, from hundreds of union locals throughout the country believe it does. And they'll all be marching in 17 cities throughout the U.S. on November 6th to make this point more visible.

The National Peace Action Coalition, from its National Office, to the campus offices of the Student Mobilization Committee, like the one I'm typing this in, have never been captured by any political party, or that party's rhetoric. The membership of the Student Mobilization Committee on this campus reflects varied independent political beliefs, of people who have gotten together under the single demand for the immediate total withdrawal of all U.S. troops from Southeast Asia. Red-baiting last semester was inappropriate, and is currently inexcusable. I suggest that before Mr. Baglione attempts another slanderous letter, that he do some simple research.

Eat, Drink and Make 'Millhouse'

Now at the Campus Cinema's.

By LETICIA KENT

"If you want to get a good interview out of 'd'," Andy Warhol had instructed the reporter, "buy a fifth of good Scotch and set it in front of him." Warhol was speaking of Emile de Antonio, the documentary filmmaker, whose opinionated documentary on President Nixon called "Millhouse: A White Comedy" is breaking all attendance records at the Upper West Side's New Yorker and has even moved over to the East Side's chic Plaza Theater to accommodate the overflow.

This is, of course, the same de Antonio who made "Point of Order" (about the 1954 Army-McCarthy hearings), "Rush to Judgment" (based on Mark Lane's book about the JFK assassination), "America Is Hard to See" (about Eugene McCarthy in 1958) and "In the Year of the Pig" (about the Vietnam war). But to Warhol, Emile de Antonio is his friend "d," who turned him on to painting and to film from commercial art, and who, five years ago, starred in an (as yet unreleased because until recently de Antonio didn't want it released) Warhol film called "Drink." In that movie, de Antonio drank a quart of whisky in 20 minutes—and lived.

And so this reporter decided against interviewing de Antonio at Pearl's Restaurant or at the Algonquin. Instead, she bought a bottle of Scotch and invited him to her flat. It was just this side of entrapment.

"Unless I drink, my interviews are very uptight," acknowledges de Antonio, a portly gentleman of 51 with an aristocratic Robert Morley nose and clear blue eyes. "In my best interview so far, I drank 12 whiskies. Do you have any soda?"

She sizes him up. He is dressed in an old navy blue jacket, a blue oxford shirt open at the throat, rumpled chinos and seamless brown shoes. "Harvard?" she ventures. He nods, pouring himself a drink and stirring it with his index finger. "I was in the same class with John Kennedy, the class of 1940, though I was younger than he."

Emile de Antonio was born in Scranton, Pennsylvania. His father was a rich and cultivated doctor who found the movies crude and boring—except for Chaplin and Keaton. His mother was 30 years younger and loved the movies. At Harvard, de Antonio became a Marxist, organizing rubber factory workers in nearby Watertown when he was not going to some of the same black tie parties as JFK. Before he became a filmmaker in 1961, he had been a longshoreman, a barge captain, a doctoral candidate (in English literature), an opera translator, a book editor, a college teacher (at William and Mary), a peddler, a war surplus broker and an impresario (in 1958, together with Robert Rauschenberg and Jasper Johns, he promoted a Town Hall concert that "made" John Cage—although Cage had by then been writing music for 25 years).

He was turned on to films in 1959 after seeing "Pull My Daisy," a movie on Beat luminaries by Alfred Leslie and Robert Frank with a sound track by Jack Kerouac. It was, he recalls, the very first time that he had seen a non-Hollywood American film. And he was so taken with it, especially with its unsynchronized sound and image, that he went to work as the film's distributor. About this time, he met Daniel Talbot, with whom he was to co-produce his first movie, "Point of Order." Talbot owned the New Yorker Theater but, as a small independent, he was having trouble booking films, and so he had begun to wonder whether he could show television footage. It was Talbot who first thought of using the kinescopes of the Army-McCarthy hearings, but it was de Antonio who had the idea of making a documentary with them.

"Suddenly," he says, "bells went off in my head. From the beginning, I had a very clear conception of what the film should be: a documentary without narration that would somehow make sense of a chaotic, complex historical event without removing its chaos—and without digressing from the event. Is there any more soda?"

De Antonio believes that his documentary technique is more successful than such parallel efforts in the theater as "In the Matter of J. Robert Oppenheimer" or "Inquest." Actors can no longer effectively portray powerful public figures like Oppenheimer or the Rosenbergs, he claims, because we have seen such figures on film and can't accept substitutes. "That's why," he says, "my 'stars' are superior to actors portraying my stars."

De Antonio's films may be documents, but are they art?

The Follies of Youth

By David Williams

Part III

Once we got out on the street A—— began to walk very quickly down the sidewalk. Soon I was falling behind him and fasping for breath. After two or three blocks of this I couldn't go any further. I leaned against a car and began to pant.

"Hey, wait up, will you? This is killing me," I called up to A——.

He turned around and saw that I was falling all over the car trying to catch my breath and came back to me.

"Ahh, you are having difficulty I see," he said. "We will wait till you are able to go on."

He began to rummage around in the folds of his robe and pulled out a corn cob pipe that had an aluminum foil lined bowl and no stem. Filling it with a pinchful of grass from the bottom of his little white bag, he lit up and stood blowing smoke rings.

"Boy," I said between gasps, "You sure believe in practicing what you preach, don't you?"

He smiled.

"Ahh, yes, that is so. Would you like to join me," he asked.

"Don't mind if I do," I said, and reached for the piped.

Just as I put the pipe to my lips a loud siren sounded. A—— quickly stepped back from me on the sidewalk and I was seized roughly from behind. The pipe fell from my lips and I struggled to get away.

A—— stood in front of me and cackled in a high voice.

"Got you again! We fooled you again!," he laughed.

I didn't understand. Got me again? When did he get me the first time? Strong fingers dug into my arms and I began to lose feeling in them. Got me again? Got me again? What does he mean?

Then it hit me!

"Mashuganishi!" I shouted.

A—— smiled and bowed. "At your service," he said.

"What is this all about?" I demanded. "What are you trying to do to me, anyway?"

But A—— wasn't listening. He made a motion with his hand and I was pushed into the back seat of the car I had been leaning on. Someone got in after me. I turned to see who this was. It was Fred. And Leo was sitting behind the wheel. The Mashuganishi got into the front seat and gave Leo a wave of his hand. Leo started the car and away we went.

The Mashuganishi sat with his arm up on the back of the seat and kept turning around and sneering at me from time to time as we drove through the city streets. Finally Leo stopped in front of a familiar-looking building and I was pushed out of the car, thorough the fromt door of the building and into an elevator. We rode the elevator in silence to the top floor where we got out and walked down a narrow hall to a small room at the end. Fred closed the door behind me as he pushed me in behind His Holiness and Leo. There was a funny soupy smell in the room. Fred pushed me into a chair.

"I think I know where we are," I said with a quiver in my voice.

A—— sneered at me.

"Fool," he said.

He was folding up his sleeve again. I didn't have to be told what was going to happen. Pretty soon A—— was nodding off in a corner and I was all alone with Fred and Leo. Fred began to come towards me slowly with a malicious look in his eyes while Leo stood near the window with a can of yak butter which he dipped his finger into occasionally.

"Now, Fred," I said. "I hope you're intelligent enough to understand that none of this is my fault. I mean, how could I possibly get back here forty years ago without any help. That doesn't seem to make sense, now does it Fred? Fred? Fred!!!"

My eyeballs began to roll around. Everything disappeared into the darkness; the Mashuganishi nodding off in the corner, Leo earing yak butter, Fred coming at me with that awful look in his eyes. I suddenly became very conscious of the hardness of the chair I was sitting in. A light appeared in the darkness and I watched it as it came closer and closer, brighter and brighter. It stopped just in front of me and hung, slowly swinging from side to side. I began to calm down and watch the light. In a few minutes I was swinging my head along with the light and then the light expanded. I gasped. I could almost see things again. The light expanded again and suddenly I was back in the room where I started from.

Fred and Leo were walking the Mashuganishi around the room. His Holiness was out cold and frothing at the mouth. Fred and Leo looked too busy to care what I did. I slowly crept out of the chair, slunk across the room to the door and dashed down the hall. Fred saw me and ran after me but he was too late. The elevator doors were just closing and as the car plunged to the bottom floor I could hear Fred pound futilely on the doors above my head.

I was safe for a few minutes anyway. Fred would have to run down the stars to head me off. By the time he got to the ground I could be halfway down the block. The elevator coasted to a stop, a little bell rang, the doors opened and I dashed out and ran right into a big fat lady in a purple dress.

"Ohh, ohh, my goodness," she exclaimed. "Why don't you watch where you're going, young man."

"Jam it," I muttered as I tried to disengage myself from the folds of her flowing purple dress. She reeked of perfume.

"Well, of all the impudent young rascals," she smarled. "In all my life I've never seen anything like this."

She began to splutter and turn red. I was still trying to untangle the purple dress which was all wound around my legs.

"Relax, lady, you'll live longer," I said in a low voice.

That apparently did it. She stretched out her fat and flabby arm which had a black pocketbook dangling off the end of it and clubbed me on the head. I fell to the floor just as the elevator door opened again and out stepped Leo and Fred. They gave the fat lady a dirty look, dragged me back into the elevator and brought me up to the little room.

When I came to I was sitting in the chair again facing His Holiness who was finally beginning to show some signs of life. He was trying to hold his head up and all kinds of drool was dripping down his chin. Fred walked up to him with a kleenex in his hand, jerked his head back and wiped his chin off. He didn't look at me. This is great, I thought. They still think I'm out.

"Geezus, what are we going to do with His Nibs," said Leo. "He's been shooting up four and five times a day lately. If he keeps this up he's gonna kill himself."

"I know what you mean, Leo," said Fred. "And besides, he's getting to be kind of a pain in the ass, always whining for me to fix him a cube all the time. There's nothing worse than a dope fiend cry-baby, you know that, Leo?"

"Boy, you aren't kidding, Fred," replied Leo. "I got an idea. Why don't we just ditch him. I mean, we can make out fine by ourselves. We don't need him. All this nonsense of trying to convince this kid that he's back in the 1930's. What a load of shit. I mean, are we or are we not civilized people? We don't have to do anything this geek says. Let's just get rid of him."

"But how, Leo? He's a pretty big wheel, you know."

It sounded like Fred was having second thoughts, bless his little heart.

"Now c'mon, Fred. This little drip couldn't be all that important to anybody. All he does is stick that filthy needle into his arm all day long. Why don't we just take him and sort of ease him over the edge of an empty elevator shaft. He'll go thump at the bottom and that's the last we'll ever hear of him."

"Good, good. Now explain what we do with this other idiot," said Fred. "I mean, do we just leave him here or pitch him off the edge too?"

"We'll cross that bridge when we come to it," said Leo. "Now c'mon, give me a hand with His Holiness."

They dragged the inert form of the little man in white out of the door and down the hall. No, I thought, this is unfair. They can't do this! I've got to do something! Ahhh, but what? If I don't move soon, His Holiness will be nothing but a bloody pulp.

I snuck over to the telephone and dialed a number. It rang once, twice, three times. No one home, I thought. Then someone answered.

"Hello?" said an odd voice. "Sammy Square speaking, heh, heh, heh. What can I do for you?"

"You don't know me," I began, "But I saw you running down the sidewalk one day trying to hold your pants up.I thought that since you were so influential and dynamic you could help with a little problem I seem to be stuck with."

"Well, lay it on me, baby, and I'll tell you what I think, heh, heh, heh," he chuckled.

I outlined what was going on and what I wanted him to do. He listened intently, chewing his ever-present wad of gum with a smacking noise. He interrupted me before I could finish.

'Hey, I can't promise you anything but I'll do my best, heh, heh, heh. What do you say?"

I told him to get right on it.

He was there before Fred and Leo had a chance to get the door open to dump His Holiness off the elevator shaft. A quick right to the chops and a left to the groin and pretty soon Sammy Square was tied up in a chair alongside me.

"Well, that was pretty cool, Sammy," I said. "What do you do for an encore?"

"Heh, heh, heh," he chuckled. "We'll be out of this in no time at all. I'll simply press this little button on my wrist watch, which emits a high frequency rone. My trusty companion Rufus the Bloodhound will come barreling up to help us. Smart dog, he speaks seven different languages."

"Smart dog my ass," I snorted. "Listen, Sammy. You're an accredited Super-Hero. You have to help get me out of this mess. What's going to happen if I get killed by these gorillas? Think about it. Earthquakes, floods, tidal waves. We can avoid all that if you do something."

"Hey, don't look at me, man," he said, squirming around in the chair. "I'm having enough trouble with these ropes. What am I supposed to do to help you?"

"Drop dead," I muttered.

Just then Fred and Leo came back into the room. They had a very mad look on their faces.

"You guys are lucky we can't get that fat lady out of the elevator," said Fred, "or we'd throw you guys down after the Mashuganishi. But we can't even kill him until we get her out. God, does she stink."

Leo laughed. "Ha-ha, look at these two, Fred. This one looks like he's about to crap his pants."

"I am not," said Sammy. "And furthermore....."

"Lay off, you punk," bellowed Fred. He began to get red in the face. "Just lay off or I'll bean you one."

Sammy began to wriggle and twist in the chair.

"I didn't mean it," he whined. "I didn't mean it. Don't hurt me. Please don't hurt me."

"Yeah," I laughed. "Dont' throw Sammy out into the cold cruel world. He'll shrivel and die."

"Fred, you know what to do," barked Leo. "Take him and throw him out."

They grabbed Sammy and pitched him headfirst out the doorway. He flew down the hall and banged his head on the elevator doors. The doors opened and the far lady slowly toppled out, flattening Sammy on the way down.

"Wow, what a way to go," I said in awe.

"Yeah, let's do the same to him," said Leo. He grabbed me and pulled me out of the chair and started to drag me down the hall.

"You won't get away with this," I said.

"Cut out the bravery act," said Fred, and kicked me. We were getting close to the fat lady. I could see little bits of Sammy sticking out from under her and I thought I would be sick. But all of a sudden the elevator door opened again and there stood Rufus!

With a terrific growl he leaped on Fred and Leo and shredded them with his razor sharp claws! He rolled the fat lady off of Sammy, shed a quick tear and then rolled her back. Finally he stood up on his back legs, shook my hand, bowed, and disappeared into the elevator.

Well, I thought as I straightened my robe out, that certainly was exciting. Wonder what's going to happen next week?

Mau-Mauing With Tom Wolfe

By FRANK M. BAGLIONE

Review: Radical Chic and Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers by Tom Wolfe (Bantam Books)

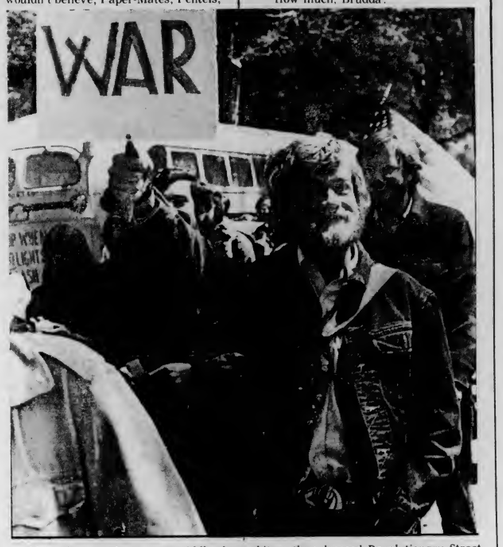
Part II: Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers

Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers is the Radical Chic for the masses. We move from thirteen room Park Avenue apartments to the ghetto district of San Francisco. We leave the glamorous Black Panther revolutionaries and deal with the ghetto hustler. Our hosts are anti-poverty program bureaucrats, not Lenny and Felicia Bernstein. What remains is Tom Wolfe's amazing ability to identify and describe the ridiculous whether it be in Park Avenue apartment or Bay Area ghetto, whether it be black or white. But Tom Wolfe makes no siutation or people ridiculous, they have done this themselves in the confrontation of black rage and white guilt.

The terms black rage and white guilt are themselves ridiculous. They are the inventions of middle class "intellectuals". There are no lower class people feeling guilt about their prejudiced feelings towards blacks anymore than they experience qualms about their ethnic prejudices. Having never held power the lower classes have never been in a position to oppress anyone. Their racism resides in their own neighborhoods, nowhere else. White guilt is a social malady found among the dwellers of one family houses and the inhabitants of Park Avenue apartments. It thrives at "sister colleges" and the ivy league. Black rage, it would seem, has an even more limited existence, sufficient for book and play titles, but usually not extending beyond a white, middle class fear. Indeed, what the "concerned" of our society describe as black rage, Tom Wolfe has called mau-mauing.



"Going downtown to mau-mau the bureaucrats got to be the routine practice in San Francisco," Wolfe begins. "The poverty program encouraged you to go in for mau-mauing." The reason was that the bureaucrats in the program didn't know where to look for the people they were supposed to help. So, "they sat back and waited for you to come rolling in with your certified angry militants, your guaranteed frustrated ghetto youth, looking like a bunch of wild men." If you were outrageous enough in your confrontation, if you could shake them up, they knew you were the right studs to give the poverty grants and community organizing jobs to.

Wolfe describes some of the ways mau-mauing was practiced. Some real geniuses in the art of confrontation emerged. One such scorned the idea of bringing his whole group to mau-mau the poverty program officials. He would simply show up with a crocus sack full of knives, revolvers, ice picks, fish knives, hatchets, straight razors, hand grenades, blow guns, bazookas, unbelievable stuff, and he would dump it all on someone's shiny walnut conference table and say, "These are some of the things I took off my boys last night...I don't know, man..." And they would lay money on this man's ghetto youth patrol like it was now or never. The bureaucrats felt it was all real. "They felt like they were realing all those hard-to-reach hard-to-hold hard-core hardrock blackrage furious funky ghetto youth."

One must be wise in the ways of the world to succeed as a mau-mau leader. Wolfe gives us a shot of reality, uninterpreted, when he describes some mau-mau strategies. One leader tells his boys, "Now don't forget. When you go downtown, y'all wear your ghetto rags...see...Don't go down there with your Italian silk jerseys on and your brown suede and green alligator shoes and your Harry Belafonte shirts looking like some supercool tooth-pick-noddin' fool...you know...You wear your combat fatigues and your leather pieces and your shades... your ghetto rags...see...You go down with your hair stickin' out...and sittin' up! Lookin' wild. I want to see you down there looking like a bunch of wild niggers!" The idea is to frighten the "man" until his iceballs freeze.

One time the different minority groups in the Mission district of San Francisco joined together to go downtown and investigate a rumor that there would be a cut down on summer jobs in their area. "So the young aces from the Mission come trooping into the poverty program offices and they want to see the head man. The word comes out that the No. 1 man is out of town, but the No. 2 man is coming out to talk to the people.

"This man comes out, and he has that sloppy Irish look like Ed McMahon. He doesn't have to open his mouth. All you have to do is look at him and you get the picture. The man's a lifer. He's stone civil service. He has it all down from the wheatcolor Hush Puppies to the wash 'n' dry semi-tab-collar shortsleeves white shirt. Those wheatcolor Hush Puppies must be like some kind of fraternal garb among the civil service employees, because they all wear them." The man's shirt is one of those with pockets on both sides. Sticking out of his pockets and running across his chest "he has a lineup of ball-point pens, felt nibs, lead pencils, wax markers, such as you wouldn't believe, Paper-Mates, Pentels,

"Most of her students were middle-class whites; they dressed Revolutionary Street Fighter Hip. They dressed righteous and 'with the people'."

Scriptos, Eberhard Faber Mongol 482's, Bic PM-29's, everything. They are lined up across his chest like campaign ribbons."

Having displayed his talent for describing the costumes of the protagonists, Wolfe now moves us in for a look at the actual mau-mauing. The civil service lifer gives a short speech saying he will try to answer all their questions, but they must understand he is speaking only as an individual, none of his comments are binding. "And then it dawns on you...This man is the flak catcher. His job is to catch flak for the No. 1 man. He's like the professional mourners you can hire in Chinatown. He is ready to catch whatever you're sending up. Whatever you're angry about, it doesn't matter, he's there to catch the flak. He's a lifer."

By now everyone knows the scene is a schuck, but you can't just walk out and leave. You can't get it on and bring thirty-five people downtown and then just turn around and walk away. So...might as well get into the number. The first phase in the art of mau-mauing is the straight-face phase. A Chicano opens it up by asking the straight question, "How many summer jobs are the Mission groups going to get?" The Flak Catcher responds with something about pre-funding and fixed assets and that they are very hopeful. It goes on like this for a while. He keeps saying things like "I don't know the answer to that right now but I will do everything I can to find out."

Then one of the bloods says, "Man, you keep telling us there ain't nothing you say that means a goddam thing." "Ba -ram -ba -ram -ba -ram-ba -ram-a bunch of aces start banging on the floor in unison. It is the first assault on the Flak Catcher's dignity. So he breaks into his shit-eating grin, which is always phase two. Why do so many bureaucrats, deans, preachers, college presidents, try to smile when the mau-mauing starts? It's fatal, this smiling. When some bad dude is challenging your manhood, your smile just proves that he is right and you are chickenshit." The Flak Catcher is still staring at them and his shit-eating grin is getting worse. It's like he knows the worst is yet to come.

"'Hey Brudda," the main man says. "Hey, Brudda, how much do you make?"

"Me?" says the Flak Catcher.

"Yeah, Brudda, you. How much money you make?"

Now the Flak Catcher is trying to think in eight directions at once. "He tries out a new smile. He tries it out on the bloods, the Chicanos, and the Filipinos, as if to say, 'As one intelligent creature to another, what do you do with dumb people like this?'" But receiving only glares in return his mouth shimmies back into the terrible sickening grin.

"How much, Brudda?"

"Well," says the Flak Catcher. "I make $1,100 a month."

"How come you make so much? My fadda and mudda both work and they only make six hundred and fifty."

("Oh shit, the cat kind of blew it there. That's way over the poverty line, about double, in fact. It's even above the guideline for a family of twelve.")

The harassment of the Flak Catcher continues until he is reduced to a quivering mass of contorted features only mildly resembling a man. Then the mau-mauing stops and all the players return home. And when you think about it later, you say, "'What really happened that day? Well, another Flak Catcher lost his manhood.' Hmmmmm...like maybe the bureaucracy isn't so dumb after all...All they did was sacrifice one Flak Catcher, and they've got hundreds, thousands...They've got replaceable parts. And even the Flak Catcher himself wasn't losing much. He wasn't losing his manhood. He gave that up a long time ago, the day he became a lifer...Just who is fucking over who...You did your number and he did his number, and they didn't even have to stop the music...The band played on."

Still there is a bonus to mau-mauing for the blacks. It brings fear into the white man's face. Black people began realizing for the first time that the white man, especially the educated white man, "had a deep dark Tarzan mumbo jungle voodoo fear of the black man's masculinity...So for the black man mau-mauing was a beautiful trip. It not only stood to bring you certain practical gains like money and power. It also energized your batteries. It recharged your masculinity." For the community as a whole it brought jobs and "education" because mau-mauing was the means the proverty program used to find the real leaders in the black community. The program encouraged "community organizing," which was the bureaucratic term for "Power to the People, the term for finding the leaders and helping them organize the poor. So the poverty program not only encouraged mau-mauing, it demanded it.

The suspicion is that Wolfe is in favor of the mechanics of this operation. He tells of it as an admirer of a perfectly engineered farce. What is more he displays an affection for his characters. The qualities he ascribes to them are geared to endear them to the reader, they are there to be enjoyed much as we enjoy the endearing characterizations of other cultural (or ethnic) minorities in films, plays and written works.

In fact, Wolfe's characterization of the blacks in Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers is so endearing that the reader, white or black, finds himself choosing to identify with the black man. The scene which best illustrates this takes place in an English class at San Francisco State where a teacher has decided to read aloud to the class from Soul On Ice by Eldridge Cleaver. "This teacher was a white woman...one of those Peter, Paul and Mary-type intellectuals. She didn't wear makeup, she didn't wear nylons. She looked sort of Pioneer Hip or Salt of the Earth Hip, with flat heeled shoes and big Honest Calves. Most of her students were middle-class whites; they dressed Revolutionary Street Fighter Hip. They dressed righteous and "with the people." They wore berets, long hair, raggedy field jackets and combat boots. And jeans, the Can't Bust 'Em brand with an emblem on the back real funky, and wooly green socks, the kind you get at the Army surplus stores. Or else they would go for those checked lumberjack shirts that are so heavy and wooly that you can wear them like jacket.

It is like the Revolution has nostalgia for the proletariat of about 1910, because today the oppressed, the hard-core ghetto youth--they aren't into the Can't Bust 'Ems and the army surplus socks. They're into the James Brown look. They're into ruffled shirts, the black leather pieces from Boyd's on Main Street, the bell-cuff herringbones, all that stuff, looking sharp. If you tried to put one of those lumpy lumberjack shirts on them, they'd vomit. There were a few of these ghetto brothers in the class.

When the teacher finishes reading from Soul On Ice, she closes the book very softly under her chin, the way a preacher closes the Bible. Naturally all the white kids are wiped out. It is obvious to them that Cleaver speaks for the blacks and the only thing that will change this rotten system is a revolution. But one of the ghetto brothers raises his hand and rises to comment on what they have just heard.

"You know what? Ghetto people would laugh if they heard what you just read. That book was written for the white middle class. They published and they read it. What is this 'having previously dabbled in the themes and writings of Rousseau, Thomas Paine and Voltaire' that he's laying down in there? You try coming down in the Fillmore doing some previously dabbling and talking about Camus and Baldwin. They'd laugh you off the block. Eldridge Cleaver wouldn't write something like that. I think his wife wrote it...Pre-vi-ous-ly dab-bled...I mean like don't dabble the people no previous lies and don't previous the people no dabblies and don't prevy-dabble the people with no split-level Palo Alto white bourgeois housewife Buick Estate Wagon backseat rape fantasies...you know?...."

Everyone in the room is staring at the cat with congealed faces, like they just got sapped in the back of the neck. They hardly had a chance to get down into the creamy pudding of their romantic Black hero trip when this dude comes along and unloads on them. And in a sense it is also Tom Wolfe unloading on his readers, the same white middle-class, for the overly serious manner in which they have conducted themselves, seen themselves and their ideas, in the "epic clash between black rage and white guilt." But for the most part he is not so concerned with the white middle class in Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers.

In the remainder of the work Wolfe deals with the "pimp style" of the black ghetto leader and some further episodes of mau-mauing conducted in city hall and other places.

So Mau-Mauing the Flak Catchers, like the first part of this edition, Radical Chic, comes off as a thoroughly enjoyable book. For blacks, for middle class whites, for those who have endulged in "the movement," it is a revealing and funny work; for those having no previous connection with any of what Wolfe treats in the book it is informative and funny. You learn and laugh. But what is more, by better understanding the situation and drives of all the groups involved, you are less likely to take yourself, your ideas, and your plans for all mankind's salvation too seriously. You are less likely to fall into the trap for the ridiculous over which stands Tom Wolfe.

Lesson Four-The Tone Arm

FRANK JOHNSON

Upon first glance a tone arm, which holds the cartridge in place and traces it in accordance with the record grooves, is a relatively simple device. In many instances, this assumption is very true; for example, inexpensive record changers pay it virtual lip-service. But in actuality, a tone arm is constructed according to many complex design parameters. We shall review in today's column those that are most important.

With one or two exceptions, which we'll discuss later, a tone arm is generally mounted in the top right- hand corner of the record playing unit, with respect to the turntable platter. It consists of a shaft ending in an offset head. It is the head that holds the cartridge in place, and the wires leading from the cartridge which carry the generated current are contained in the shaft.

In addition to being able to move laterally (sideways), a tone arm must also move vertically (up and down) with little difficulty, because aside from applying the simple tracking force to the cartridge, it must be able to navigate the surface of the record freely. If the cartridge is a compliant one, then the tone arm has more work to do. As was the case with a turntable platter, a tone arm uses bearings to reduce friction on moving parts. To successfully track a highly-compliant cartridge, the tone arm must have virtually frictionless pivot bearings. It must be free to move laterally and vertically with little effort if it is to realize the full potential of the cartridge.

Besides having low-friction bearings, the mass of a tone arm should be evenly distributed so that its balance is stable. It must be counterweighted for this to occur. We can generalize by saying that any tone arm without a counterweight on the opposite end with respect to the head cannot have the dynamic balance required for a high-compliance cartridge. The tone arm, when the tracking force is set at zero, should balance out to a force of zero grams when the counterweight is adjusted properly.

When we are using a cartridge having a tracking force of 2 grams or less, we may find that the tone arm's lightweight may make it difficult to handle. Therefore, it is sometimes beneficial to have a cueing device to enable us to set the arm down on the record easily, without damaging the delicate stylus. Cueing devices are not all the same. The better ones use a dampening mechanism by which the arm descends slowly down onto the record, lessening the likelihood of stylus damage.

A Thorens manual turntable. The difference between this and an automatic turntable is like the difference between stick shift and automatic transmission. Except what's trackable here isn't rejectable.

But despite all these refinements, we may find that we have created a new problem after solving all the rest. When bearing friction is reduced, this means that the arm as a whole is subject to the extreme forces involved in tracking a record. The record grooves literally dictate what the entire tone arm has to do. Therefore, with little resistance from the bearings, the tone arm "skates"--it is pulled towards the center of the record sometimes with a force exceeding its tracking force. Though the effects of skating distortion are very subtle, they can be measured by observing the waveform of a cartridge on an oscilloscope. With a stereo cartridge, one channel is derived from laterally-modulated grooves. If the tone arm is moving with a greater force laterally than vertically, one channel will be slightly distorted and there is a possibility of uneven record wear.

Certain tone arms have devices to correct skating, which apply a compensating force to reduce the tendency to skate. This may be done either by means of a simple counterweight or a spring. These devices are aptly called "anti-skating devices". They are useful only in those arms sensitive enough to skate. They do more harm than good in inexpensive record changers, which have bearing friction so high as not to require any compensation. Anti-skating devices on these units merely interfere with proper tracking. In addition, elliptical styli need different anti-skating compensation than conical styli, usually somewhat more. In any event, basic anti-skating compensation should result in a tone arm that does not move when placed on an unmodulated disc (one with no grooves).

I must request a few liberties in geometry to properly discuss the design of a tone arm, because it is impossible to do so otherwise. As the tone arm traces the record, it creates an arc with respect to its center pivot and the stylus. Due to this arc, there are several points on the record where the axis of the stylus will not be 90^0 in accordance to the axis of the record grooves. This is called tangency, and if we don't have it, then we have to suffer some distortion. The lack of true tangency is called tracking error, and it is common to all tone arms creating an arc by means of their center pivot. Naturally, we want to reduce tracking error to as low a value as possible.

We can do this by off-setting the head of the tone arm, so that the radius of the arc is increased. As a result, the tracking error will decrease. To go further, we must also pay respect to a compromise method known as stylus overhang. This is the distance by which the stylus does not meet exactly over the center spindle in the middle of the record, but overshoots it by a certain distance. Through correct compensation using overhang, the tracking error can further be reduced by making the stylus more closely approximate tangency at all points on the record. Thus, if we can design and mount a tone arm so that it has low tracking error, we have reduced potential distortion to a low degree.

These problems can all be eliminated with a different type of tone arm called the "straight-line tracking arm". Instead of compromising different geometric parameters, this arm carries the cartridge across the record in a straight line, virtually duplicating the path of the record cutter. There is no tracking error, because the needle (stylus) stays tangent to the grooves at all times. In addition, if it is well- designed, it will have inherently less friction than an offset arm because its length need not be so great, and this means that a lower tracking force is possible. Frequently, a cartridge can be operated below its recommended tracking force on this type of arm with the same results as normal force on an offset arm. However, this type is more complex and delicate than the offset type, and at the moment it is also quite expensive.

Before closing and continuing our discussion of transducers with tape recorders in the next issue, I would like to point out that any tone arm, regardless of its type, is subject to certain gravitational forces resulting from the plane on which it rests. This means that if a tone arm is not mounted on a level plane, the tracking and anti-skating force (if any) will be unevenly distributed. Therefore, a turntable unit must always be level. To verify whether or not it is level, use a small spirit level, available at any hardware counter. The level of the turntable can be simply adjusted by building up sloping corners with cardboard or foam padding. Also, the leads from the cartridge must not interfere with the tracing of the record. Always make sure that the four small wires from the cartridge do not bind anywhere, or else this will amount to an unwanted frictional force interfering with correct tracing of the record.

no live Dylan and the Band, like the one in London where he gets booed. And all the rest-the Dead, Hendrix, Neil Young, etc... Because of bootlegs the available recordings of a rock star are increased considerably.

MAKING BOOTLEGS

There are two forms of bootlegging. One is to get an already released record and reproduce it yourself. The other is to record a concert or obtain old tapes-either way you are creating something that wasn't already there. The first way is unethical and a more obvious form of forgery. It isn't done nearly as much as the second, which is good. The record companies get ripped off this way, and the consumer takes the brunt of the blow.

Of the second way, there are various ways of obtaining them. The easiest is to record directly off the radio or the television. Occasionally, a hip FM station like WBCN in Boston or KSAN in San Francisco will broadcast a concert or play rare tapes. These can be recorded at home, in stereo, and printed up and released. Instant bootleg.

Recording off TV results in low fidelity, but can make for an interesting record. The Beatles on The Ed Sullivan Show, or the recent Leon Russell album are examples of this.

Another way is to bring a tape recorder to a concert and simply tape it. This is the most used method. If you are crafty enough you can even make some deal with the sound men to get an acoustically safe spot.

Actually there is a third way of making a bootleg-and that's to bootleg an already existing one. There have even been cases of a bootleg of a bootleg of a bootleg. Every time over, however, there is a loss of fidelity because of the unavoidable hums of the reproducing equipment. An example of this is the fantastic live Beatles' album called "Alive At Last". Recently it has been reissued as "Live Concert At Whiskey Flats" and the quality just isn't as good as the original.

The next step in the process is the pressing of the records and the pasting of the covers. This is usually done by local recording studios and could be a hassle if the owner is a bastard. The trick is to find a cool one that will do it. Be prepared to invest a lot of money in it too. Pressing less than, say, a thousand is impractical. If you are ambitious enough, you can buy your own equipment, like the notorious Rubber Dubber in California. This way everything can be done right at home in a jiffy. Be prepared to spend at least $15,000, though.

Distributing your product is an easy job. Some record stores will buy them from you and there should be no problem finding hawkers for your product. Chances are that anyone that sells "Boston After Dark" or "The Phoenix" would gladly sell your product for you. The going profit is double the cost to the seller. The manufacturer sells them for about $1.25 an album, sometimes higher, never lower. The deals are always straight cash.

BUYING BOOTLEGS

There are a lot of disadvantages to bootleg records, production-wise. The quality is always inferior to a legitimate record. This stands to reason. With recording studios and sophisticated recording equipment, a much better sound is the result. It is hard to listen to bootlegs at a high volume without getting a splitting headache. And you can't listen to several at one sitting without ending up in the same condition.

Also, there is usually little or no new material and there tends to be a lot of repetition with other albums-both bootleg and otherwise.

But bootleg records are collector's items, in the truest sense of the term. When a fan buys a bootleg, he should be aware of its defects and its shortcomings. A true follower won't really mind, though. In fact, he'll probably like it, in a way. A bootleg is something rare, like a glimpse into a person's private life. It is something special, not a product of a big corporation. Chances are, you will never hear a bootleg being played at a party or as background music. It is made to be listened to, to be studied. It helps to understand the artist and the nature of his music. Not everyone will like a bootleg record.

There are also aesthetic aspects to a bootleg album. The covers, being just plain white, make it all more intriguing. The photographs that often accompany a bootleg are usually very artistic and campy. The labels often have goofy names like "Zerocks" or "Mammary Productions". On one rare one called "Beatlegged Live" there is even a peace sign in the inner spiral and some witty liner notes inside, from wit I quote, "(These liner notes) are carefully handwritten so that the federal bootleg-smashers cannot trace my typewriter. (Besides being music freaks, we here at Crabapple all watch Dragnet)". And a Jimi Hendrix bootleg, live at Hawaii has some tough graphics and the record is on yellow vinyl (as is a Jethro Tull one).

Contrary to a recent "Rolling Stone" article, there is still very much a market for bootleg record albums. Rick Ayres, who sells them in front of the Student Union, here at UMass, can attest to this. Like most serious rock followers, he is fascinated by the whole bootleg phenomenon. "When I was younger I used to collect stamps, and I find collecting bootlegs very similar. Whenever I find that a new one has come in, I regard it as a real treasure, a real find." Like many of us, he shows a real passion towards them, a feeling almost filial in nature.

Ayres, who once attended Stanford, started out asking $3.50 for a single album, but with a rise in business, has lowered his price to $2.75 for some albums. And he strives to keep his prices as low as possible. He has no intention of stopping his business for the time and will someday buy a record store. He obtains his bootlegs through people in Boston, where there seems to be a lot of middlemen. He finds business on campus very rewarding and sells an impressive variety.

Kipnis Extraordinary In Concert

A most unique theatrical experience was presented by Claude Kipnis last Thursday night on Bowker's stage. Kipnis and his company presented a program of dance, art, theater, music, and social commentary.

Claude Kipnis is a master of mime having studied under a master himself, Marcelle Marceau. After studying with Marceau, Kipnis applied his talents in Israel where he founded a school of mime, taught at a University, and created a group with deaf mutes. After a series of successful international performances, Kipnis was appointed artist in residence at the Unitersity of Illinois.

The first half of the program was a series of five short sketches in which Kipnis and his company presented several societal situations almost solely through the expressiveness of their mime. Costuming and music only served to support the eloquence of the dance. Almost all of the costuming and lighting were restricted to blacks and whites. The background music was basically a conglomeration of rythms and short twisted melody patterns which were given purpose through the calculated acting of Kipnis and his company. To separate the music from the dance would render it pointless, but by superimposing the dance onto the musical background a completeness of sight and sound was conveyed to the audience.

The first of the five segments was entitled "The Crowd". "The Crowd" was a stark depiction of the members of society as an undulating mass of masked entities, indistinguishable from one another. These entities were entwined in the all-encompassing and almost magnetic force of society from which the only escape is death.

The mime artist uses every segment of the body in order to convey through movement not only bodily and situations. An example can be seen in the second scene, entitled "The Party" in which Kipnis presented a soliloquy in movement.

After an elaborate preparatory scene in which the party-goer primped himself and posed in front of a non-existant mirror, the self-indulgent Kipnis presented himself at the party. Kipnis, as the sole performer created from a stage which was totally void of props, the scene of a party room filled with details ranging from distasteful hors d'oeuvres to some even more distasteful guests. Through his precisely expressive actions we followed Kipnis through the agonies of those rousing handshakes and pats on the back to the polite choking-down of a foul tasting party snack.

In the course of the party evening, Kipnis encountered several forms of social enjoyment ranging from polite sipping of drinks to---you guessed it---smoking dope. Kipnis, to the absolute delight of the sympathetic audience, attempted to appear nonchalent and experienced while desperately restraining his persistant chokes and coughs.

The remaining three segments were equally effective in the application of mime. The third in the series, entitled "Au Clair de la Lune" was a humorous enactment of a moon landing and the ensueing encounter with four pierrots or clowns who were the mime's equivalent to our martians. It is interesting to note that the pierrot was a comic and a clown who was the principal mime character in the 18th century.

In the segment of the performance entitled "The Bottle" Kipnis, alone on the empty stage, depicted the incident of a drunken man who is sucked into a bottle. As his hands desperately pressed against and felt the sides of the fantasized bottle, the audience could actually sense the bottle as it was imprisoning its victim-the alcoholic.

The first half of the mime program was completed with "Point of View" which was a colorful and moving dramatic fantasy dealing with the absurdity of war and it heroes. The scene was the only one in which color was an integral part of the action. Loud, almost gaudy lighting effects produced a rather grotesque scene which served to support and emphasize the powerful theme of the sketch.

A totally new use of mime was applied in the second half of the program. The music, by Bela Bartok was the structure for the action whereas in other scenes, the mime was of singular and primary importance. "The Miraculous Mandarin" seemed to be a short play whose enactment involved large, sweeping, almost violent movements with less emphasis on detail.

Kipnis, as the featured performer, was the prominent figure in almost every piece that was performed. As a result, his apparent philosophies about mime were prevalent that mime is a combination of delicat and precise actions designed to express, through movement, not only the potential of the human body, but the attitudes and ideas of the human mind.

Millhouse: A Review

By NATHANIEL W. HAYDEN

"Millhouse" (A White Comedy)

A film directed and Produced by Emile de Antonio.

"Millhouse" is an up-to-date documentary about President Nixon. The hour and a half film, composed primarily of TV footage of Nixon's campaign speeches charts his movement from California senator to vice-president under the Eisenhower Administration, and finally to the presidency.

The film shows how Nixon won fame, while he was a senator, due to the success of his single-handed efforts to prove to the House Committee on Un-American Activities that Alger Hiss, an important person in the State Department in the late 1940's, was a Communist. After the Hiss Case was settled, Millhouse was looked upon with admiration by the Republican financial establishment, i.e. potential supporters. Therefore, it should not be surprising that his slogan in the 1952 and 1956 campaigns for the vice-presidency was "get the Reds out of government, a surprisingly effective tactic used also by Joe McCarthy. You might find it interesting to see how Millhouse weaved other popular statements such as one made in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr's, "I Have A Dream" speech into his own campaign speeches.

One of the many "Tricky Dick" statements in the film was one he made after losing his bid for the governorship of California in 1962. He said, in effect, that thereafter he had no intention of running for public office. As we all know, he did not keep his promise.

Other high points in the film were TV footage of the 1968 Republican National Convention which was held in Miami, Florida, along with footage of scenes that took place outside of the convention hall. It makes what happened in Chicago seem like a picnic. There is also a segment on the Vietnam War in which statistics are given on the effectiveness of "Millhouse's" Vietnamization program.

To sum things up, "Millhouse" is a damn good movie and well worth seeing. Now's your chance to see exactly why Nixon is called "Tricky Dick". If you already know why, it's worth going anyway, just to have a good laugh.

Eating Out

The Bluebonnet

By KERRY GILLILAND
EMILIE SIKORA

Having decided to grind out another irregular weekly column, we motored over to Northampton, where our traveling companions recommended trying the Bluebonnet Diner (324 Main St.) As it was a holiday, we were not able to check out the place we had in mind and, having no strong hankering for a "Mr. Burg Quickie', we figured, why not? Our overall feeling now is that this is about the strongest reason (why not?) for eating here.

If atmosphere counts for anything with you, we can only say that last Monday night things were slow, again, perhaps due to the holiday. Most of the people eating there were older-working-class people. (Do you recall the scene in "Easy Rider" where Dennis Hopper and Peter Fonda pull into the local town diner and are visually dissected? Well, it wasn't that bad at the Bluebonnet, but we did feel a little obvious just sitting there-eating and talking.) Overall, it was pretty quiet with only overtones of Johnny Mathis helping pull us through the meal. (NOTE: Save your money on the juke box-you only get two songs for a quarter-and considering the song selection; your money would be better spent by making a deposit in the Muscular Dystrophy can by the door.)

The interior is casual, well kept up and clean. The service wasn't bad either, however, on a more crowded night, you may not be as fortunate, for the cooks were observed to be snacking while preparing the orders.

In general, prices tend to be greater than similar eating establishments. Appetizers run pretty high-.50-1.25. "Daily Specials" run between .95-4.95, but it's a wise idea to ask before hand what you're getting for the price. Don't take for granted that you will get a complete dinner with any order; for instance, spaghetti and meatballs is $1.65 (without the tax) and that's all you get. Garlic bread and salad are .50 each. A meatball grinder (with the same spaghetti sauce) doesn't seem bad at .95, when you consider for the same price you can get a roast beef sandwich on buttered bread. So remember-ask first, then order! A quick run through of the menu reveals choices of: steak, chicken, capon (!), turkey, franks and beans, lobster chunks, fried clams, scallops, oysters and various salad plates.

Our honest feeling is that the Bluebonnet is a passable place to eat, if you don't mind paying a little more for a little less. The hours at the Bluebonnet Diner are Monday-Friday 5:30 a.m.-12:00 p.m. and Saturday 6:00 a.m.-12:00 p.m. Banquet facilities are available in the elegant "Florentine Room."

TUPELO HONEY - Van Morrison (Warner Bros. Records)

The shape of Van Morrison's record is similar to that of The Band's latest "Cahoots". They are U-shaped, not flat. Same thing with Side One of "Stage Fright". The good songs are at the beginnings and ends of the sides. It is a canyon, and the peaks are high.

The first time I ever heard The Band's "Strawberry Wine" was on my brand new, deluxe, record player--which was two months late in arriving. When that song came on I was once again liberated. And "All La Glory" brought back sensitivity. Everytime I hear that song I like it.

TUPELO HONEY starts out so fine. The first two tunes, "Wild Night" and "Like A Cannonball" are beautiful and unforgettable. Van Morrison has to be one of the greats. And if he isn't, then it's the fault of the god-damned people who are unable to recognize his greatness. What is greatness, anyway? The promise that these two songs bring hint of Elysium in its finest, most consumate. And then there is the title tune, "Tupelo Honey". It gives an image of the majestic hero, singing the climax, at this time, The Premiere Showing of his Award-Winning Rock Opera. It's a feeling a lot like when Lennon sings "God". And everyone in the audience is moved by the brilliance. What is brilliance, anyway?

And what about that song on the new Band's Album--"4% Pantomime"? (Does anybody know what that title means?) It's the best song on the album. The Light from that one shone brighter than 1,000 stars (at close range). It was a perfect mating of Van Morrison with the Band. The offspring was unique. There's a rumored album being recorded featuring the two. The sound is incredible.

When you go to put on Side One of TUPELO HONEY, and you put on Side Two by mistake, you don't mind. It might even make you listen to Side Two, the one you weren't planning to listen to. And vice versa. The songs are that good.

And then there are the bad ones, they are pretty obvious. "When the Evening Sun Goes Down" is mediocre in a way that Lennon's "Crippled Inside" was. "You're My Woman" is a nice try, but my attention tends to drift from it. A good song wouldn't permit this. It's a form of escape-- Instant High. But when "Moonshine Whiskey" comes on You Are There. The way he says "hot pants" and "Funky Broadway" are so proudly cool. And then the chorus comes back, and your body goes through involuntary movements again.

I was going to get Morrison's last album, "Street Choir", in preparation for this, but the impulses weren't strong enough. So I don't have it yet. But I'm going to enjoy listening to it. His songs have nice chord changes. Not too many, though, like the Bee Gees.

That's why the Band is great. Their songs are important. The last two songs on Side One of "Cahoots", "Where Do We Go From Here" and "4% Pantomime" are now a part of my life.

Barbra Changes Image

By DAVID GREEN

Review: Barbra Joan Streisand
Columbia KC 30792

With the commercial success of her album Stoney End in which Barbra Streisand re-arranged the songs of Laura Nyro, Joni Mitchell and others,

Miss Streisand has seen fit to grab Carole King's work and eschew fast paced renditions of "Beautiful", "Where You Lead", and "You've Got A Friend". Tapestry lovers will cringe at the contrast, for where Carole King cried every word of her songs, Streisand plays games with them. The orchestration is overdone on these selections, robbing the songs of their beautiful simplicity. Miss Streisand's great vocal range is not called for as these ballads pack the emotion within the lyrics. Carole King's folk music does not fit into the Streisand repetoire.

On the other hand, Miss Streisand's offerings of "The Summer Knows", the theme from the film "The Summer of '42", music by her old friend Michel LeGrand, and a Bacharach/David medley of "One Bell Less to Answer" with "A House Is Not a Home" are smooth, flowing, gratifying treats reiterating the fact that Barbra Streisand should stay in the popular music field where she reigns supreme.

LeGrand's rich score for "The Summer of '42" will probably win him his second Academy Award (the first coming for "The Windmills of Your Mind" the main theme of "The Thomas Crown Affair"). The team of Marilyn and Alan Bergman added the lyrics allowing Miss Streisand to create for us the illusion of viewing the motion picture. Her grace and feeling for popular music is still unapproachable by any other female vocalist. "The Summer Knows" becomes a lullabye in sound and a poem in speech.

Side One of Barbra Joan Streisand ends with two works of Burt Bacharach and Hal David in a medley arranged by Ken Welch and orchestrated by Peter Matz both of whom have been large factors in Barbra Streisand's success over the last decade. After singing through "One Bell Less to Answer", Miss Streisand re-recorded over herself, harmonizing and enhancing on the strength of an already brilliant performance. Matz's smooth transition into "A House Is Not A Home" teases the listener with the depression of the lyrics and at the same time satisfies him with the music. Streisand completes the 6 minute 32 second selection with verses from "One Bell to Answer" leaving old Streisand fans silent and newcomers deeply impressed by her ability to take advantage of an atmosphere inherent in a piece and stretch it to its emotional capacity.

The album seems to boil down to Barbra Streisand's public personality. She knows she can sell whatever her name appears on. Therefore she sings whatever she feels she wants to sing. Laura Nyro's work gave impetus to Stoney End, a fine album although not quite the Streisand people pay to see in Las Vegas. In the case of Barbra Joan Streisand Carole King's fantastic Tapestry was her target. For both the followers of Carole King and Barbra Streisand it is an unfortunate circumstance. Streisand's style is too elegant for the down home goodness of Carole King. When Miss Streisand stays within her strength, the popular music of LeGrand, Gershwin or Bacharach/-David, she becomes the inimitable Barbra Streisand once again.

Randy Newman Live

By MICHAEL McCORMICK

Randy Newman songs have been recorded by such artists as Blood, Sweat, and Tears, Three Dog Night, Judy Collins, Eric Burdon, Nilson, and Chris Smither. Still, Randy Newman hasn't enjoyed much public acclaim. His first two albums were complete commercial failures.

Randy has a new album out, Randy Newman, Live. As you may have read in B.A.D. or Rolling Stone it is the best reviewed album of the year. This is nothing new for Randy. His first two albums were well reviewed by the critics. However, thanks to Warner Brothers massive promotional efforts, Randy Newman/Live is starting to reap for Randy the kind of sales he deserves.

On this album Randy displays his talent in several areas. His lyrics are genius. His songs, which cover a wide range of topics, are strikingly realistic. One instantly recognizes the situations, scenes, attitudes and thoughts which he portrays. The humor he perceives in people is the same as the humor we see in ourselves, our relatives, and our friends. The high degree of realism of Randy's songs enables the listener to identify with the lyrics often.

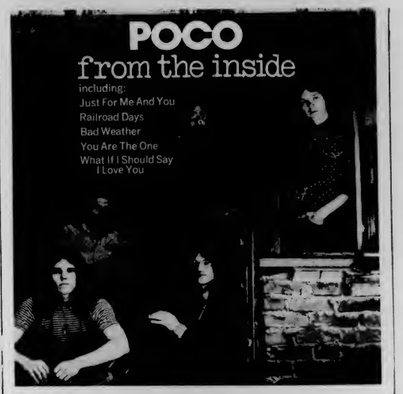
Randy doesn't have a particularly strong or pleasing voice. However, Randy sings with such passion that one finds it difficult not to feel what he feels, or not to believe what he states. Randy's passionate vocals rank among the most convincing and sincere that I have ever heard on record. This convincing vocal style also adds another degree of realism to Randy's music.

The extensive instrumentation of Randy's first two albums has been abandoned on this album. It is just Randy Newman accompanying himself on piano. Not surprisingly, Randy's piano playing proves to be the perfect mobile for his lyrics. Randy uses his instrument to great advantage, his fingers understate, accent, or dance along in a fashion which best suits and emphasizes his lyrics. Because of his tasteful piano playing, Randy's lyrics emerge more potent than ever before.

Randy Newman/Live is a fantastic album. Any person who wants to hear some of the finest, most realistic, contemporary lyrics of this year (or any year) should not be without it.

Songs Of The Humpback Whale

By JIM LAVRAKAS



For centuries whales have been the subject of countless poems and songs. Until now the songs have always been made and performed by men, never by the whales. Sailors of old could hear the mysterious reverberations made by the whales as it echoed through their ship. Now landlubbers can hear and appreciate the "singing" of the whales.

"Songs of the Humpback Whale" are hydrophone recordings of the sounds made by that particular species of whale. "If the idea of whale "singing" seems odd", says the blurb on the album cover, "the cause may lie in the several meanings of the word "song"...The sounds produced by the Humpback can properly be called songs because they occur in complete sequences that are repeated...The pauses between Humpback songs are no longer than the pauses between the notes within the song; in other words, they are recycled without any obvious break..."

The sounds, or notes, made by the whales are a kind of subsiding scream, at other times they are very low-pitched rumblings--"a series of rapidly repeated low pulses."

Side one contains four bands--Solo Whale, Slowed-down Solo, Tower Whales, and Distant Whale. These bands are interesting and give a good look at the variety of sounds the whales can produce. However, the second side which is taken up by one band--Three Whale Trip--is by far the best listening. The idea of three whales trading notes, harmonizing, in a sense, is a haunting thought.

Poco's Loss Is Our Gain

By KENNETH SULIN

With Poco's fourth album comes a turn of events, namely the loss of their leader, producer and songwriter, Jim Messina. Messina, along with another ex-Buffalo Springfielder formed Poco ages ages ago, sharing most of the guitar playing and singing, not to mention the composing. Since Messina had such a great influence on the group you would expect a change in quality and sound--not true. "From the Inside" contains the trend of fun-loving, jump-around music for which they are so noted. Happy tunes seem to be all they know with nearly each song being sung in their "little kid" high pitched voices.

Probably the only noticeable difference from previous albums is the addition of Jim Messian's replacement, Paul Cotton. In Cotton Poco has found a person who is capable of altering the group's sound or just as easily maintaining it. Also as a guitarist he is responsible for writing three of the songs, while singing them in a deeper than usual voice, thus varying the overall style from time to time.

Side one begins with a song called "Hoe Down" which could be labeled as nothing but "music to square dance by," complete with ohh-ohhing, clapping and taetfully timed hoot'n'hollerin'. A Paul Cotton composition entitled "Bad Weather" follows, being one of the album's strongest cuts accented by drifting and carefree rhythms. Poco has a peculiar style in some songs--their singing, in usually three-part harmony, is backed only by drums, bass and a pedal steel guitar while each break is filled in slowly with riffs on an electric guitar. Other songs have only two acoustics playing complimentary leads while still others offer just the electric. No matter which combination they choose their originality is still as hand and their countryish sound is never lost.

Side two is the pedal steel side although somewhat weaker than the first. Rusty Young plays his own kind of steel guitar with more pointed notes and less slurring or blending than most. Such songs as "From the Inside" are so sharp you can almost feel them poking you in the sides.

The members of Poco are still playing their good-ol' shit-kickin' music and really enjoying it. If you do happen to pickup the album you too will probably find yourself bumming a few lines of "Hoe Down" every now and then.

A Rockin' Good Time

By MICHAEL McCORMICK

For six years, Chris Smither, a native of New Orleans, has been playing on the Boston-Cambridge-Philadelphia coffeehouse circuit. Today, Chris's act bears the polish that one would expect of such a veteran.

A rapport develops between Chris and the audience almost as soon as he takes the stage. Throughout the set the audience is with Chris. On the rocking numbers the audience claps hands, stamps feet, and has a good time. When the lyrics are humorous (such as in "Old Kentucky Home") the audience laughs. When Chris sings the blues, most of the members of the audience readily relate Chris's troubles to theirs.

On stage, Chris becomes totally involved with his music. This results in a highly emotional performance comprised of very personal music. Each lyric is voiced with incredible feeling. During sad numbers Smither's grimacing face helps to convey the melancholy lyrics of his songs.

Chris Smither is an excellent guitarist. Many bluesmen, ranging from Robert Johnson, Skip James and John Hurt to Eric Von Schmidt, have influenced his style. His foot stomping (which greatly enhances his music in small clubs) is a technique often employed by such blues greats as Lightning Hopkins and John Lee Hooker. Chris often performs traditional blues numbers such as "Dust My Broom" and "Statesboro Blues" (His version of this song is much more potent than the Blind Willie McTell original).

In the spring of '71 Chris's first and thus far only album I'm a Stranger Too was released on Poppy records. This album, which received a very favorable review from Rolling Stone magazine, consists mainly of soft, folk-based, material.

Chris wrote eight of the eleven songs on this album. His brilliant interpretation of Neil Young's "I am a Child" is done more slowly and painfully than the original. Of the song Smither says, "I perform three types of songs--the ones I just do because they're good songs, the ones that I wrote, and the ones that I wish I wrote. This is one I wish I wrote." Chris, who feels that the Buffalo Springfield was one of the best rock bands ever, also has been known to perform Richie Furay's "Kind Woman." The other two songs not written by Smither, "Old Kentucky Home" and "Have You Seen My Baby", were written by Randy Newman. Newman seems to have had a great influence on Chris's lyric writing. Both artists write in a seemingly simple fashion, using stark imagery, commonplace lines, and short phrases which vividly portray the pains, problems, and ecstacies of life.

Chris's songwriting ability, though not up to the quality of Newman's, is superior to the average artist performing in the folk-blues-rock idiom. Chris believes that more satisfaction is attained by an artist who performs his material than by one who performs the compositions of others. This is one of the reasons why Chris hopes to increase his songwriting output. However, no matter how plentiful his own compositions become, Chris always wants to keep some traditional numbers in his performance.

Most of the cuts on I'm a Stranger Too can be described as soft and easy-going. Thus the album has a predominantly relaxing effect upon the listener. There are several numbers, all of which are pushed along by competent sidemen, which rock moderately. All in all, this thoroughly enjoyable album is one of the most pleasing albums of its type to appear in a long time. I dare say, anyone who buys it won't be disappointed.

Cowboy: "5'll Getcha Ten"

By KENNETH SULLIN

Country music has assuredly become the "in" thing these days with its twangy, springy rythms and melodies. Many new groups have jumped on the old band wagon, either dropping their previous styles completely or just starting anew with the sounds of the West. Some may tend to disagree but the fad, or whatever it is, will probably lose its grasp eventually, slackening off slowly, only to be replaced by the trend which is next in line. Today, to be a successful C & W group a steel guitar, a fiddle plus three or four vocalists capable of screeching harmonies is, without a doubt, a necessity; add possibly a banjo or two and there you have a prefabricated, down South, ten gallon band.

Last year six guys originally from Florida caught hold of the idea and formed Cowboy--what could be a better name for a country group? All the ingredients were at hand, a saloon type piano, fine finger-picking guitarists and, of course, each could sing well in producing the harmonies. Their music was refreshing and enlivening; Atlantic Records noticed and immediately had them in the studio recording "Reach For the Sky," their music was refreshing and enlivening;

Naturally Atlantic thought their new find was worth hearing so Cowboy was sent on tour with Alex Taylor playing in small clubs and towns along the East Coast. "Reach For the Sky" was an excellent album and it was beginning to look as though they were destined to a bright future.

Again this year the Cowboy machine got rolling and a national tour with the Allman Brothers resulted; consequently a second album "5'11 Getcha Ten" was released which unfortunately became somewhat of a disappointment.

Recorded this time on the Capricorn label, "5'11 Getcha Ten" leaves much to be desired with little, if any, change from the first album. It is a fine record being more polished and displaying fewer errors than "Reach For the Sky" but the music itself is terribly repetitive of the latter pushing along in almost a monotone. Each song may be different lyrically and, yes, sometimes even musically, but there seems to be a lack of new material offered here. Chord progressions, introductions, and arrangements all resemble what was found on the earlier album.

Although this stream of likeness exists between the two, "5'11 Getcha Ten" alone is not a bad record. It involves all types of Western songs from quick, campfire dancing music to soft, calm lullabies. Cowboy combines drums, piano, bass and three guitars--usually one electric and two acoustic--hoping to approach a stable, solid sound.

The first side, however, is unbelievably drawn out. It seems as though Cowboy stretches each number just to complete this half of the record. Being unusually flat and sparkless, side one goes absolutely nowhere. (Which is my overall opinion of the entire album.) Side two hastens the pace a little--just a little--but, sure enough, they begin easing off and are, perhaps, themselves losing interest in their work. One track entitled "All My Friends" sounds like a re-recording on the Stones' "Wild Horses" only the words have been changed to make it an honest-to-goodness, original Cowboy tune.

If you like sweet-sounding stagnant music, you'll love Cowboy. But if your interests lie in something with a bit more flavor, you'd be wise to stay away.

"Stop The World" Reviewed

By DON GLICKSTEIN

I'd like to say that it was unquestionably great, but because of the technical difficulties of playing in the acoustically sadistic Campus Center Auditorium, Stop The World, I Want To Get Off, which premiered last night, can only be called the most exciting and innovative production that the UMass Music Theater has produced in this decade.

There are two ways to stage an Anthony Newley musical: either cast an actor who knows he isn't Newley and have that actor use a new style, or cast an actor who tries to be Newley.

Frank Anderson, in the co-lead as Littlechap, has chosen to be Newley, and unlike previous impersonators Anderson succeeds, not by outsinging Newley, but by outcharming him.

And as for the butt of Littlechap's male chauvinism, Stephanie Schloss, as Evie, not only walks and talks, but she smiles, feels, sings, acts, lives, imbibes, emotes, and steals the hearts of the audience with her typically English, German, Russian, and American portrayals of Littlechap's lovers.

Stop the World! is all about circles--the circle of love, of life, and of death. It is vintage, existential Newley. Normally, such a "heavy" musical would be hard for an audience to get into, but the Music Theatre's production and set abet the process and supplement the story itself, by making the audience an integral part of the human circus. As advertised, Stop the World is also a cabaret, replete with booze and fancy dames and pimps selling their wares.

Stop the World! can be a very abrupt show at times, and because of poor liasons in the script and an overabundance of pantomime, it occasionally drags. But the troupe-clowns in their roles as omniscient observers, provide an underlying cohesion to the play. Their choreography is unique in that it involves their hands and their noises more than their feet. Littlechap's introduction to his Sludgepool factory is a gem, primarily because of the clowns and their genius at grunting, hissing, and whistling.

Playing in the round is a difficult task, let alone playing in the round in the Campus Center. The Stop the World! cast had a choice of either constantly walking around in circles to address the onlookers, or not risk losing the visual imagery of the set by repeating related scenes in the same position. They wisely chose the latter, but in doing so, neglected to account for weak voices and the indistinguishable echoes of the cavern-stage. Unless the production crew of Stop the World! attaches cordless lapel mikes to the actors or suspends a couple of microphones from the ceiling, the weekend audiences will leave the cabaret frustrated over not being able to hear parts of a brilliant play, exciting actors, and a most gratifying evening.

Ionesco Too Much To Handle

By DAVID RITCHKOFF

It is not often one sees Eugene Ionesco's works in college production; for, in general, Ionesco is a great challenge to both the performers and the audience in that a set reaction and interpretation is difficult. And when Ionesco is undertaken, the actors must beware, for if meaning is overshadowed by acting, the play is lost. Unfortunately UMass Theatre's production of Exit the King does just that. What the audience receives is no better than "passing" high school drama in which excessive dramatics cloud the possibility for an evening of meaningful theatre. Exit the King is a play about death: But it is a death of a special type; a death of selfish mankind in the form of Berenger who claws, fawns, and clutches for his existence in a universe shouting to destroy him. Why one leaves the play without any such feeling is obvious--the meaning has been smashed by lack of consideration.

Cast members of "Exit The King" rehearse a scene from the production which continues through this weekend and is reviewed on this page.

With the opening of the play, the audience is led to believe they are to be treated to a fine performance. The setting is perfect Ionesco. All is down to the essentials--a throne (flanked by a sculpted wall of tortured; blank-eyed faces) and topped by a magnificent stained-glass window; and two simple thrones for the queens on each side of the stage. Ionesco ends with the scenery and UMass Theatre begins with the entrance of Queen Marguerite played by Andree Castillo. In the action Marguerite is the "villainess"; the stark, ugly reality which leads Berenger to death. This "villainess" idea certainly came across in Miss Castillo's costume. She looked exactly like the wicked queen in Snow White with her tightly tied under the chin kerchief/crown. One expects the "Mirror, mirror on the wall," soliloquoy at any moment. Miss Castillo's acting is plainly forced--the lines are memorized but the character never appears. What she does to Ionesco's brilliant final scene is an absolute shame. The exquisite "dream" speech comes off like an Eleanor Roosevelt D.A.R. address rather than imagery more lyrical than almost anything Ionesco has written. Perhaps her crown was a bit too tight.

The part of Queen Marie, "second wife to the king, but first in affection", is a rather weak part in itself; but Cathy Syriac Young did an admirable job in enhancing it. However, she loses whatever honesty there is in Marie by failing to transcend the sensuality in the character in order to build on the personality. Marie is not a Raceuel Welch in queen's robes; but the beauty and breath in the life Berenger hates to leave. In time Marie loses to Marguerit and at this point Cathy Young approaches her character with tact. As she leaves the stage, Marie is as lost as Berenger. She, too, sees reality in its fatal clarity.

Rufus Cadigan, as Merlinesque as Miss Castillo was "wicked queenish", is stereotyped as the wizard, doctor, astronomer in Berenger's court. His being on stage is lost and wishy-washy. In his portrayal of the King, Peter Ryan almost succeeded. After immediately reaching a certain heighth of acting in the constantly changing role of Berenger I, he leveled off too soon. After all, all that crying and screaming loses its poignancy and bores within a few minutes. Eventually, Berenger becomes a parody, a clown. The seriousness of hi struggle for life is ignored.

Two accolades go to Bonnie Bishoff and Roger Tiberri in their respective rolles as Juliette the servant/nurse and the King's guard. Miss Bishoff was marvelous as Juliette, the "everyday" woman who hates the winter's cold and the summer's heat, who sweeps the dirt and picks up the cigarette butts. This small part is magnified by Miss Bishoff who intelligently can touch the audience with her actions and expressions. Roger Tiberri as the guard, too, comes across simply great. The guard, forced into stupidity by those above him, but whose love for Berenger pushes him to accept his role, was ably realized. In these two characters Ionesco is augmented and understood.

What we have in Exit the King is more than absurdist theatre. In fact, it is probably Ionesco's most human, realistic play. Exit the King deals with larger things that the playwright's usual themes of lack of communication, etc. Here, he is playing with the entire universe, larger than Ionesco himself; larger than the audience before the play; and, obviously, larger than the performance.

A Divergent View

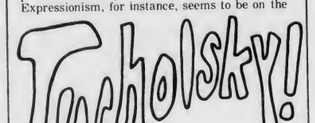
From the moment the muted royal music is sounded and the lights are lowered, the audience of Exit the King realizes that "only what is unbearable is profoundly tragic" to quote the play's author, Eugene Ionesco. As we witness the rapid disintegration of Berenger the First, Ionesco's all too human Everyman, we cannot help but be moved by a fate which all flesh is heir to. From Shakespeare to O'Neill the problem of dying has been a frequent subject in the theatre, but rarely has the process been set down with such brutal clarity. Our healthiest reaction may well be to call the play "an affirmation of life", as Rosette Lamont has recently done, since the sordid business of dying makes us all aware of living.

This existential cliche in no way precludes a good deal of gallows humor. In Miss Abramson's production, the part of the guard, admirably played by Roger Tiberri, is pure farce and the servant-nurse Juliette (Miss Bishoff seemed to be the most experienced actress in the cast) who represents the common folk, is another comical character. Audiences laugh at the strangest places and that is at it should be. Ionesco himself has said: "Laughter alone does not respect any taboo, laughter alone inhibits the creation of new anti-taboo taboos; the comic alone is capable of giving us the strength to bear the tragedy of existence."

It is with the central role of the King that I had some reservations last Saturday night. Admittedly the line of demarcation between the ludicrous and the grotesque is a thin one. I felt that Peter Ryan's constant straddling of this line took away from the dramatic tension of the play. When words are substitutes for action - and all of Ionesco is wordy - then the language must create those states of illusion that constitute great theatre. A line like: "Why was I born if not to live forever?" should not be hurled and howled away and Berenger's sinking into dotage must be controlled.

Although Donald Watson's translation is accurate enough, it eliminates some of the lyricism which in the original French version contributes to the expression of anguish. I should also have preferred to see more space (and more pauses) between the King, his two queens and the other three actors, to emphasize the metaphysical "Angst" that invades the stage for an hour and a half. Only in the last five minutes when Queen Marguerite helps Berneger to die did the play assume those tragic proportions inherent from the very beginning. Perhaps this wholly successful ending is due to the change of pace brought about by the grotesque "pas de deux" which is utterly serious and convincing. As Ruby Cohn succinctly says about Queen Marguerite: "There is scarcely any comic undercutting of her final fantastic requiem, during which she leads the King from his wheelchair back to his throne". During those final moments Exit the King attains its true grandeur. The "useless agitation" which summarizes Berenger's resistance to death, refers to our lives as well as the King's. Only rarely does Mr. Ryan's Berenger attain the tragic dignity expressed by Georges Rouall's old King whose stern profile heads the posters all over the campus, but such was obviously not the director's intention.

The two queens, played by Andree Castillo and Cathy Young, looked beautiful and were well contrasted in their difficult supporting parts. In a play where so much depends on delivery, it is evident that the stock comic characters have the easiest roles. Besides Juliette and the guard, the doctor, well protrayed by Rufus Cadigan, elicited quite a few laughs by his strong characterization of a cynical professional.



And yet I want to insist that this production which Doris Abramson has staged and which will represent the University at the American College Theatre Festival is far more than the proverbial "heroic effort". The play, running without intermission, kept a capacity audience spellbound and left us all wondering what life and death are really about. And that is indeed a noble achievement.

New Musical Of High Quality

FRANK JOHNSON

Through the recent revivification of the works of Thomas Mann and Hermann Hesse, interest in the literature of Weimar Germany has increased. This period in German history has been so named for the government in power from 1919 to 1933, the first time Germany as a whole took on a "democratic experiment". A discovery of talent other than Mann and Hesse in this potentially rich period could only follow as a result. German Expressionism, for instance, seems to be on the upswing: the works of the painter Oskar Kokoschka have experienced new exposure both home and abroad. The Gropius architectural group is being explored once again. And, in the midst of the Weimar "renaissance", one figure particularly emerges to epitomise the strength of literary sarcasm and intellectual criticism: Kurt Tucholsky.

There are good reasons to appreciate literature of the Weimar period. One of these lie in its recent history, which deeply affects current cultural movements as they draw from basically the same roots as those of Weimar Germany. Another reason can be found in the political undertones of the period. Germany was experiencing an "identity crisis" between radical political options-Bolshevism on the one hand, coming into favor due to the concurrent events in Russia at the time, and National Socialism, appealing chiefly to those Germans who felt that Germany had been "sold out" in World War I, on the other. Kurt Tucholsky's works make fun of almost everybody, sometimes to the point of heavy-handed polemics against Naziism, but those works hitting home with the most impact are his delightful songs. An assemblage of these songs, translated from the original German by Dr. Harold L. Poor, an associated professor of history at Rutgers University, and incorporated into the play by director Louis Golden, recently premiered at Brandeis University in Waltham, entitled simply: "Tucholsky!". A review of the play follows.

Though the bulk of "Tucholsky!" consists of light-hearted songs, there are also small soliloquies and skits keeping the trend(s) of thought moving. This sort of production recalls the efforts of various cabaret performances, very popular in Europe and now catching on in the States. In the words of Dr. Poor, "'Tucholsky!'...takes up where cabaret left off." Dr. Poor also tells us: "This production marks Tucholsky's debut in the American Theater." As a premiere performance, "Tucholsky!" is eminently successful. It profits both from its originality and the novelty of its production. Its success tells us that nudism and drugs are not the only basis for a play, as some contemporary playwrights would have us believe, and "Tucholsky!" may also herald further work in this interesting period.

Musically, the songs of "Tucholsky!" are quite simple, almost to the point of being repetitious. Dr. Poor explains that Kurt Tucholsky wrote all of the songs, but actually composed the music to only one of two of them. He was obliged to incur the services of occasionally medicore songwriters, so as to put the words into music. The sheen of "Tucholsky!" therefore does not lie entirely in the quality of the music, but rather in the lyrics and in the symbolism contained therein, because this what gives us cultural clues into social and political thought of the Weimar period. The subject of these songs ranges from the horror of the preceding trench warfare to the frustration of present political and economic unrest in Weimar. With wit and sensitivity, Tucholsky's lyrics offer us a remarkably perceptive glimpse of the times, and the songs, though simple, deliver this message even further.

Unlike those performers condemned to the struggling excesses of many American playwrights as of late, the cast of "Tucholsky!" has put on a very fine show. The singing is excellent and the acting is commendable. My only criticism came when the production abruptly ended. "You're supposed to feel cheated," Dr. Poor reflects. "We designed the play to end just when everybody was crying for more."

Hopefully, "Tucholsky!" will succeed as a result of audiences sympathetic to German history and humor. There is no slapstick, no orgy scenes, no hallucinations, and no soul-searching in this play. Its high quality lies rather in its intellectual content and its manner of production, which, if properly appreciated, should go a long way towards understanding the late Kurt Tucholsky. Part of the German tragedy of Weimar lay in the fact that much of its culture was perverted and distorted by the Nazis, but another tragedy can be found in the suicide of Kurt Tucholsky, resulting out of despair when he was in exile after Hitler took power in 1933. There could be few more fitting memorials to him than this new play.

Guitarist John Williams This Thursday

Guitarist John Williams who will present two recitals this Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in Bowker Auditorium. He will perform works of Bach, Albeniz, and Scarlatti.

The second event of the 1971/72 UMass Amherst Fine Arts Council Celebrity Series will be two recitals by the young Australian guitarist, John Williams.

Mr. Williams, a protege of Andres Segovia, will perform in Bowker Auditorium Tuesday, Nov. 2, and Wednesday, Nov. 3. Both events are scheduled to begin at 8 p.m. and latecomers will be admitted to the auditorium only at appropriate intervals.

John Williams emerged on the international concert scene in 1958 after a highly successful debut at London's Wigmore Hall. He was accepted as a pupil of classical guitarist Andres Segovia.

The Segovia influence is felt by the approach Mr. Williams employs on the guitar and by the technical virtuosity which he has developed under Segovia.

For his UMass performances, John Williams will offer two different programs which will include work of J.S. Bach, Albeniz, Scarlatti, Stephen Dodgson, and Turina. Early reservations are suggested. Reserved single tickets are available by contacting the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour prior to each concert. A telephone reaching both ticket offices is 545-0202.

Also Mr. Williams will conduct a lecture/demonstration on Tues. Nov. 2 at 11:15 a.m. in Herter Hall, Rm. 227. Admission is free. Limited seating capacity.

Tickets prices are at $1 UMass Undergrads; $2 other full-time students; $3 UMass Faculty/staff; $3.50 General public.

By arrangement with Harold Shaw

111. Long Biography

John Williams was born in Melbourne, Australia in 1941. He began playing the guitar when he was seven, receiving his first lessons from his father. The family moved to London in 1952 when he met Segovia who was so impressed by his talent that he gave him lessons and strongly recommended that he be given a full musical education. Segovia also advised him to apply for a scholarship at the Accademia Musicale Chigiana di Siena in Italy. John Williams held this scholarship for five years and received the unprecedented honour of giving the first complete solo recital there by a student of any instrument. In England he studied at the Royal College of Music where he also studied piano and musical theory.

John Williams made his London debut at the Wigmore Hall in 1958. After this tremendously successful recital Segovia wrote: "A prince of the guitar has arrived in the musical world. John Williams...God has laid a finger on his brow, and it will not be long before his name becomes a byword in England and abroad..." It was during this year that Harold Shaw, who had admired his artistry for some time, first met John Williams. In the following years Mr. Williams made highly successful debuts on the continent and in 1962 he toured the Soviet Union. In 1963 he made his debut in Japan and the U.S.A. since when he has been a regular visitor to the United States where he records exclusively for CBS Records.

In England John Williams makes regular radio broadcasts for the BBC and is also well-known to television viewers, both for his solo performances and the guitar duets he has played with Julian Bream. A series of thirteen recitals he made for Granada Television has been repeated three times. He also plays frequently in universities and colleges both in Great Britain and the United States.

John Williams' talent has stimulated several composers to write works for him. His record "More Virtuoso Music for Guitar" includes a suite of pieces "Aires de la Mancha" written for him by the Spanish composer Torroba. Stephen Dodgson wrote his "Partita" for him and he first performed it at the 1963 Cheltenham Festival. The world premiere of Andre Previn's Guitar Concerto will take place in July 1971 with John Williams and Andre Previn conducting the London Symphony Orchestra.

When he is not giving concerts, John Williams teaches. He has taken master guitar classes in Spain and in 1961 he sat on the jury of the International Competition for Guitar at Orense in Spain.

Boston Symphony Collage Premieres At Bowker

Bowker Auditorium on the University of Massachusetts-Amherst campus will be the site of the first performance of a new ensemble of The Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Collage, an organization dedicated to music of the 20th century, will make its bow Friday, Nov. 5, at 8 p.m., to open the University Fine Arts Council's 1971-72 Chamber Music Series.

Participating in this first performance will be Frank Epstein, percussion; Ronald Feldman, cello; Paul Fried, flute; Peter Hadcock, clarinet; Lawrence Wolfe, contrabass; Ronald Knudson, violin; and Chris Kies, piano. Also, Joan Heller, soprano; Ina Hahn, dancer; and Tibor Pusztai, conductor.

The program, designed for contemporary music enthusiasts, will include the world premiere of "Nocturnes" by Mr. Pusztai, Boston composer and conductor. Other scheduled works include Mario Davidovsky's "Synchronisms No. 1 for Flute and Tape;" Jacob Druckman's "Valentine for Solo Bass;" George Crumb's "Madrigal No. 1 for Soprano, Bass and Vibraphone;" Ernst Krenek's Trio for Violin, Clarinet and Piano; and Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

In addition to the formal concert Nov. 5, Collage will also appear at UMass Monday, Nov. 1 at 8 p.m., in a free open rehearsal which will provide an opportunity to observe a performance in the making, at Bowker Auditorium.

Reserved tickets for the concert are available from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Savings of up to one-third are offered on season subscriptions to the Chamber Music Series. Ensembles following the Boston Symphony Orchestra Collage will be The Berlin Philharmonic Octet, February 3; The Tokyo String Quartet, February 16; The Juilliard String Quartet, March 17; and The Amadeus String Quartet, April 19.

Exit The King
UT's first production of the season and their entry in the American College Theater Festival. It is reviewed in this issue. Tonight and Tomorrow at 8:30 in:/Bartlett Theater. ($).

Right You Are If You Think You Are
Luigi Pirandello's most perceptive statement about his philosophy of life is this comedy about an unusual family and their practices. They become rather notorious in their town and this leads to some troubling complications. This production by members of the Five College Community continues evenings through Sunday at 8:15 at the Lab Theater, Mt. Holyoke College. ($)

Music

Stop The World--I Want To Get Off
The Anthony Newley--Leslie Briscusse musical hit of 1961 becomes the first production of the UMass Music Theater 1971 season. The production will be presented in the round, in a cabaret style, twice nightly, tonight and tomorrow at 7:45 and 10:45 in the Campus Center Auditorium. Doors open forty-five minutes before the show at which time alcoholic beverages will be served. A review of the production can be found in this issue.

The Amherst Folklore Center
This weekend's concerts begin Saturday night with an evening of blues and folks featuring Andy Cohen, blues and folk guitarist, and Alan Greenleaf, folksinger. Sunday night will again feature folk, this time with folksinger Sunday night will again feature folk, this time with folksingers Bob White and Cliff Hagberg. The music begins some time after eight, at the Folklore Center, Spring St., Amherst. ($).

The rock oratorio and the latest collaboration of Andrew Lloyd Webber and Tim Rice composer and lyricist of J.C. Superstar Inc. Their latest endeavor recasts the bible story in a modern idiom using music which reflects both folk and rock. This performance will employ soloists and a chorus of some one hundred voices; this will take place tonight at 7:30 at Hills Chapel, Smith College.

John Williams
The acclaimed young classical guitarist will give two concerts this Tuesday and Wednesday evenings in Bowker Auditorium, for more see page 11A.

The Paul Ulanowsky Memorial Concert
An evening of Bach with a chamber orchestra and chorus performing the Cantata for the sixteenth Sunday after Trinity, the Concerto in C Major for two harpsichords and strings, and the Magnificat in D. The musicians are under the direction of Frank Brieff, Musical Director of WFCR and conductor of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra. ($)

Films

The Anderson Tapes (Academy of Music, Northampton)
A rather coarse comic melodrama about an ex-con who master-minds a spectacular robbery of a New York Apartment house. It is played unusually loosely by a cast led by Sean Connery, Dyan Cannon and Martin Balsam. The direction by Sidney Lumet really can't hold it together and the results are disjointed, occasionally funny but ultimately unsatisfying.

The Apu Trilogy Parts One and Two, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings 8 PM, Thompson 104).
Indian director Satyajit Ray's three films about a Brahmin boy from a traditional village background growing up in modern India. The first part, Panther Panchali deals with the young man, Apu's, childhood in the village and is a graceful, lyrical film with an excellent musical score by Ravi Shankar. The second part Aparajito follows Apu and his family from their village to the sacred city of Benares and tells of his encounter with the school system there, and later his experience at the University of Calcutta.

The Big Sleep (Sunday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 8 and 10)
A wild and wonderful from the late Forties. It features Humphrey Bogart as detective Sam Spade who, in this caper investigates the spoiled antics of two society debutantes. Lauren Bacall plays the society girl Bogart falls for as the two have a splendid time cavorting through the complex and meandering plot (co-scripted by none other than William Faulkner). Based on a novel by Raymond Chandler and they both are directed by Henry Hathaway publicly admitted they couldn't make heads or tails of what was going on yet had a damned good time making it. Featured is Dorothy Malone who whose tryst with Bogart makes for one of the quickest ever seen in Hollywood.

Billy Jack (Calvin Theater, Northampton)
The somewhat honest yet trite tale of good and evil. The good is represented by Billy Jack, a young Viet Vet (part Indian); the bad is the redneck the town; and the issue over which they clash is a progressive school. There's no telling the results. The film is the first serious effort by young direcor T.C. Frank and is visually competent enough, yet is plotted with such an overwhelming number of cliches that it makes a daytime soap opera seem fresh. With Tom Laughlin and Jean Roberts.

Camille 2000 (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
A lush, science-fiction sex spectacular (amounting to quite a combination) by master porno-director Radley Metzger. It is an updated and boulderized version of the great Robert Taylor--Greta Garbo film Camille, this time with the jet set in Rome. Marguerit is a scag freak and Armand is a modern playboy as together they manage to plod through some of the most atrocious dialogue ever written with straight faces, surely an acting feat worth taking note of. Opulently mounted and well-produced.

Captain's Courageous (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)
The child brat of countless Thirties films, Freddie Barthlemew gives perhaps his best-known portrayal in this competent Hollywood film based on the Rudyard Kipling novel. Bartholemew plays a spoiled rich kid who is tamed by a forced stay on a schooner with its skipper admirably portrayed by Spencer Tracy. Some excellent photography, good overall production values, and fine performances make this one of the best remembered films of the late Thirties. Tracy won the Best Actor Oscar.

Casablanca (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 8 and 10)
A very professional and highly enjoyable entertainment which mixes sophisticated witticism and tense, action melodrama with equal amounts of finnese. It is truly one of the best remembered romantic films of all times with Humphrey Bogart meeting his pre-World War II love Ingrid Bergman in espionage--ridden Casablanca. She and her husband, an outspoken critic of Nazi policies, seek to escape to America and the cynical, well-written script follows them through to the end. The cast is impeccable. Humphrey Bogart has never seemed so pathetic and Ingrid Bergman was never as beautiful as in this film. Dooley Wilson plays the memorable "As Time Goes By." Oscars in script and direction as well as being the Best Picture of 1941.

The Conformist (Talkie, Northampton)
A dazzling film; one of the year's best. An exquisite and evocative mosaic of a young man's sexual and political conformity during Mussolini's Italy. It is visually stunning, beautifully acted, and gloriously mounted evoking the feel of the Thirties as no other film in recent memory has been able to achieve. Jean-Louis Trintignant is the young man who compelled to conform that he becomes a political assassin. The film reaks of the baroque as numerous sexual and social themes are intricately interlaced in this completely engrossing and mature work by one of Italy's finest young directors, Bernardo Bertolucci. In Italian, subtitles.

Dr. Doolittle (Tuesday, SU Ballroom, 6, 45 and 9:45)
Or money can't buy anything. The flat film version of the children's stories about the doctor who talks to animals (amongst other amazing feats) makes for one of the worst film musicals in recent memory. The direction is silly, the performances hardly tolerable and the music is hardly worth mentioning.

Doctor Zhivago (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)
David Lean's adaptation of Boris Paternack's modern epic amounts to One Man's Family--Cossack style. This slick production is long, intelligent, and overtly romantic, and reduces the novel to slick magazine pulp that it really quite bad. The direction plods, the performances are slack and sloppy, the screenplay is academic and confusing, and the overall effect is about as mindless and empty as the Maurice Jarre music score. A huge cast is led by Omar Shariff as Zhivago, Julie Christie as the ever-patient Lara, and Geraldine Chaplin, Tom Courteney, and briefly radiant in a supporting role, Rod Steiger.

Kotch (Palace Cinema, West Springfield)
The first directorial effort of Jack Lemmon is a delightfully woolly comedy about an eccentric 72 year old man and his zest for living. The film is delightful with a wonderfully sustained portrayal by Walter Mattheau in the leading role.

Lawman (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton)
A good cast in a generally routine western which amounts to a morality tale about the futility of killing. A strong lawman comes to a crime-ridden town determined to bring justice along with him. Featuring Burt Lancaster, Lee J. Cobb, Robert Ryan, and Sheree North.

Let's Scare Jessica To Death (Amherst, Cinema, Amherst)
An interesting failure of a horror film which attempts to mesh nearly all memorable genres into a coherent whole that falls well below the intended goal. It is interesting because of the obvious determination of those involved and it fails because of budget limitations and the simple fact that they aimed too high. Still there's a chill or two in it, somewhere land is filmed in a glorious old house on Long Island. The cast is assembled mostly of familiar faces from television led by Zohra Lambert and Kevin McCarthy.

Millhouse

Millhouse (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)
The President as a 1 Buffoon (so what else is new) is this biased documentary by Emile de Antonio (Point of Order). It is the film of the year for the Radical Chic. For more, see review in this issue.

Monterrey Pop (Wednesday, SU Ballroom, ())
The predecessor to Woodstock and an excellent yet sparse rock documentary. It chronicles the Monterrey Pop Festival of 1966, a time when it was cool to wear flowers in your hair etc., and presents one of the finest line-up of Sixties rock talent ever assembled. Featured are The Who, Janis Joplin (doing a memorable "Ball And Chain"), the Mama and Papa's, Shankar, Otis Redding, and Jimi Hendrix (doing "Wild Thing"). There are no frills to this generally low-keyed document of some of the great talents in pop music, some who can be seen only in this film.

The Organization (Showcase Cinemas 1, West Springfield)
A comedy-suspense film featuring Sidney Poitier as the Mr. Tibbs he made famous in earlier films.

McGovern Stresses Need For Change

By BOB McWILLIAMS

Democratic Senator George McGovern stressed the need to reorder national priorities to meet pressing domestic needs by reducing overall military expenditures, particularly in Indo-China, when he spoke before the standing room only crowd in the Student Union Ballroom last night. McGovern, who is the first declared presidential candidate for the 1972 elections, was sponsored by the Amherst Voter Registration Coalition.

The Senator announced his intention of introducing an interim foreign aid bill into the Senate today, which would provide relief funds to the Pakistani refugees, extend temporary credit to Israel and ban funds to dictator-regime governments, such as that established in Greece. He included continued support to the United Nations in the bill, also.

Calling for a reduction in what he called "our excessive and swollen military budget," McGovern stated that "if we could end that foolish and cruel war, we would use that $10 billion for job creating enterprises, to improve public transit facilities, provide more aid to education, and finance anti-pollution programs."

"The war in Indo-China is the greatest moral and political disaster in the history of our country", McGovern said.

Speaking on the economy, McGovern said, "I don't think Nixon has real control over prices...this freeze is not working anywhere but on wages."

McGovern called for an end to U.S. support of what he termed "corrupt military dictatorships," naming Greece specifically as a country to which he would not favor U.S. financial aid.

Commenting on Agnew's recent trip to Greece, McGovern said, smiling, "I don't mind him making that sentimental journey...actually, I wish he would stay."

Speaking on a multitude of other issues, McGovern said he thought the Amchitka blast was serious error, he favored aid to Israel, called for an end to the draft and a reduction of our troops in Europe, elimination of prison sentences for marijuana convictions and improvement of U.S. penal institutions.

McGovern said he is counting heavily on youth support in the coming presidential election. He is focusing his campaign on domestic issues.

In the same vein, Lee Sandwen, Student Senate President, said before the lecture that effective student participation on the local level could directly influence local politicians and help form policy on domestic issues. Sandwen offered assistance to anyone interested in active involvement in the local elections in February or the national elections in '72. His was the first public mention made so far of student involvement in the February elections.

In the question and answer period which followed the lecture, members of the Socialist Workers Party asked McGovern if he would come out in support of a demonstration in Washington, Nov. 20 to repeal all state abortion laws.

McGovern answered that he was unaware of the demonstration, but they insisted he was and demanded that he take a stand on the issue.

McGovern countered that he was in favor of liberalizing existing abortion laws but avoided committing himself to the demonstration.

McGovern's appearance at UMass was part of his campaign swing through Massachusetts this week.

What Will Happen In Amherst?

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

For the first time publicly, the upcoming town elections were mentioned on campus last night by Student Senate President Lee Sandwen in a speech preceding Senator McGovern's. Sandwen stated that he would support any persons, student or non-student, who would enter the February town elections, presumably on a liberal-radical progressive ticket.

Even with only six to eight hundred students registered to vote in the town of Amherst, Sandwen's statement could be of great importance to the outcome of the February town elections.

If major student support was thrown behind a particular candidate, support in terms of votes, money, and active participation in a campaign, there would be distinct likelihood of that person or persons being elected to town office. This point is an issue which had not even been brought up until Sandwen's statement of last night.

The impact of such a person's election cannot be stated with any certainty, but it would be safe to assume, given the right issues and outside support, that it could be one of some magnitude. In the area of rents, low income housing and other areas of concern to the off-campus student population; a student, or a person representing student views could effect change.

There is precedence for this view. For example, last week in Texas a student was elected to the city council in a small university town, and, of course, there is the example of Berkeley. There, three of the seven member of the city council were elected from a radical ticket. Though their influence on town affairs has not been that great at this writing, they have succeeded in stopping reactionary measures that might have oridinarily been passed, and have been able to change town policy, or perhaps more aptly, town attitude, toward the student population. The police have an unoffical hands-off policy unless absolutely necessary, and the air of conflict around campus no longer seems so obvious.

Whether all this will happen here is of course another question. Amherst does not have the problems or history Berkeley has, and neither does there seem to be quite so much interest here in town politics as there is in Berkeley.

However, the possibility of change here is becoming a district possibility. What does or doesn't happen depends to a large degree on what we as sutdents do. Even with only 600 students voting their impact in a town this size would be enough to swing an election.

There is another voting drive on November 14 at the Campus Center. It will be as interesting to see the student turnout, as it will be to note who is running for what in February, and the campus reaction to their candidacy.

Size Of Crowd Meaningless?

By RICHARD C. HANSON

Senator McGovern showed last night that he can draw a large, enthusiastic crowd on a college campus, which doesn't mean much to a presidential candidate stuck in the middle of an ever-increasing bloc of liberal, democratic candidates.

The size and responsiveness of the UMass gathering seems to indicate that a candidate espousing the peace and prosperity platform, which McGovern has, could get elected president; if he can get the Democratic Party nomination.

The Senator from South Dakota said in a press conference that he was "baffled" by former Senator Eugene McCarthy's recent announcement that he would seek convention votes in non-primary. He also acknowledged to reporters that the open-ended field of democratic candidates would hurt his own campaign, and chances for the nomination next summer.

McGovern, who had spent Sunday afternoon foraging for support in Springfield and Amherst, tried in his speech to break his "one issue" image by concentrating on his sponsorship in the Senate today of an interim foreign aid bill, which would provide relief funds for East Pakistan refugees, allow jet fighter sales to Israel and, amongst other anti-war provisions, stop military aid to "the Greek military dictatorship".

He did spend most of his speech dealing with how the war had effected the American economy, and how its end would allow for other kinds of humane projects. Without getting concrete McGovern said, as he has often said in the past, that about $30 billion could be cut from the defense budget, without hurting national defense.

It is difficult to gauge reaction to McGovern the candidate. One student found the Senator "wishy-washy", another said he is "honest". What does seem to prevail is an attitude that McGovern would not get many votes as a third party candidate in, for example, a Muskie-Nixon election. Some students saw a danger in splitting votes from Muskie.

McGovern, by his own estimates, spends about 10% of his time on college campuses. His staff at the ballroom speech was surprisingly young. Much of his campaign will depend upon how many young people he can mobilize in campaign work.

The standing ovations at the beginning and end of his talk were heartening for the Senator. Whether or not this indicates a willingness on the part of his admirers to work for him is a question McGovern people can still ponder. He reportedly has a strong organization already functioning in New Hampshire, but so did Eugene McCarthy in 1968.

We want to talk to you about a career in law... without law school.

When you become a Lawyer's Assistant, you'll be doing work traditionally done by lawyers — work we think you'll find challenging and responsible. And Lawyer's Assistants are now so critically needed that The Institute for Paralegal Training can offer you a position in the city of your choice and a higher salary than you'd expect as a recent college graduate. You'll work with lawyers on interesting legal problems — and the rewards will grow as you do.

A representative of The Institute for Paralegal Training will conduct interviews on:

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 4

Inquire at Placement Office for exact location of interview

NOTE: If registration for this seminar is filled, come anyway — we'll try to talk to you. Or call us collect at the number shown below.

Battle Of The Busline

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

In a request currently before the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities, (MDPU) Peter Pan Bus Lines has asked the State's recognition of a garaging facility in North Amherst.

The facility would be used in servicing UMass and the surrounding areas, and would enable Peter Pan to lower "dead-head" charges on charter service for these areas. (The state requires a transport company to charge a mileage fee, "dead-head", for the distance between the garaging facility and the point of departure of the charter.

Peter Pan is currently allowed to use this "point-of-origin" in North Amherst for inter-state charter service by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC). This agency regulates all travel between states. For service within the Commonwealth the MDPU will only recognize Peter Pan's garaging facility in Springfield. This is a difference of nearly twenty "dead-head" miles.

Western Mass. Bus Lines currently receives all intra-state charter service from the University as their MDPU authorized point-of-origin is Northampton, this being only five "dead-head" miles from the University. Peter Pan's proposed facility would be one "dead-head" mile from the University.

In a recent Collegian interview, Western Mass.'s General Manager, Joseph Maddaloni, said the move by Peter Pan to establish an intra-state facility one mile from the campus is "clearly an attempt by them (Peter Pan Bus Line) to knock Western Mass. out of the box".

He said that if his company loses the University's intra-state charter service he will "have to drastically reduce local transit service." Western Mass. is currently the only company providing the University with bus service to the surrounding cities and towns.

Peter Pan Lines is currently under contract by the University for all out-of-state charter service, and Western Mass. for all in-state. This is a direct result of Western Mass.'s closer in-state origin point. Maddaloni said that Peter Pan's motion "is an attempt to monopolize charter service in the Amherst area."

Replying to this statement, Peter Pan's President Peter Picknelly said his company built the facility in North Amherst in 1964, which was immediately recognized by the ICC. He said this facility was "established to provide the University with the lowest possible charter service rates."

Since its construction, Peter Pan has applied to the MDPU twice for recognition of this as an origin point. Peter Pan's third request is currently being processed by the MDPU. Western Mass. argued against this recent request saying the decreased charter revenue "would necessitate a reduction in local transit service."

Picknelly said "Peter Pan is trying to help the University" and that if Western Mass. Bus Lines wishes to build an origin point in Amherst, his company "would not oppose such a move."

160 Attend Education Conference

By MARTHA GAYTHWAITE

Approximately one hundred and sixty UMass faculty, administration, and students attended the third annual Undergraduate Education Conference sponsored by the U.E.C. last Monday in the Campus Center.

According to Thomas Linberman, campus minister of the United Christian Foundation and member of the U.E.C. steering committee, the objective of the day-long conference was "to raise the priority of undergraudate education". The entire day was spent discussing various aspects of undergraduate education and what can be done to improve undergraduate education at the University.

The conference was divided into four main sections, the first being the keynote address by W. J. McKeachie, head of the University of Michigan Psychology Department. In his speech about teaching and learning in the University, he criticized faculty and students who merely transferred facts claiming this to be 'lazy education' and citing that the expertise of the faculty lies in their ability to think and ask questions in their respective fields.

The second section of the conference was devoted to the discussion of the recently published report of the Provost Committee of Teacher Evaluation. The possible establishment of an office of teacher evaluation and improvement and the question of how to evaluate teachers and what to do with these evaluations were other topics of discussion dealt with in this section.

The second half of the day began with a discussion of the report of President Wood's Committee on the Future of the University. The report stresses such innovations for the three UMass campuses as the accessibility of public education to all ages and economic and minority groups, more public service by the University, and a new mix of liberal education and specific training for the solving of social problems.

The conference split up into seven different discussion groups for the last section of the day. Several problems facing the University, such as admission policies, the grading and marking system and alternatives to traditional classroom methods were discussed in depth.

When asked about the conference, Nick Apostula, Student Senator and one of the three students who attended the conference, said he felt that "the conference was lacking in that there were not more students there". However, he did feel that "the conference provided a sounding board for the faculty although it didn't accomplish anything concrete."

Britain's Biggest Building Bombed

LONDON (AP) — Scotland Yard began investigating yesterday an early morning explosion that ripped a gaping hole near the top of London's 620-feet showpiece Post Office Tower, Britain's largest building.

Detectives were checking into a telephone call made by a man speaking with an Irish accent to the British Press Association. The caller, who claimed to represent the outlawed Irish Republican Army, said the IRA planted the bomb and more would follow.

The IRA's provisional wing, the militant group staging terrorist attacks in Northern Ireland, denied responsibility for the blast. The more politically oriented political wing of the IRA made no statement.

Something New at Hatch

By JUDY PITTMAN

There's something new at the Hatch that might change the "hamburger and coke" tradition of the campus.

Due to the efforts of two UMass graduate students, in cooperation with the Food Service, a selection of full-course and side-order dishes based on brown rice, soybeans, and other nutritious vegetables is now available in the macrobiotic-food-line in the Hatch.

Jim Bron, a grad student in zoology, and Alan Peakes, a grad student in futuristics, introduced the idea to the Food Service.

In an MDC interview, Bron said that he and Peakes had considered various ways of "getting organic food to the people" and they decided that the Hatch would be ideal.

"Macrobiotic foods involve a philosophy of eating," said Bron. "I became interested through the book, Zen Macrobiotic Cooking."

Bron and Peakes will be chefs of the new food line and Bron said that although the wait may be a few minutes longer, the food will be freshly cooked and good.

Besides vegetable gemot (a full meal of combined vegetables, soy grits, and spices on brown rice), vegetable salads, and other varieties of rice and/or vegetable dishes - freshly baked whole wheat bread will be offered. Occasional specials such as curried tomatoes, and grain combinations will also become available.

Prices will probably range from 20¢ to 75¢.

Senate Votes To End U.S. Foreign Aid

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. J.W. Fulbright said Sunday he expects an interim program of foreign aid to be approved by the Senate, but that it will exclude funds "for the military domination of other countries."

Fulbright did not state flatly that military aid to South Vietnam should be ruled out of such a program, but he said such military-assistance programs are "sticking points" that could preclude continuation of foreign aid.

"To liquidate the U.S. engagement in Vietnam is the announced policy of this country," the Arkansas Democrat said, and if the Senate's action in rejecting a two-year extension of the foreign aid program helped toward that goal it was a good move.

The Nixon administration hopes to bounce back from a Senate vote to kill the foreign-aid program by winning congressional passage of stop-gap legislation then enactment of a brand new aid bill.

White House officials said yesterday President Nixon wants aid continued in a coordinated way and has no intention of seeking piecemeal supplemental appropriations to continue one or another section of the aid effort.

Press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said, "A piecemeal solution isn't the answer."

The White House disclosed its plans a few hours after Sen. J.W. Fulbright said he expects the Senate to approve an interim program excluding funds "for the military domination of other countries."

Nixon, who spent part of the weekend at his Camp David hideaway near Thurmont, Md., conferred by telephone with William Timmons, a key White House lobbyist, on strategy to offset Friday's surprise Senate vote.

Nixon and Timmons, officials said, agreed the first order of business would be to seek passage of a resolution that would continue foreign aid beyond its scheduled Nov. 15 expiration at current levels. If such a resolution, subject to periodic renewal, is adopted, Nixon would plan to develop a whole new aid program.

Ziegler said administration people were busy during the weekend taking a continuing assessment of what he termed the severe implications of killing security, economic and humanitarian assistance to other countries.

In the absence of congressional action by Nov. 15, he said, the big Agency for International Development would shut down for lack of funds to pay its employees.

Fulbright, chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said the Senate vote marked "the beginning of a period of great opportunity...to be more cooperative and not so domineering" in foreign relations.

Fulbright appeared on the CBS radio television program, "Face the Nation."

Fulbright said aid to countries like Laos and South Vietnam would face "a lingering death" as programs now in effect gradually ran out.

But he said "grab-bag" programs that "were all things to all people" will not be seen again.

He said the interim program probably would "take care of those parts of the foreign aid program that are the least controversial." He cited such thing as funds for PAKISTANI REFUGEES as an example.

Fulbright said he doesn't agree with some senators that funds for the United Nations should be cut severely in the wake of the world body's ouster of Nationalist China.

But he said "there are reforms that should be made."

He said $400 million in funds to finance military sales to Israel as included in the old bill "was a very special case," the Senate would have to consider.

He mentioned as an example such things could be handled by simple resolutions in the Senate and not included in foreign aid.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP)-Senate action on welfare-reform legislation now has been put over until 1972 and there is doubt the bipartisan coalition backing it can hold together in a national election year.

Senate Democratic leader Mike Mansfield had persistently scheduled the bill for action this year, declaring President Nixon is entitled to a vote on his top priority recommendation. The House passed it June 22.

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP)-Thousands of striking coal miners in Appalachia become eligible for food stamp benefits today as the nationwide coal strike moves into its second month without any hints of progress in contract negotiations.

West Virginia Welfare Commissioner Edwin Flowers said yesterday that his department's offices throughout the state "are stocked with food stamps" in anticipation of today's applicants.

LONDON (AP)-A new campaign was launched inside the squabbling Labor party yesterday to oust Roy Jenkins as deputy leader, for backing the Conservative government's drive to take Britain into the European Common Market.

SINGAPORE (AP)-The Far East fleet steamed past in a farewell review yesterday just hours before the 150-year-old British Asian Naval Command was replaced by an integrated force under a five-nation pact.

The new arrangement provides that Singapore and Malaysia will receive naval support from a force comprised of British, Australian and New Zealand ships. Previously Britain was responsible for the defense of Singapore and Malaysia.

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP)-Romanians by the hundreds lined up Sunday morning for the early showing of Walter Matthau and Ingrid Bergman in "Cactus Flower," a very unrevolutionary start for a week in which the country's Communist leaders will issue a progress report on their four-months of efforts to create "the new socialist man."

TEL AVIV (AP) - A National Bastard Day is being prepared by Israeli anticlericalists to dramatize their struggle against what they term religious coercion. The event is scheduled for Nov. 9.

The title of National Bastard Day was chosen in honor of Jews born out of wedlock who are unable to marry in Israel because of the state rabbinate's monopoly on marriage.

STRAWBERRY PLAINS, Tenn. (AP)-A Navy fighter-bomber accidentally dropped an air-to-surface missile on the home of a judge during a training flight yesterday morning, causing serious damage but no injuries, military spokesmen said.

U.N. Raises China's Flag

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)- Communist China advised the United Nations Sunday that it wants to be listed under "C"-for "China, People's Republic of"-in the alphabetical roll of the 131 member countries.

Acting Foreign Minister Chi Peng-fei informed Secretary U Thant in a message replying to a query Thant sent Friday.

The answer cleared up the questions of where to hoist the white-starred red Chinese flag in the alphabetical rank of members' flags at headquarters and whether China would be president of the Security Council for November.

The flag will be between Chile's and Colombia's. Poland, rather than the People's Republic, will be president of the council in the monthly alphabetical rotation of the presidency among the 15 council members.

A spokesman said the U.N. guards would put the People's Republic's flag up with all the others Monday morning.

They have had the flag, hurriedly ordered from a New Jersey manufacturer, since Tuesday the day after the General Assembly voted the Communist People's Republic into the U.N. and ousted the Nationalist Republic of China.

They have not raised it because they did not know where to put it. The first day, they left a gap in the "C's" where the Republic of China's red, white and blue flag had been. After that they shifted the gap to one end of the row so it would not be so noticeable.

The flag of Red China will be going up here for the first time since it was established in Peking in 1949, four years after the foundation of the United Nations. According to the latest U.N. population estimates, it is the symbol of a state that as of mid-1970 governed 759.6 million people on the Chinese mainland and claimed sovereignty over 14 million on Taiwan, the stronghold of the Nationalists.

The U.N. will skip the flag-raising ceremony that is usual for new members. The People's Republic holds that it is not a new member but has simply been "restored" to rights in the U.N. from which it had been kept by "representatives of the Chiang Kai-shek clique."

Castro To Visit Chile

WASHINGTON (AP)-Chilean President Salvador Allende said Sunday the visit to Chile by Prime Minister Fidel Castro of Cuba will occur within the next 20 days.

But, Allende said that his long personal friendship with Castro does not mean he will emulate the Cuban leader and turn Chile into a one-party Communist state where elections are never held.

"I am a personal friend of Fidel Castro but I do not imitate his style and tactics," Allende said.

"There will be free elections in Chile," Allende said, "in keeping with our traditions, history and customs. We are carrying out our revolution through legal channels.

Trick or Treat?

Drugs In Your Candy

By the Associated Press

Ghosts, goblins and witches wandered the land over the weekend for Halloween trick-or-treating that had a bitter side for some youngsters who discovered drugs, pins and needles or razor blades in their holiday candy collections.

Public officials in many states warned parents to check carefully any candy, fruit or other items their children brought home. A Battle Creek, Mich., man promoted the use of coupons to replace candy.

Jessie Gray, head of the "let's Save Halloween" committee, urged homeowners to buy the coupons from local stores and distribute them to trick-or-treaters. The coupons were redeemable at other stores for candy and youngsters can eat without-risking the danger of finding poison or a sharp object.

A different kind of coupon campaign was under way in Utah. A sponsor of the drive explained that Halloween was to highlight a program to collect coupons for delivery to the Utah Kidney Foundation. The coupons will be exchanged with a sponsoring food corporation for a $3,000 kidney dialysis-blood cleansing machine at the University of Utah Medical Center.

A few of the children, however, found the holiday was more trick than treat.

The Broome County, N.Y., sheriff's office reported three incidents involving the discovery of needles in candy bars given to children. All were found before the youngsters ate the candy.

Police in Richmond, Va., said a woman reported chocolate candy collected by her children contained drugs. Police said the drugs were tested and found to be phenobarbital and darvon-tranquilizers and pain killers.

A 10-year-old boy in Atlanta, Ga., found a razor blade in an apple he nabbed during a bobbing contest in an Atlanta park. He was unharmed.

Not so lucky were three Chicago youngsters who were treated at a hospital. Two children became ill after eating candy received Saturday and a third was stuck in the roof of the mouth by a pin planted in an apple. Police said the candy and fruit given the youngsters contained crushed glass, razor blades and straight pins.

Poli-Sci Meeting Tonight

The Department of Political Science is sponsoring an open meeting tonight for students interested in applying to law schools, to graduate programs in political science, and to the state and federal governments for employment.

The meeting will take place tonight at 7:00 in Thompson 106. Attending will be Professors Bach, Gordon, Mainzer, Mileur and Steeper of the Political Science Department and Professor Sam Goldman of the School of Business Administration. They will discuss admission and employment prospects and offer their advice about the most effective procedures and strategies. The sponsors hope that the meeting will be an open discussion which will focus on questions raised by the students who attend.

The meeting is not restricted to political science majors. All interested students, and especially juniors and seniors, are urged to attend. Law schools, graduate schools, and employment opportunities are all becoming increasingly competitive. Hopefully, this meeting will enable students to make decisions which are better informed and more likely to be successful.

Smut Sales Slipping

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)- Promoters of hardcore sex entertainment are crying about hard times, even in this city once labeled the "Smut Capital of the U.S."

Five "adult" theaters have closed in less than one year. Others are playing mostly to empty seats.

Customers used to pay as much as $10 a ticket. Now they can have nothing left to their imaginations for as little as 99 cents.

The pornography promoters blame a variety of things: too much competition, police harassment and-after two years-public apathy.

Among those leading the first against the pornography purveyors is Asst Dist. Atty. Jerome Benson, in charge of prosecutions involving sex entertainment.

Experts disagree about whether there is any relaton between pornography and crime.

Benson says the sex shows "definitely cause a hike in crime."

However, the San Francisco Crime Commission, appointed by Mayor Joseph L. Alioto, made a three-year study of the city's crime problems and reported last June: "We have found no reliable evidence demonstrating a casual relationship between pornography and victory crime."

Information gathered from the police Bureau of Criminal Statistics also shows no evidence of a direct relation between crime and the pornography business.

During the past two years the number of sex bookshops and shows remained about the same. The number of recorded sex crimes also stayed at about the same level during that period. Police and legal troubles are not the only problems for the operators of sex shows and bookstores.

"Small time operators have glutted the market," moaned Raymond "Tiny" Becker, 300-pound manager of the New Follies Theater. Becker had just spent a night in jail on a charge of violating a court injunction against the Follies' sex show. He was released in $10,000 bail. Public apathy is another woe.

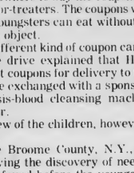
"There's only so much of this stuff the people can buy," said Phil Rosenberg, 62, owner of a downtown store selling adult books. His sales are off more than 30 per cent and the pornography publishers are grinding out a weekly average of only 20 new titles such as "The Sexually Active Housewife," "The Sex Comics" and "The Urge to Punish."

Rosenberg said his store used to get 75 or more new titles a week.

Botulism Scare Proves False

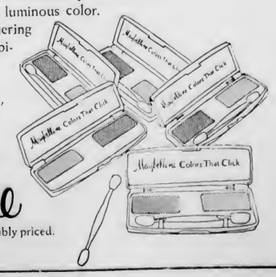
PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP)-A Marine captain and his 4-year-old son were pronounced "completely well" Sunday by doctors at a Navy hospital after suspicions that they had been affected by Botulism poisoning proved false.

"No clinical, bacteriological or laboratory evidence exists to support a diagnosis of botulism," a Navy spokesman said concerning the condition of Capt. William Cleveland Jr., 27, and his son William III.



Preliminary tests showed they may have eaten contaminated French style sliced green beans made by Stokely-Van Camp Inc.

"There's nothing wrong with them, nothing at all," said a spokesman for the Clevelands. A Navy spokesman said "They will be dismissed very soon."



The two had reported to the hospital for blood tests and samples were flown to the Communicable Disease Center in Atlanta, which said "a suggestive diagnosis of botulism" was apparent.

The spokesman said, however, that a later series of tests conducted in Atlanta indicated "no botulism at all."

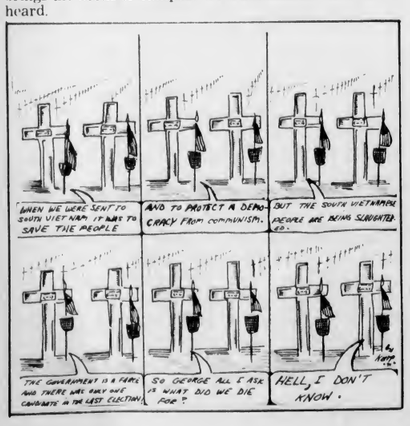
One Of Many

It wasn't exactly fire and brimstone that Senator George McGovern delivered before a couple of thousand would-be student politicos last night in the Student Union Ballroom. It was more like the beginning of a long line of issue swilling Presidential hopeful campaign speeches that the campus can expect to be deluged by in the next year or so.

Since students got the vote when the 18 year olds recently became enfranchised, it seems likely that a lot of politicians are going to want to "reach" them this year, so that those 11,000,000 votes won't be swayed the "wrong" way. McGovern certainly didn't say that he was the only way to responsible voting, but he made no secret he wants those students to vote his way. But a lot of people want you to vote their way. We will listen to them. But what we want you to do is vote and act, after you listen.

Communities like Amherst could change drastically as a result of student registration there instead of at the place of parental residence. That's why the Amherst Voter Registration Drive is trying to register students.



Student Senate president Lee Sandwen encouraged involvement in local politics to effect any kind of action on domestic issues. Lee spoke just before Senator McGovern did last night to sort of put the presidential campaign into local context. What he said and what we would like to stress is that student influence begins at home.

McGovern, and all the other hopefuls that are going to come coaxing your votes, are big men. They've been on the Washington scene or the Boston scene or the Hampshire District Court scene for a while and they have lots of ideas on what to do there. Get exposed to their ideas but incorporate them at home.

Isn't low income housing, and rent control a national and a local issue? Isn't pollution and highway safety the same kind of problem?

McGovern told his audience last night that he wants to attack domestic issues, and everyone else will come and tell us that, too. But to get the real domestic issues improved we know that it has to be done on a local level. Let McGovern and the others convince us how they'll fix it up nationally and let's do the rest ourselves.

Go home and vote tomorrow, or else register to vote in Amherst on November 14th when the Town Clerk again brings the books to campus. We want student voice to be heard.

The Greaser Report

WASHINGTON--One of the results of the Pentagon Papers was the releasing of many hitherto secret documents. One of these documents--it has not received much press--was the result of research done over the past five years by an obscure government bureaucrat in the Office of Education and Society, Wilfred F. Greaser.

Greaser's project involved the perusal of hundreds of volumes of press releases and speech transcriptions made by various government departments and individuals in order to ascertain whether or not the government offends its constituencies through the use of certain expressions and words. Greaser's findings are startling.

The offensive words that occurred most frequently were "faggot" (and its derivatives) and "Negro" (and its variations). The Executive Branch of the government alone, denied the existence of so-called "fags" on 234 occasions. Greaser hypotheosized that much of the usage occurred during the Walter Jenkins years of the Johnson administration.

As for the "Negro" offenses, Southern Senators alone were responsible for articulating to the public 348 "nigras", 218 "boys", and 56 "niggers". Northern Senators, observed the Greaser report, were more diversified in their speech patterns with 67 "Negros", 39 "blacks", 83 "coloreds", 52 "jungle babies", 41 "Afro-Americans", 74 "coons", and 1 "proud race from across the ocean".

Ethnic studies of the Justice Department proved to be particularly revealing. Department agents, investigating alleged wrong-doings by one Guiseppe Fustacchi, wrote in thie observations of "meatballs", "wops", "mafios", "garlics", "dagos", and "guineas".

An outstanding example of offensive language in government transactions, Greaser reported, was the speech of one Treasury Department official attempting to explain Phase II to a group of businessmen at a Cabot Club luncheon in Boston.

"What we are attempting to do", the official explained, "is to keep the Commie, pinko, Bolshevik, reds from Jewing up their prices."

Greaser's study indicates some trends, too, Hairy-legged chicks from women's lib appear to be emulating actions similar to those practiced by Hitler's scientists during World War II II. "What we intend to do", Greaser quoted a Department of Health, Education and Welfare publicity spread, "is to freeze the balls off of all male chauvinist, honky, spade, and spic pigs so that they'll never be able to fuck us again."

It is an indictmentof the Establishment press that the Greaser Report has not been publicized. Quoted one editor of the New York Times, "If the Government Printing Office feels that the Greaser Report is offensive, then we certainly feel so too. Besides, half of those words in the Greaser Report aren't even in the dictionary. We wouldn't want to distract people's attention from the real issues, you know."

No Thanks, Sir

ASST. PROFESSOR
WESTFIELD STATE COLLEGE

It is public knowledge that the office of Chancellor of the University is vacant as a result of the resignation of Dr. Tippo. As educators, we are all aware that the office requires a man who holds the highest academic credentials and who has successfully administered an institution of higher education. Since Dr. Leonard J. Savignano and his supporters have publicly declared on many occasions that he is in possession of these qualifications, I respectfully request that his name be added to the list of eminent candidates for the office of Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts.

Surely the credientials of a man so consistently praised by those who administer the State College system cannot be overlooked. His appointment to the office of Chancellor will be a fitting reward for his years of loyal service and will make available to our state's largest public academic institution the "dynamic leadership" for which he has so often been praised.

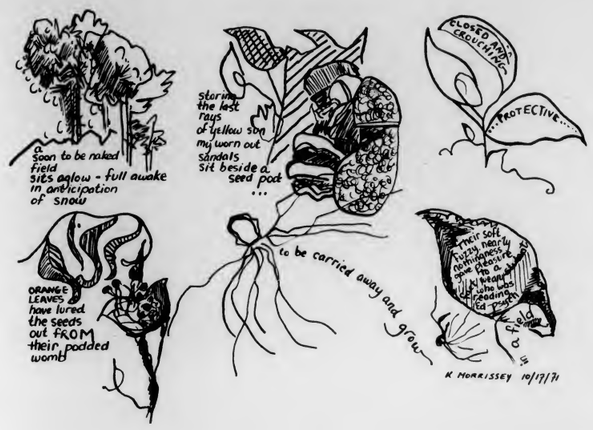
Doubtless there will be those among the 2,000-and-odd members of the WSC community who will have no desire to see him leave. Indeed, in two referenda conducted on campus last spring, fully one hundred thirty-nine (139) of those 2,000 (126 students and 13 faculty) expressed their desire to see him continue as president -- impressed no doubt by the fact that in his ten (10) years as president he has brought WSC from its humble position as the second smallest of the state colleges to a point where it is still the second smallest state college.

The president himself may not wish to leave, for we have it from his own mouth that he has--in the past-- refused the presidency of "several major universities." Mindful of professional courtesy and not wishing to embarrass those unsuccessful suitors, he has always declined to name them. We know that he is interested in the University, however, for he and his supporters never weary of telling the public that he has prevented WSC "from becoming another University of Massachusetts." And this is the very reason why the University needs him: he can restore it to that prestigious position from which he and his supporters feel that it has fallen. However dear Westfield may be to him, it is his duty as a public servant and as an educator to make himself available for that office in which he will be able to provide the greatest good for the greatest number.

...In closing, I am compelled to intrude a personal note. Let no cynics accuse me of having a selfish motive in offering this modest proposal merely because I have long been a critic of the Savignano administration and the Board of Trustees which has seen fit to perpetuate it; for I have no other desire, personal feelings notwithstanding, than to promote the public good and to advance the cause of higher education in the Commonwealth, which at present can best be achieved by elevating Dr. Leonard J. Savignano from President of Westfield State College to Chancellor of the University of Mass.

Correction - Fac Sen

To the Editor:



The lead article in last Friday's edition of the DAILY COLLEGIAN concerning the students leaving the Faculty Senate meeting was somewhat misleading. The amendment mentioned in the article-that "the Faculty Senate endorses the concept of voting student participation at all levels in faculty personnel decisions"--was introduced at the request of Student Senate Vice-President Ladd and on behalf of the Student Senate. One of my functions as Secretary of the Faculty Senate is to bring matters before the body on behalf of parties that otherwise would not be able to introduce business for the Senate's consideration. Contrary to the report in the DAILY COLLEGIAN, I did not "suggest that the Faculty Senate endorse" the amendment; as Secretary I simply introduced the matter for the consideration of the Senate without a statement of endorsement or non-endorsement.

After two brief comments from Senators concerning the appropriateness of the amendment, the presiding officer, Professor David Booth, ruled the amendment was inappropriate because "the intention of the amendment was incompatible with the intention of the main motion." The main motion introduced by Professor Joseph Burroughs on behalf of the University Tenure and Grievance Committee read "that the faculty of each college, school, department, or other academic unit at UMassAmherst... shall determine and state whether and to what extent and manner students may participate in faculty personnel decisions at their respective levels." The motion was intended to assist the Tenure and Grievance Committee in deciding whether student participation in personnel decision-making constituted a legitimate grievance on the part of a faculty member. The motion did not seek endorsement or rejection of the concept of student participation in decisions affecting personnel matters; it sought only to clarify the policy on such matter in each academic unit. Since the motion was entirely neutral on the issue of student involvement in personnel matters, Professor Booth ruled the amendment inappropriate.

In the editorial on page seven of the same issue of the DAILY COLLEGIAN the editorialist maintains that "since the amendment did not contradict the main motion, it is clear...the decision to rule it out of order was a violation of the good faith that has characterized...recent relations with the faculty." Surely conducting a meeting in accordance with the normal canons of parliamentary procedure does not violate good faith. The brief discussion following the introduction of the amendment, and especially the ruling of the presiding officer, was not, as contended in the editorial, a "parliamentary ploy" to avoid voting on the substance of the amendment; the matter of the Faculty Senate endorsing the concept of student participation in faculty personnel decisions was simply not at issue in the motion before the house.

No Bread

To the Editor:

Wednesday night, October 27, the Student Senate voted not to appropriate money to the Boltwood - Belchertown Project. We, the UMass coordinators, of the project, feel too strongly about this program to accept the Senate decision as a final condemnation of a project to help the residents of Belchertown State School. Therefore, we have resubmitted our budget, asking for $1,200.00 for our program. This money would be used entirely for transportation of our volunteers.

The Boltwood Project is a program dedicated to bringing volunteers into Belchertown State School for the retarded and working with the residents there. Our volunteers have committed themselves to working at least two hours a week, every week.

Response to our recruitment drive has exceeded our expectations. Almost 300 UMass students have become actively involved in our program, and the Student Senate has decided not to fund our program.

We need, the $1,200. We must have the buses to transport our volunteers to Belchertown State School. The program as a whole is in danger of folding. We have enough outside money to rent charter busses for a few weeks - then our program will cease. The residents of Belchertown State School will return to the level of life they have known - just existence, a stagnant, sterile, lifeless environment.

To all the Boltwood volunteers - Please contact your Student Senator, let them know that you don't want the project to end.

To the UMass Senators - Please reconsider your decision. When the new budget comes to a vote, consider again the 300 UMass students who feel our project is worthwhile and are actively involved. Help them stay involved.

Remember The Needy

To the Editor:

The Collegian has lately seen fit to accuse Senator Goldwater of "reactionary ignorance" for suggesting that the U.S. withdraw from the U.N. and banish that body to a more congenial locale, intimating that the Senator was childishly vexed at opposition to American wishes.

But there is a difference between the fact that America was opposed and the reasons for which America was opposed. The seating of Red China was not seriously at issue; if such mild-mannered friends of freedom as the USSR and Algeria may sit there, why not the Red Chinese? At issue, rather, was the seating of the Nationalist Chinese regime on Formosa. That there seemed to be two claims to representation of China was not at issue, properly; since the Chinese rivals both possess territory, population, and sovereignty over these, they qualify as governments, and the legal niceties would have been best aired by the International Court of justice at the Hague.

The real issue, the issue that aroused the ire of Senator Goldwater and others not necessarily friends of Chiang, was representation. The argument most often heard for inclusion of Red China was that a powerful nation ought to be represented. To exclude the Nationalists, who possess considerable power in Asia both as a military force and an economic competitor, contradicts that argument. The Nationalists govern fourteen million people; now they are out, and Oman, with barely half a million persons, remains. If there were a ceiling on membership, which there is not, far better candidates for insignificance might have been found.

Much of the current uproar against the General Assembly vote was probably stirred by that reminder of the basic absurdity of the institution. The U.N. was disinclined to seat two Chinas, or even a China and a quasi-China, yet allows the Kremlin to sit thrice--as the USSR, the Ukrainian SSR, and the Byelorussian SSR--as if three sovereignties were thereby represented. Whom are they kidding? On the other hand, America, with one General Assembly vote among more than one hundred and thirty, provides more than thirty per cent of the U.N.'s operating budget, an inspiring exercise in masochism.

For American to hand over so much treasure for the dubious privileges of sitting through intemperate harangues, personal squabbles (both seen during the China debates), the vituperation of petty fiefdoms, and the scorn of piddling sheikdoms; to abide operations that accomplish no more than secret diplomacy did and does, to underwrite social programs for which we reap no great propaganda benefits, to proclaim publicly the hope that this gaggle of gaseous windbags will somehow promote global concord--all this signifies a capacity for rejoicing in self-torture seldom equalled among the history of nations.

While Senator Goldwater's proposal may be reactionary, it is neither ignorant nor unjustified, but a sensible option that ought to be considered. It may well be time to transfer the ponderous deliberations of this modern Tower of Babel to a less conspicuous station.

Fair is Fair

To the Editor:

Regarding the MDC editorial "A Childish Gesture":

Your editorial states that a useful purpose was served by the expulsion of Taiwan from the UN General Assembly, namely that the US can no longer use the UN as an instrument of its foreign policy. Further, you state that the American people have not learned that American "imperialism" is finished and that any cut in American subsidization of the UN in protest over Taiwan's expulsion is childish.

First, I would question whether the UN has ever been a puppet of the US. Certainly, no resolutions or solutions favorable to the US have ever been passed in regard to the Vietnam and Mideast conflicts. The UN, in this respect, has proven itself at worst completely ineffective in stopping war and at best independent and unconcerned where the desires of the superpowers are concerned. This stalemate has been primarily caused by the veto held by the Soviet Union in the UN Security Council. Yet, your editorial implies that another communist veto in the Council will be a good thing in that it will end "America's dictating policy simply because of its economic supremacy." Apparently, you prefer a totalitarian imperialism to American imperialism, if some form of imperialism must dominate the UN.

Secondly, Secretary of State Rogers has stated that we will abide by the UN vote. However, you say that to protest a policy decision by a representative body is not only childish but wrong. If dissent can be heard in Congress, then why not in the UN General Assembly? Or doesn't the editor believe in the right of protest when a moral wrong has been committed? The moral crime here is that 14 million people on Taiwan (more than in many of the nations who voted its expulsion) will be denied representation in the Assembly. Meanwhile, the US is expected to continue supplying 39% of all UN funds. The very countries who do not pay their dues are the ones who voted Taiwan out, yet we are not supposed to get upset at this huge hypocrisy. Rather, we are expected to pick up the tab for the rest of the more than 130 member nations while one of our most populous, prosperous, and faithful allies (a founder of the UN Charter in 1945) is thrown out instead of being allowed to co-exist with the People's Republic of China.

In all fairness, why shouldn't America make its protest felt in the only way it will be felt: in the UN's pocketbook? If a nation is to vote in the UN, it should face up to its moral and financial responsibilities before denying another its rights. If an editor is to instruct his audience in what to think and dismiss its elected representatives as "childish", he should first consider the moral realities of what he is supporting.

To the Editor:

Last Thursday evening, October 28, Kappa Sig had a party. Fine. I have no objections to parties. But I do object to a group of Kappa Sigs yelling obscenities, quite loudly, at 2:30 a.m. This is not the first time I have been disturbed by Kappa Sig and I am sure there will be other times. Along with the booming obscenities, there were horns honking from cars to add to the gala atmosphere. Well, I've had it and I think Kappa Sig deserves to know.

I, unfortunately, live in Gorman on the side nearest this outstanding house. I had always heard Kappa Sig was the "animal" fraternity. I thought perhaps it was a traditional label. Well, I have lived next door to them only two months and found out otherwise.

Dear Kappa Sig, you have awakened me many a night. Do me a favor and next time you're in one of your belligerent beerie moods, please take a cold shower. It'll refresh you considerably.

The House On The Hill

By SHELLEY LAUZON

That big white house up on the hill remains, for many, somewhat of a mystery. For others, it is more commonly known as the Chancellor's house, (formerly the President's house).

Built in 1884, the house did not appear on campus until some 20 years after the establishment of the college. The reason: a controversy among the board of trustees as to the location of the main buildings of the college. Several felt they should be constructed at the center of the campus near the present-day North Pleasant Street. Prominent architects and landscape gardeners were hired to settle the controversy. The final result was the decision to locate the buildings on the ridge running north and south, now called "the Hill."

Henry Flagg French, elected as the first president of Massachusetts Agricultural College, resigned September 29, 1866, as a result of this controversy. He listed among his reasons the feeling that his wishes had not been fully consulted as they should have been.

The college had purchased, for $500, a granite quarry in Pelham and proposed to construct the main buildings in stone. Among the first buildings contracted for were a dormitory to house 48 students, at a cost of $30,000; a laboratory at a cost of $9,350; a boarding house with room for 50 students estimated at a cost of $5,050; and a botanical garden, to which Dr. Nathan Durfee of Fall River and L.M. and H.F. Hills together pledged $20,000. Since bids for these structures exceeded the architects estimates, the trustees decided to use brick and wood in place of granite.

A house for the President of the college was proposed, but no further action was taken until 1868, when the sum of $14,000 was allocated for this purpose under the administration of President William S. Clark. Construction, however, proceeded at an extremely slow pace. In 1883, the trustees appropriated $36,000 for a chapel, a library, the President's house, and dormitory repairs. During the summer of 1885, the house was finally completed.

Henry H. Goodell was elected President of the college in 1886 upon the resignation of James C. Greenough, who had held the office since 1883. Goodell was the first president to occupy the house, which was then appropriately named the President's House. From then on, successive presidents have occupied the house, the last being former President Lederle. Upon the appointment of Oswald Tippo in 1970 as the first university chancellor, the house changed its name and has become the official residence of the chancellor.

With Tippo's resignation, the house undoubtedly will be vacated by Tippo, but whether or not Chancellor Bromery will move into the "house on the hill" remains a mystery.

UMass Student Convicted of Sex-Assault

A UMass student received a sentence of three to five years in Walpole State Prison after he was convicted last week in Hampshire County Superior Court of charges in a sex-assault on a UMass coed.

Gregory Jackson, 19, of Oakland, Calif., was convicted of assault with intent to commit rape, assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, and committing an unnatural and lacivious act.

Judge Andrew R. Linscott pronounced the sentence minutes after the jury returned this morning with the verdict.

Jackson was accused of locking the coed into his UMass dormitory room by pushing the bed in front of the door. According to the girl's testimony, he then forced the girl to commit an unnatural act.

When she resisted, she testified, he began to beat her with a walking stick fashioned from a tree branch.

Pictures of the girl bruised and bloody, on the evening of the crime, were introduced into evidence. A doctor also testified as to her condition after the alleged crime.

Mobe Petitions For Kent Probe

In response to the letter from Kent State, the Student Mobilization Committee has started the petition on the UMass campus. Just at the SMC table yesterday afternoon in the Campus Center, with no publicity, the petition received nearly 100 signatures.

To sign the petition to convene a Federal Grand Jury to investigate the Kent State affair, come to the SMC office in the Franklin Room in the Student Union (545-1366) or the SMC table on the first floor of the Campus Center any week day between 9am and 4:30 pm.

CAMPUS CENTER

Education Group Holds First Meeting Here

The Massachusetts Task Force for Equity in Education met for the first time last Wednesday, October 27, at the Campus Center.

Established by Dr. Dwight W. Allen, dean of the UMass School of Education, the task force will examine critical issues raised by two recent court decisions regarding school financings schemes and the Fourteenth Amendment.

The Serrano Vs. Priest decision in California and the Dusartz Vs. Hatfield decision in Minnesota resulted in school financing schemes in those states being declared unconstitutional on the basis of the Fourteenth Amendment's equal protection clause. Massachusetts' school funding structure is similar to both California's and Minnesota's in that it relies heavily on local property taxes.

Stadium For Concerts?

The Ad-Hoc Committee to Study Concerts is presently considering the feasibility of Alumni Stadium use for spring semester concerts this year. Talent possibilities range from the Rolling Stones to J. Girls.

A sub-committee of the Student Matters Committee of the Student Senate, the committee is open to any interested undergraduates. Further information may be obtained from Student Matters Chairman, Bruce Bernstein from Mackimmie House.

Gluckstern Cited At MIT

Dr. Robert L. Gluckstern, UMass vice-chancellor for academic affairs and provost, has been named to the Policy Board for MIT's new 400 Million Volt Electron Linear Accelerator.

The accelerator is being developed at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Laboratory for Nuclear Science with the support of the Atomic Energy Commission. It is scheduled to be available for basic nuclear research projects late in 1972 or early the following year.

The Policy Board is made up of seven distinguished physicists from MIT and other institutions. Dr. Louis Rosen of the Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory is chairman. The board's main function will be to examine research proposals from potential users.

Dr. Gluckstern is a professor of physics who formerly headed the UMass physics and astronomy department.

By SYDNEY OMARR

Many feel that major periods of air pollution occur during times of minimum sunspot activity. Sunspots have been utilized to successfully forecast good and poor radio reception, economic cycles and periods of war and peace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Red tape is cut; successful breakthrough occurs. What has been retarding progress is removed. Judgment, intuition flash correctly. Be confident. Take reins of leadership. New start is favored.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Some changes due and they are meaningful. Don't try to block progess. Go with tide. Gemini, Virgo persons will aid. Be cooperative. One behind scenes works in your behalf. Act like you know it.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on hopes, wishes, friendships. Gift will symbolize token of affection. Be gracious in accepting. Toss aside false modesty. Applies especially in dealing with opposite sex.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): See in light of reality. Don't be deceived by one who sweet talks, but does little in way of performance. Review ambitions, career, unique assignments. Professional superior is observing.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Stick to hard facts. Some may attempt to manipulate truth. Key is to have research available. Add to knowledge. You learn lessons of value. Money comes now from publishing, advertising.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Put finishing touches on any financial transaction. Tie loose ends, find out how to make budget work effectively. Frank discussion is in order. Individual from your past makes reappearance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): New approach to partnership, joint effort is essential. Spotlight on public relations, the way you deal with opposition. Stress independence, not arrogance. Time is on your side.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Soft tone gains more than hard sell. Realize this and accent subtle approach. Some work associates, neighbors act in manner considered eccentric. Maintain balance, humor. Pace yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Study Scorpio message. Be ready for unusual assignments, assertions. No need to defend yourself against the ridiculous. Laughter now gains more than serious approach. Stress versatility.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Goals change. Those in authority are moved. Chess game apparently takes place at management level. Be daring. Express views and needs. You are likely to get what you request.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Check messages, directions, reservations. Confusion combines with change. Strive to be analytical. Find reasons. Take nothing for granted. Have alternatives at hand. Journey is accented.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Gift for family member could make life more pleasant. Act accordingly. Steer clear of get rich quick notions. Have fun without being extravagant. Protect possessions, especially while in transit.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are inventive, your approach usually is unorthodox. You succeed when independent, original. Recent aura of confusion will evaporate. You will be on more solid ground professionally and emotionally. Finances improve. You will be happier.

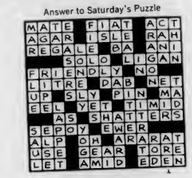
Linsky A Fellow In 5-College Area

Martin A. Linsky, assistant minority leader of the Massachusetts House of Representatives, is serving as a fellow-in-residence in the Five College Community-Amherst, Mount Holyoke, Smith, and Hampshire Colleges and the University of Massachusetts for the current semester.

The five institutions coordinate their educational programs and attempt to bring a number of distinguished visitors such as Linsky to the campuses.



During the semester, Linsky will spend a week at each of the five campuses discussing state legislatures and other governmental subjects in seminars, individual lectures and student meetings.

Linsky is a graduate of Williams College and Harvard Law School. In 1965 and 1966, he served as a research assistant to Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Elliot Richardson when Richardson was Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts. In 1967, Linsky was an Assistant Attorney General of Massachusetts, and since then has been a representative from the 13th Norfolk District. During the past year he served as a part-time consultant to the United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

A Brookline town meeting member since 1964, Linsky instructed students at Northeastern University from 1966-69 in federal-state relations.

JV Booters Blanked

By JIM PINSKY

It was a disappointing ending to a good but otherwise frustrating year as the Springfield J.V. soccer team beat their UMass counterparts 1-0. The only score came on a penalty kick mid-way through the third quarter. Though only one goal was scored the action was furious and because of the polyturf surface very fast.

The polyturf surface was new to all the players so Coach David Jekanowski had the team practice for an hour before the game to get use to the surface. Even so many of the players had trouble adjusting and after the game many complained of cramps in there legs. The cramps are caused because the turf doesn't give like grass. Coach Jekanowski wasn't too pleased with the polyturf mainly because it gave Springfield a huge advantage.

As for the game itself it was marked by many penalties indicative of the rough play. Springfield received five indirect kicks resulting from UMass penalties and one direct, which resulted in the only score. Springfield had two penalties called against them which were costly. Both penalties nullified goals.

Following the game Coach Jekanowski said, "The defense played well, Springfield put an awful lot of pressure on them but only scored once. The pressure kept us on defense all game and we weren't able to get any offense generated. I think if we played again off the polyturf we would have won. It was the first game we lost in which we did all we could do to advert the loss.

As for the season as a whole Coach Jekanowski replied "I would say we had tremendous improvement, not only in skills but in attitude. The team played well together and I was pleased with their performance. They represented the University well."

The J.V.'s final record was 4-3. They beat Holyoke, WPI, Tufts, and Trinity. On the losing side of the ledger were UConn, Amherst, and Springfield. The defense was superb allowing only 14 goals in seven games, but the offense had its troubles scoring only 18.

SOCCERMEN LOSE-A bright moment in an otherwise bleak day for UMass soccer was when hustling Ed Doherty stole the ball from a Vermont attacker in front of the UMass net. The Redmen not only lost the game to Vermont, but also first place in the Yankee Conference.

The booters besides losing the game and first place, also lost the services of co-captains Augie Calheno and Lindo Alves who were both thrown out of the game in separate incidents.

Alves was thrown out of the game after disputing a call with the ref late in the game. For Redmen rooters it was the most excitement in a game dominated by Vermont.(MDC photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

But the tall, lean Vermont goalie, Jim Kiely, kept the Redmen out, preserving the victory, and moving the 10th New England ranked squad closer to their fifth YanCon title in the last six years.

With the victors at 9-2-0, UMass now stands 5-2-2, and must win their remaining two games to finish with last year's mark of 7-2-2. Springfield, who scouted the game, and spoke of slow Redmen halfbacks, is next on Wednesday, and New Hampshire wraps up the season, this coming Saturday. UMass can still tie for the YanCon title, as they hold a 3-1-0 conference record, to that of Vermont's 4-1-0. Both New Hampshire and URI were still in contention, and depending on what resulted from the contest between these two this past weekend one was eliminated. Had UNH come out on top, then the battle next Saturday will be for a share of the title, unless of course the teams tie, in which case Vermont will be sole owners of the crown.

UMass hardly looked impressive on the slick and slidy field across from Boyden. Their passing attack just wasn't anything like that seen against Tufts, for too often it was a game of boot it out of the defensive zone, and watch Vermont charge again. Springfield is on Wednesday and a little getting together is likely to be called for before the Redmen travel down there for their second to last game of the season.

Skins Back On Track

WASHINGTON (AP)-Pat Fischer's 53-yard touchdown romp with an intercepted pass lifted error-prone Washington to a 24-14 National Football League victory over stubborn New Orleans Sunday afternoon.

The victory boosted the Redskins to a 6-1 record as they retained their lead in the National Conference's Eastern Division.

The Saints recovered three Washington fumbles and intercepted two passes, but could capitalize on only one of the breaks.

Larry Brown paced the Skins' rushing attack with 113 yards in 20 carries.

Washington scored on a one-yard keeper by quarterback Bill Kilmer, a 36-yard pass to Brown, Fischer's interception runback and a Curt Knight field goal.

The Saints tallied on runs by Jim Ford and Bob Gresham.

On the first play from scrimmage, Washington's Brown was hauled down for a yard loss. The second play, with Brown carrying again, ended in another loss.

After the ensuing punt, the "over the hill gang", Washington's defensive unit, threw quarterback Archie Mannning for successive losses, forcing the Saints to punt. But the Skins' Ted Vactor fumbled the fair catch and New Orleans recovered on the Washington 48.

A 47-yard field-goal by Curt Knight sent the Redskins into intermission with a 17-0 advantage.

The Saints got on the scoreboard at the start of the final quarter when Ford bulled his way into the end zone from the three after a pass interference by Richie Petitbon gave New Orleans a first-and-goal at that point.

Ed Margett's passes and two penalties aided the Saints in their second scoring drive, which ended with Gresham going over from the 1.

49er Surge Tops Pats

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)-Quarterback John Brodie fired a 7f-yard touchdown pass to Gene Washington in the fourth quarter as the San Francisco 49ers turned back the New England Patriots 27-10 Sunday and moved into first place in the National Football Conference West Division.

The victory over the Patriots moved the 49ers ahead of the Los Angeles Rams, who lost their interconference game to Miami 20-14.

The Patriots, trailing 13-0 at halftime and without a single first down on the ground, dominated play through the third quarter when they scored on a 23-yard pass from Jim Plunkett and Randy Vataha.

A 32-yard field goal by Charlie Gogolak halfway through the final period narrowed the gap to 13-10.

San Francisco widened its victory margin with 59 seconds remaining when Forrest Blue picked up Ron Gardin's fumble of a punt and ran 25 yards to a touchdown.

A bearded Armenian and an African runner, Tom Derderian and Alleiu Massaquoi in fourth place, bid their time with 4 miles to go in Saturday's Yankee Conference meet. Massaquoi won over Derderian by 20 seconds. UMass won the meet. (MDC Photo by Rich Tashjian.) Doug "DOC" O'Connell and Bill Gillin are visable to the left.

SD Coasts

SAN DIEGO (AP) San Diego quarterback John Hadl passed four touchdowns and ran for another Sunday, sparking the San Diego Chargers to a 49-21 victory over the New York Jets.

Hadl, who gave way to backup quarterback Marty Domres late in the fourth quarter, finished with 19 completions in 27 attempts for 358 yards, just one yard short of his best day ever as a Charger and 11 off Tobin Rote's team record of 369 yards passing.

The win boosted the San Diego record to 3-4 on the season while the Jets, led by quarterback Bob Davis, saw their record dip to 2-5.

Hadl, who scored on a two yard rollout in the first quarter, tossed scoring passes of 34 yards to rookie Mike Montgomery, 17 to rookie Billy Parks, 49 to Gary Garrison and 21 to Pettis Norman.

Garrison was Hadl's favorite target, pulling in six passes for 162 yards with Montgomery taking four for 72 yards and Parks four more for 75 yards.

UMass Strikes Early

Redmen End Drought, 24-15

By EARLE BARROLL

Four weeks of famine in the win column, the distaste of speculatory remarks about the performance of a football team and the need for a victory ushered the UMass football team into battle Saturday against Vermont at Alumni Field.

Some eleven and a half minutes after the opening kickoff the die was cast, the spread was 17 points and the Redmen were on their way to being ushered out of Alumni Stadium with an end to the drought, restoration of football respectability and the much needed win, 24-15, over the Catamounts before a crowd of 7,000.

The win also vaulted the Redmen back into the race in the Yankee Conference as their league record stands at 2-1-1. (2-3-1 overall.)

In other weekend action New Hampshire got by Rhode Island which sets November 13 as the THE day in the conference title picture. The Redmen travel to UNH , and UConn plays Rhode Island.

A Redman win would insure a tie, but a win coupled with a UConn loss would bring the Bean Pot back to UMass.

Theearly UMass burst put the Cats in a whole to be sure, but it was the play of the defensive line throughout the game that contained Vermont when the UMass offense went sour and the mistakes were coming in bunches.

Continuing where they left off last week at UConn the front four of Bill DeFlavio, called by the Vermont coach "the greatest defensive player I've seen this year", Curt Bristol, Skip Parmenter and Steve Greaney held the Vermont running game to a minus 58 yards, a new UMass record, while the entire defensive effort held the visitors to a mere 102 total yards for the afternoon.

Head coach Dick MacPherson said after the game, "we opened up well on offense and got ahead, but we didn't keep putting it to them after that. We made a lot of mistakes which were negated by the offense, but we can't keep doing it."

After UMass stopped Vermont on its first series of downs, Piel Pennington and an offensive line that opened gaping holes went to work.

Ron Marino led Paul Metallo around left end on a 42-yard scamper by the fleet halfback. Metallo came back for five on a sweep to the right. This brought the ball to the 19 and after an incompletion Pennington handed off to Steve Schubert on an end around which went the distance at the 2:58 mark.

On the ensuing kickoff Vermont fumbled and Carl Mattarocchia recovered on the Cat 20 yard line. Seven plays later the drive was stalled on the nine yard line and Marc Palau came in and hammered a field goal through the goal posts from 27 yards out to give the Redmen a 10-0 lead near the six minute mark.

Vermont was stopped cold again on the next series and a weak punt put UMass in good field position at their own 44 yard line. Pennington drove the Redmen all the way in from here, capping the drive with a little three yard flip to tight end John Hulecki who was all alone in the end zone.

Vermont got its first points of the game on a 13-play drive that culminated in a 23-yard gallop by Steve Coon in which he broke four tackles at 9:25 of the second quarter.

The Redmen came back on the next kickoff and marched 61 yards on ten plays and a final eight yard strike from Mark Tripucka, who was in the game for the Pennington to Walt O'Malley and this is how the half ended, 24-7.

BIG RUSH-Vermont quarterback Earl Olson is about to be mauled by 6'4", 245 lb. Skip Parmenter. The Redmen front four continually harassed the Vermont quarterback throughout the afternoon, and held the Vermont rushing attack to minus 58 yards, a new school record. The 24-15 victory moved the Redmen back into contention for YanCon honors. (MDC photo by Barbara Brecher)

The second half was a bogged down affair with the Redmen committing a number of penalties enabling Vermont to engineer something resembling drives on a number of occasions while the UMass offense was going nowhere without the services of Pennington who's injured shoulder felt the heat of competition which forced him to sit out the second half.

On these penalties MacPherson explained, "we preach aggressiveness which we didn't have in the first couple of games we played and this will have to be polished up."

With a little over three minutes remaining and the Redmen moving deep in Vermont territory, Tripucka rolled to his right and let go a pass that was intercepted by defensive back Mark Delormed who outraced the Redman offense to the goal line. A two point conversion made the score, 24-15, but Vermont wasn't through.

The Redmen gave up the ball on four downs and in a wild 13 play series, highlighted with penalties, fists and a few choice words, Vermont drove all the way to the UMass three yard line where an incomplete pass ended the game.

The Redmen return to action next Saturday at home when they host the tough Holy Cross Crusaders beginning at 1 p.m.

Booters Lose Second; Bow To Vermont

By STEVE FERBER

Bringing out the worst in the Redmen, the Vermont Catamounts upended UMass 2-1 in soccer action here Saturday, to take over sole possession of first place in the Yankee Conference and clinch a conference title tie.

Unlike the battle against Tufts, in which the Redmen were felled by the same 2-1 score, the Redmen did not deserve to win this one. They were just beaten, clean and hard, outhustled, outfought, and in the end outscored.

From the beginning Vermont dominated play, and only for brief spurts did UMass get rolling and apply some offensive pressure to the UVM goalie. But the pressures were far too few, while at the other end UMass goalie John Kiah had his busiest period of the season in the first quarter, yet did not let up a goal until quarter number two.

That second quarter saw scramble after scramble in front of the UMass nets, a score seemingly inevitable. And at 11:30 freshmen Peter Breen on the right side from in close, bulleted one at Kiah, and while the ball dribbled away from the netminder Vermont had a lead, one they would never relinquish.

Too often the Redmen were caught on one side of the field, moving their men way over, thus leaving an open side for Vermont to mount an attack on. And mount they did as 10 minutes into the second half Jeronne converted a Vince Masseau pass for a 2-0 lead. For the first time UMass was down by a pair, and the way their offense was rolling, it seemed like a very safe edge.

While the shots on goal weighed heavily in the favor of the Catamounts, towards game's end the shots evened out, as a last eight or nine minute Redmen surge, made a storybook ending appear quite possible.

Freshemen Tom Coburn brought that dream ending a bit closer when he headed in a Dick McCarron head with less than three minutes to go in the game. That goal resulted from a Steve Blanchette corner kick. Yes, a Blanchette corner kick because both co-captains, Augie Calheno and Lindo Alves were out of the game. Alves, incidentally, had caused the biggest commotion of the game, that is besides the Vermont post-game celebration, when he was thrown out of the game for having words with a referee, and nearly all of the fans watching the scene from afar were certain a punch or two was going to be thrown.

And so 2-1 it ended, as Redmen rushes were frequent during those final 150 seconds.

Runners On Top Of Conference

By JAY NESTOR

The "young, inexperienced, and rebuilding" UMass cross-country team traveled to Storrs,, Saturday, to run the Yankee Conference Championship Meet. They returned with the title in their back pocket and it seems that nothing has changed since last year. Last year's top five Redmen harriers have left the team, but to a casual observer, it has hardly made a dent.

The Redmen, showing fine depth, put their top five in the first fifteen positions, and it was all over for the rest of the Conference teams. In a sense, it was almost a typical Redman win, with each UMass harrier switching around positions with respect to the team.

Typically, a Redman did not win the race, in fact, Redmen have only placed first in two meets of this season. Allieu Massaquoi, a student of BU and a native of the small African country of Sierra Leone, found the warm weather tailor made, as he established a lead over Redman Tom Derderian at the three mile mark, and held his position to the finish. His time was 25:33, twenty seconds up on the fine finish of Derderian, who began the UMass barrage.

The rest of the race, well you could say that it began at breakfast. Doug O'Connell, Bill Billin, Paul Segersten, and Rick Barry arose early to get something to eat before the race. They weren't served until an hour and a half before the race, so consequently, their stomachs were not in the best of shape for running.

Bill Gillin fought stomach cramps to finish fourth behind Dan Forbush of UNH. Their times were 26:11 and 26:13 respectively. It is quite an accomplishment for this talented freshman to establish such a fine position in the Conference this early in his running career.

Dennis McCormack of Holy Cross grabbed fifth place, just in front of strong finishing Peter Crisci and Doug O'Connell. Crisci and O'Connell timed 26:15 and 26:20 respectively, with McCormack a second up on Crisci.

Crisci ran in the leading pack of runners, and showed a fine finishing kick to record his best race of the season. Doug O'Connell experienced stomach trouble and didn't feel in the peak of form as he finished well in spite of it, with seventh place.

Bob Sullivan ran another of his consistent races to finish in fifteenth position and cap the Redman scoring. He clocked the respectable time of 26:48.

Paul Segersten, suffering from a leg injury, finished in seventeenth position and Rick Barry finished nineteenth, in the fifty three man field. They were included in the hurting breakfast bunch.

At the beginning of the race, Coach Ken O'Brien expressed apprehension at the thought of the UConn harriers taking advantage of their home course and running away with the race. This didn't prove to be the case, however, as the Redmen confidently ran from the front at the outset of the race.

Redman Tom Derderian took the lead after a mile split of 4:55. Massaquoi ran up front as Derderian dropped into a pack of four or five runners. At this point, Massaquoi moved out with Derderian giving chase. These two kept a fifteen to twenty second margin between each other as they gradually moved away from the pack.

After these two finishers, the field really started to roll in.

In summing up this year's championship with last year's, Coach Ken O'Brien commented, "The only difference of last year's team and this year's team is Ron Wayne."

The results stood at UMass-34, UNH-69, URI-80, UConn-86, Holy Cross-119, BU-164, UVM-164, and Maine 221.

Wednesday, the team meets Central Conn. and Coast Guard in a home appearance, followed by the New England meet next Saturday.

Anti-War Forces Plan Nov. 6th Demonstration

By SHARON McGOURTY

The Student Mobilization Committee is determined that the anti-war demonstrations taking place in this country on November 6 will be well attended.

The SMC has publicized the demonstration by use of radio, teach-ins, extensive leafletting, articles in newspapers and now--the new library.

According to Tom Moriarty, an organizer for the SMC, one reason the committee is going to such great lengths is that no major newspaper, radio station nor television station has given any publicity whatsoever to the organizing being done for the demonstration.

Moriarty believes that this is an intentional blackout by the press. He said that people such as Birch Bayh and Vance Hartke have endorsed in writing their support of the National Peace Coalition which is the national organization which includes SMC. However when appearing before the public these public figures neglect to mention this demonstration.

He feels that demonstrations are what has made doves out of a number of the politicians in this country. Moriarty thinks that these politicians know what the people want and thus by signing endorsements written by the NPAC feel they appease the people. Also Moriarty pointed out that by signing endorsements that protest the war these men will go on record as having been against the war.

"This year the demonstration is taking place in 17 cities instead of the usual two. This number of demonstrations on one day is unprecedented in American history," he said.

Demonstrations on November 6 will take place in traditionally conservative cities such as Atlanta, Georgia; Houston, Texas and Salt Lake City, Utah.

The demonstration, which is being organized by the NPAC is being supported by many groups of blacks, chicanos and members from various labor parties such as the Meatcutters and Butcher Workers Association. This group organized its own rally in support of the November 6 rally. Also participating will be Vietnam veterans and both inactive and active GI's.

They climbed up the scaffold and placed this banner high on the library above UMass to remind everyone of the demonstrations planned against the war this November 6. (MDC Photo by Barbara Brecher)

"The large turnout at the April 24 demonstration in Washington indicated that people are not happy with Vietnamization, increased bombing or the leaving behind of residual force in Vietnam", Moriarty explained.

He continued, "This demonstration is for immediate and total withdrawal. Everybody who demonstrates will be demonstrating for these terms only--nothing else.

Plans for this demonstration have been in the making since July 4, when there was a meeting in New York of the NPAC to discuss future plans.

"The fact that Nixon doesn't want you to demonstrate is a good reason to be there. People don't have to go far--there's a demonstration in Boston. Either you're there or you're a part of that great silent majority," Moriarty said.

Massacusetts Review Is First-Rate

By EDWARD G. KELLEY

"A 5-college enterprise that is clearly a notable success," is the way Prof. Jules Chametzky describes the Massachusetts Review. "Any student who is intellectually curious would find a valuable and first-rate source of literature virtually at his doorstep in the Massachusetts Review," adds Prof. John H. Hicks, co-editor of the quarterly magazine.

The two members of the UMass English Dept. have been entrusted with volume 12 of the quarterly of literature, the arts, and public affairs that is published independently with the support and co-operation of Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts. The magazine deals with current literature and is both national and international in scope.

Professors Chametsky and Hicks described their editorial activities during an interview in their Memorial Hall offices, recently. Probed as to the actual benefit of the Massachusetts Review in relation to its environment, Chametsky responded, "Taking this in context, say we had an eminent professor on campus; his value could be measured individually or collectively. The rewards that the university would receive because of this professor's eminence would come forth in two ways, one, he is a standard of excellence within the department and a source of pride as well, two, he acts as a beacon for attracting faculty to this school. What we do in the Massachusetts Review fulfills these same two goals, as we see it."

Although schools throughout the country publish literally hundreds of quarterlies, such as the American Scholar and the Yale Review, Prof. Chametsky says they restrict their interests to the arts and the state of culture. He adds the "the Massachusetts Review goes beyond that. It is deeply concerned with the problems of humanity, with learning, morality, human compassion and the development of such. We must use all our wits and intelligence to adjust ourselves to these problems. A literary journal should fuse all these movements. Since some magazines are too narrow in this scope, we fell the Massachusetts Review is doing an excellent job in this category."

The planning stages of the Massachusetts Review were set early in 1958. By November 1959, the first number was issued by Profs. Sidney Kaplan and F.C. Ellert, as managing editor and general editor. Ms. Leone Barron Stein, who is now director of the University Press, was the associate managing editor. Chametzky credits them with being "the three sparkplugs of the magazine. In 1963, John Hicks and I became co-editors. We took the positions because we were both committed-we were involved from the very beginning of the magazine and because it was an intellectual venture for ourselves."

And Hicks adds that "Between 1960 and 1963, the University began expanding enormously, quantitatively. Jules Chametsky and I were among a number of professors interested in the element of quality and the expansion of such. The Massachusetts Review was the foremost instrument at the time for seeing through our commitment to such." Chametzky agrees, "the Massachusetts Review was a pacesetter."

Although the Massachusetts Review is a private corporation, the University is a leading sponsor of personnel. The five colleges do have members on the Massachusetts Review's board, all are contributors, and all of these schools provide financial aid and advice. The Massachusetts Review is funded by alumni, gifts, and subscriptions. Both editors term the publishing operation, "a condominium."

"The quarterly devotes itself to a deeper and more intense level than that of simply journalizing. The Massachusetts Review is concerned deeply with the graphic arts," they say. It has a "superb" arts section as well as philosophical and political sections. "The Massachusetts Review is sensitive to the problems of blacks, women, youth, the Vietnam War, the political arena, and whatever intellectual issues that have come to a head in the last decade. The magazine has pioneered in advocating the needs and desires of these factions. It has published responses to and addressed itself to these problems before it was considered evocative to do so. The editors point out that the magazine implored the establishment of an Afro-American studies program at UMass and continually stressed the need for such. "In our minds this is an example of the way the Massachusetts Review is continually confronting the real and most difficult issues of our time," Chametzky points out.

They sum up the value of the Massachusetts Review as "A stellar attraction of the University throughout the country. It penetrates all sorts of places, both here and abroad. It is a lightning rod for the intellectual life of the Connecticut Valley, a 5-college cooperative. In short, the Massachusetts Review is a sensor of intellectual life and cultural concern.

Howard Zinn To Speak Thursday

"Civil Disobedience in a Democracy" will be the topic of a lecture to be delivered by Dr. Howard Zinn in Mahar Auditorium Thursday at 8:15 p.m.

Dr. Zinn, currently a professor of political science at Boston University, is one of America's foremost political scientists and historians and has guest lectured at over one hundred universities throughout the United States and the world. Dr. Zinn is a leading proponent of civil disobedience and protest beyond the law in order to overcome injustices protected by the law. He has put his theories into practice by taking part in many demonstrations, legal and illegal, against the Vietnam War and has been arrested several times for his activities.

A bombadier during World War II, Zinn received his Ph.D. in History and Political Science from Columbia University in 1958 and was a post-doctoral fellow at the Harvard University Center for East Asian Studies from 1960-1961. In 1958, he won the American Historical Association Albert E. Beveridge Prize for his book "LaGuardia in Congress." Other critically acclaimed books by Howard Zinn include "New Deal Thought," "Vietnam: The Logic of Withdrawal," and "Disobedience and Democracy." Dr. Zinn's articles have appeared in "Harper's", "The Nation," "The New Republic," "The Saturday Review," and "The New York Times" among others.

Dr. Zinn's lecture is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program and is open to the public free of charge. Following the lecture there will be an open coffee hour in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

A UMass student stares with uncommon disbelief as a voter registrant explains a legal point during the recent voter registration drive which took place on the Concourse in the Campus Center.

Registration Again In February

John Stevens said yesterday the voter registration drive, with the help of Representative John Olver of Amherst, is negotiating with the Board of Registrars to have registration for students on campus after the February elections.

Stevens, who headed the registration for October 14 and termed it a very big success, says the registration organization is informing students how to register everywhere, but especially in Amherst. "That is why we're trying to get them on campus as often as possible," he said.

He also said Senator McGovern was brought to speak here because he is the first nationally known figure to express an interest in registering student voters.

Index To Sport A New Look

By ETHEL HARRIS

Due to a $32,000 cut in the budget of the 1972 Index, the book will appear this year in a newsmagazine format, according to Walt Sobzak, editor-in-chief of the Index.

Because of the large cut in funds, the 1972 edition "cannot compete with last year's" in a traditional format. Instead, Sobzak has decided upon a "radical change", depending more heavily on copy and less on photography.

Citing reasons for the cut, Index business manager Jack Koch explained, "Instead of funding traditional activities such as humor and literary magazines and yearbooks...more money is being spent on socially oriented activities."

It cost $91,000 to print the 1971 Index, compared to the $60,000 alloted for printing this year's edition.

As a result, Sobzak explained, there would be a drastic cut in the number of color pages, with a maximum of thirty-two. Also, the number of pages would be cut from last year's 400 to approximately 300.

Inspired by a Columbia University yearbook, Sobzak plans to "go heavy on copy", with photographs to go along. He hopes to include essays by both administrators and students on topics such as the drug problem at UMass. and the Student Senate.

"The book will show what happened at the University in 1972. We want to show this year on campus, not just any year.

Williams Tonight

The young Australian guitarist John Williams will give the first of his two scheduled recitals this evening at 8 P.M. in Bowker Auditorium. For his two day visit to campus, Mr. Williams will offer two different and varied programs featuring works of Bach, Albeniz, Scarlatti, Stephen Dodgson, and Turina.

John Williams emerged on the international concert scene in 1958 after a highly successful debut at London's Wigmore Hall. There he was accepted as a pupil of the great classical guitarist Andre Segovia.

Tickets will be available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office and at Bowker before the concert. There will also be a lecture demonstration at 11:15 this morning in Herter 227. Admission is free to this but seating is limited.

Anyone interested in writing lengthy book reviews or fiction pieces come to the Collegian office and see either Bob Nesti or David Williams.

When Tuition Was $12 A Term

By SHELLEY LAUZON

With all the controversy over the proposed tuition, room rent increases and the miles of red tape necessary to accomplish anything around here, it is interesting to see what the first students at "Massachusetts Agricultural College" paid for an education.

For instance, an applicant for the College's first class in 1867 had to be at least 14 years of age. A certificate of good moral character was required from a pastor and a teacher, along with bonds for the prompt payment of tuition and board.

Bedding and furniture had to be provided for by the student, stoves being the exception. Every student had to labor 6 hours a week without pay to learn the operations of the farm and garden. He could also work 12 hours a week for wages under the direction of the farm superintendent during the term, and over vacations for fair wages.

The school term began October 2, 1867. The faculty consisted of six: President William S. Clark, a graduate of Amherst College; Ebenezer S. Snell, professor of mathematics; Henry H. Goodell, professor of modern languages; and farm superintendent, agricultural instructor Levi Stockbridge. The entire freshmen class totaled 47 by the end of the term, but only 27 graduated with the first class in 1871.

The tuition-$12 a term. Room rent was $3 per term, and board was set at $3-$3.50 per week. An old volume on the history of Amherst states: "A young man of good talents, healthy and willing to work, should gain at the college a superior education for $100 per year."

Makes you wonder why things aren't like they used to be, doesn't it!

Guilty As Charged

In reaction to loud disturbances last week between Kennedy and Coolidge Towers, which left Hampden Dining Commons desecrated with assorted silk panties, the House and Administrative Staffs of Southwest produced a temporary handout of disciplinary guidelines.

Circulating the Southwest, the notice outlaws obscene language and the throwing of objects from the towers.

Those residents or non-residents found guilty will, at the minimum, be expelled from the community within 24 hours-without refund. Supposedly the Student Judiciary System will then act on possible University suspension.

Despite wide popularity in the Southwest area, the Student Judiciary is relatively unaware of the enactment and was unable to comment on its effectiveness.

According to John Hunt, Master of Southwest College, "Until a full disciplinary structure is developed in the community, these guidelines will be responsible for student welfare and protection.

Judge Upholds Underground Blast

WASHINGTON (AP) - A federal judge turned aside for the second time Monday attempts by environmentalists to halt a giant underground nuclear explosion set to go off within days on a remote Alaskan island.

U.S. District Court Judge George L. Hart, Jr., ruled that seven organizations headed by the Committee for Nuclear Responsibility failed to prove that the government did not adequately consider potential environmental dangers of the blast on Amchitka Island.

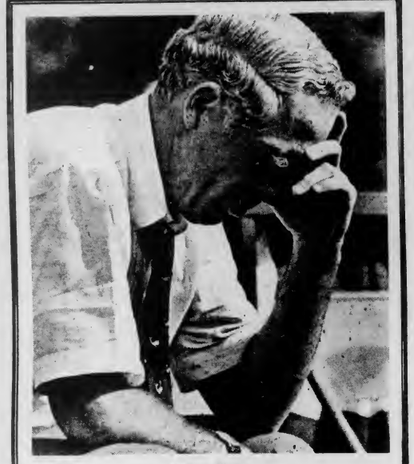
The conservationists said they would appeal immediately to the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington.

The appeals court already has turned down one request for a temporary injunction against the blast-reportedly set to go off Thursday with the equivalent force of five million tons of TNT.

But that ruling occurred before Hart was ordered by the appeals court to study secret documents the environmentalists say will prove the explosion can trigger earthquakes or tidal waves, release radioactive waste into the air, or injure wildlife.

The appeals court also told Hart to turn over to the environmentalists all of the documents from four government agencies which showed any potential environmental damage. Hart said he did so reluctantly and added: "When I get through reading all this material on atomic explosions, I couldn't help feeling it was a tempest in a teapot."

Hart ordered some of the documents turned over to the conservationists and others kept secret because they said they fell within the legal doctrine known as executive privilege.



Hart, who earlier had dismissed the environmentalist case without a formal hearing, said he turned down their second attempt to obtain a preliminary injunction because the explosion is needed for national security reasons. He also said the conservationists failed to show that the environment would be damaged.

The blast-if the Atomic Energy Commission is allowed to proceed with it-will mark the final stage of a testing program for the new Spartan Anti-ballistic Missile which the Nixon administration says is needed to counter Soviet weaponry.

Attorney David Sive of the environmentalists said he planned to file an immediate appeal to Hart's ruling and hopes for a hearing in the appeals court sometime Tuesday.

If Sive should again be turned down by the appeals court, he said he would carry the request for an injunction to the Supreme Court.

The State Department served formal notice Monday that the United States is temporarily suspending the right of innocent passage by ships and aircraft through territorial waters surrounding Amchitka Island from Nov. 2 until Nov. inclusive.

Mayor White

White-Hicks Battle

BOSTON (AP)-Mayor Kevin H. White faces an old foe, Louise Day Hicks, Tuesday in a rematch of a mayoral battle White won by 12,500 votes four years ago.

Since their first contest in 1967, Mrs. Hicks, a opponent of school busing to achieve racial balance, has been elected to Congress. White has lost a bid for the governorship.

The election, expected to draw 190,000 voters-about 65 per cent of Boston's total-is one of 39 municipal contests being held throughout Massachusetts.

Besides choosing municipal officers, voters will decide whether to let the game of beano be played locally.

Bostonians will be choosing nine city councillors and five school committee members as well as the mayor.

White and Mrs. Hicks, both Democrats, led a field of six in the September preliminary election to win the runoff spots in the nonpartisan finale.

Indians Given Land Grant

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Senate passed Monday a bill to pay $1 billion to Alaska natives in settlement of their ownership claims to most of the vast land mass which the United States bought for $7.2 million a century ago.

Sponsors of the bill, which sailed through the Senate 76 to 5, said the $1 billion plus an accompanying land grant would be a just settlement of aboriginal claims which have been recognized since the territory was purchased from Russia in 1867.

The bills calls for $500 million in federal funds, $500 million in mineral production royalties from Alaska public lands and alternate land grant proposals.

The natives-55,000 Eskimos, Aleuts and Indians-would be given the option of voting on whether to accept either 40 million acres near their villages, plus mineral rights, or title to 30 million acres and the right to use an additional 20 million acres.

Little opposition was voiced in debate on the Senate bill, which will be sent to a conference with the House. The conferees will seek to resolve differences between the Senate and House versions.

The House bill would provide $425 million from the federal treasury, $500 million in minerals royalties which otherwise would go to the state and 40 million acres of land.

The Senate rejected by voice vote an amendment which would have retained for the federal government all mineral rights in the Navy Petroleum Reserve. The bill would give the few native villages within the reserve full ownership of lands they occupy, including subsurface minerals.

The Senate bill would form native corporations and commissions to handle mineral royalty funds and appropriations to be made over a 12-year period.

Natives would receive per capita payments and stock in the corporations, which would use the money for their benefit in such projects as hospital health faculty and school construction and education loans and grants.

Native organizations also would make land selections for the villages under the bill.

The measure is more liberal than one passed by the Senate last year. The earlier bill, which did not reach the House floor, would have given the natives about 10 million acres.

Troops Drop Below200,000

SAIGON (AP) - American troop strength in South Vietnam dropped below 200,000 Monday for the first time in nearly six years.

The U.S. Command said the number of American troops in the war zone decreased by 5,300 men during the last week to 196,700-the lowest since January, 1966. There were 196,400 U.S. servicemen in Vietnam then.

Peak U.S. strength 2-1/2 years ago was 543,000.

The headquarters of Gen. Creighton W. Abrams also announded that 13 more U.S. Army units, totaling 1,335 men, were pulled out of combat Monday.

Court Refuses To Ban DDT

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Environmental Protection Agency refused once again Monday to order an immediate ban on DDT.

Hearings are continuing however, which may lead eventually to such an order against the pesticide.

EPA Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus said the hearings should wind up in December and a final decision will be announced by next March 18, and probably earlier.

Under the federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rhodenticide Act, pesticides must be registered with EPA for interstate commerce.

Last Jan. 7, in a suit brought by a citizens group called Environmental Defense Fund, the U.S. Court of Appeals here ordered EPA to start a review which may lead to cancellation of DDT's registration.

It also ordered EPA to consider suspending the registration in the meantime, a move that would take DDT off the market while the lengthy cancellation review went on.

EPA began the cancellation procedure last Jan. 15, but on March 18 it refused to suspend the DDT registration.

Environmental Defense Fund has been fighting the indiscriminate use of DDT for years, contending it kills off desirable as well as undesirable insects and animals, and that it may have even more serious environmental effects, getting into food chinas and posing a possible hazard of cancer in animals and perhaps man.

As part of the cancellation procedure, Montrose Chemical Co., a DDT manufacturer, requested a review of DDT effects by a panel of scientists.

The panel's report, concluding that DDT should be rapidly phased out, was made public by Environmental Defense Fund in early September.

On Sept. 22 the appeals court ordered EPA to reconsider a DDT suspension in the light of the panel's findings and report its decision by Nov. 1.

On Monday, the court deadline, Ruckelshaus reaffirmed his refusal to suspend DDT.

Ruckelshaus noted that the scientific panel said an immediate ban on DDT could make no great difference for human health and might force pesticide users to switch hastily to other products not yet fully assessed.

EPA said it would study alternative pesticides.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP)-Home mortgages and consumer credit will be the immediate targets of administration efforts to hold down interest rates but fixed ceiling will be avoided, Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur F. Burns said Monday.

But Burns, chairman of the new presidentially appointed committee on interest and dividends, said the outlook for interest rates in the next year or so is uncertain.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)-Red China's flag was raised at U.N. headquarters Monday, but China's seat in the meeting halls remained vacant a week after the General Assembly's decision to seat the Peking government.

U.N. officials said they had heard nothing on the composition of the Chinese Communist delegation, or its arrival time, beyond the terse message that a delegation to the assembly would be sent "in the near future."

NEW DELHI, India (AP)-A cyclone and 16-foot tidal wave have slammed into India's east coast, and political leaders reported the loss of 15,000 to 20,000 lives in this latest major natural disaster on the rim of the Bay of Bengal.

The wave and 100-mile-an-hour winds hit Friday night, but the devastation was so complete that word of its catastrophic proportions did not reach the outside world until Monday.

Foreign Aid Kept Alive

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Foreign Relations Committee agreed Monday that the United States should stay in the foreign aid business, and Congress appeared headed toward a stopgap resolution to keep the program alive.

But controversy loomed over the duration of any such revival measure, and the shape of a long-term foreign aid formula.

The White House said adoption of a resolution to continue foreign aid spending authority past Nov. 15 is imperative.

And a Pentagon spokesman said military assistance "is absolutely essential" in U.S. strategic planning.

The Foreign Relations Committee spent some 90 minutes behind closed doors discussing the future and the impact of last Friday night's Senate vote that killed the $2.9-billion foreign aid authorization bill.

No votes were taken at the committee session and no formal decisions made.

"I think the one thing I can say is that there wasn't any disposition to do nothing," said Sen. J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., the chairman. "Something will be done, but what it will be, I have no idea."

Rep. George Mahon, D-Tex., chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, said he hopes Congress will agree on "a quickie, stopgap" resolution to continue foreign aid while a permanent program is fashioned.

"This is not a settlement of the controversy over foreign aid," he said. "It is just a stopgap."

He suggested a 30-day extension of aid spending authority, to meet current expenses and pay salaries while the issue is settled. The House had passed a $3.1-billion foeign aid program, but only by a 10-vote margin.

Mahon said he hopes the House could pass such a resolution by the middle of next week, to give the Senate time to act before Nov. 15, when the Agency for International Development will run out of money without congressional action.

His idea is a resolution that would continue aid spending authority for 30 more days, or until the end of the current congressional session, at about $2.9 billion, the level that would have been authorized by the rejected Senate bill.

Fulbright said the critical issue to him would be the military side of foreign aid, particularly such items as the sharply increased allowance for Cambodia, which would have received $341 million under the defeated Senate bill.

He said the Foreign Relations Committee wants to discuss the whole situation with Secretary of State William P. Rogers and AID administrator John A. Hannah, as soon as possible. Fulbright said he hoped they could appear before the panel within the next few days.

Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott forecast adoption of a stopgap resolution, then an interim aid bill, with an overhauled and more permanent aid program put off until next year.

Any interim bill almost certainly would be cut sharply below the currently proposed levels, and there undoubtedly could be Senate moves to cut the spending envisioned in a temporary resolution.

You might be happier at Ætna.

We think we might have what you're looking for. Something 27 million people depend on for security and a better life.

We'd like you to consider taking a sales management position with Ætna Life and Casualty. We have hundreds of broad-gauge management positions, both in the field and in the home office, that pay substantial salaries right from the start. They all take creativity and hard work. But the rewards can be very high. To yourself. To others.

If the insurance business is still the Overlooked Profession to you, it's probably because you haven't heard the whole truth about it yet. How fast-changing it has become. Or how sophisticated. Or that it is where the greatest variety of job opportunities are—today, insurance probably takes more college graduates than any other profession.

We are an Equal Opportunity Employer and a JOBS-participating company.

We have jobs in all divisions of our company. If you'd like face-to-face contact with people we have many positions that will give you immediate contact with the public. If you'd rather deal with your co-workers and other professionals, we have those, too. Tell us your preference, and we can work it out between us.

A brochure called "The Whole Truth" goes into the specifics on sales management as well as other opportunities. It'll tell you how Ætna works, what it does, and how you can become part of it. It's an honest picture of an honest business. Why not stop in at your placement office and read it.

Today, one out of six Americans looks to Ætna for insurance protection. You might build a successful career helping us help many more.

A Need For Strong Government

Several weeks ago there occurred what to me was one of the most pathetic scenes of recent memory. It by far topped any ineptitude on the part of the government either civil or military. And it struck me most deeply because it dealt with a philosophy with which many of us sympathize. Many of us have long realized that the old Roosevelt-Johnson liberalism of consensus and compromise had broken down and consequently we had drifted toward the Left. But several weeks ago, the New Left was buried along with the Old Liberalism. It was indeed a pathetic scene, when at the conclusion of a speech by a member of the John Birch Society, several disillusioned and aimless Left Wing Liberals rose to say that Mr. McManus was for the same things they themselves were for. Overlooking his anti-semitism and tricked by a simplistic devil theory and a few cheap rhetorical tricks, they rose to announce their discovery that government was indeed the root of all evil and consequently they favored a weak government. In so doing, they tacitly assented to the theories of laissez-faire and States Rights. The two doctrines that have been historically used to sanction the greatest injustices in American society.

Think of every argument ever advanced against helping to improve the condition of the masses; against sanitary standards, against fire safety, against the eight-hour day, against the minimum wage and against labor unions themselves and you will find the concept of private property and the argument that government should not interfere in these private affairs. That government should not seek to make sure that workers had decent conditions, to prohibit child labor and the fourteen hour day. That the government should not attempt to regulate private property to see to it that tenants had at least some semblance of sanitary facilities. Think of every objection to desegregation whether de jure or de facto, whether in public schools, public facilities or in private housing and you will find the argument that government should not interfere in private affairs. If it had not been for a strong government and governmental intervention these evils would not have been abetted in the least.

That liberalism stands for a strong government I admit. That I am opposed to liberalism I also admit, but I am opposed to the uses that liberalism made of strong government and not strong government as such. Perhaps its heart was in the right place, and liberalism was indeed trying to better the condition of the people through governmental intervention. God only knows where we would be if the government had not intervened to get us out of the depression. The fault lies that in adopting Keynesian economics the government allied itself with the military. That in attempting to institute programs to help the masses, it only created an unresponsive bureaucracy. It is these two factors which have brought us to the state we're in, with economic prosperity dependent upon the military and the government bogged down in red tape. It is these things that we should oppose, that we should seek to get rid of and not strong government.

By removing strong government you are not going to make the capitalist more charitable or the bigot more loving, quite the contrary. Once the evils of militarism and bureaucracy have been eliminated, (let us hope and work for that), then it is strong government, and strong government alone that can improve the workers condition, fight the final battle for equality and eliminate poverty. Let us realize what we are against and not work against what we are for.

The Old Nixon At Camp David

WASHINGTON--President Nixon was working in the library at Camp David on Phase III of his economic game plan when the old Nixon came out of the fireplace.

"Oh, it's you," President Nixon said, slightly annoyed.

"What's this I hear about you going to Commie China?" the old Nixon said.

"It's no secret," President Nixon said. "The whole world knows about it."

"How could you do this to me?" the old Nixon cried. "I've fought the Commies since I was in Congress. I sent Alger Hiss to jail. I smeared Helen Gahagan Douglas as a Red. I made speeches against the fellow travelers in America. And now you've destroyed everything."

"Dick," the President said, "it's a whole new ball game. There are 800 million Chinese people, and they're now in our league."

"Why do we have to play ball with them?" the old Nixon asked. "We haven't played with them for 25 years. Do you know what I would have done if a Democratic President announced he was going to Peking?"

"Dick, please lower your voice. You'll wake up the Secret Service men," the President said. "Things have changed since you were in charge. You see, the Chinese have the bomb. It's hard to ignore someone when they have the bomb. If we can build a bridge between America and China, it will give the Soviets something to worry about."

"I was going to speak to you about that," the old Nixon said. "I understand you're going to Moscow, too."

"That's correct. I will go to Moscow sometime after I go to Peking."

"Let me go to Moscow," the old Nixon begged. "I'd like to get Khrushchev in the kitchen again and really give him a piece of my mind."

"Dick, I don't know how to break this to you, but Khrushchev passed away. Besides, he hasn't been in charge for several years. There is a whole new team there. They have a good defense, and they have a very tough line."

"Okay, so let me go in your place. I'll point out the difference between their lousy system of government and our great capitalist society," the old Nixon said.

"I don't think it would have much meaning, Dick. The purpose of my trip to Moscow is to build bridges with the Soviets so the Chinese have something to worry about."

"You've gone soft," the old Nixon cried. "The only thing the Commies understand is strength. You have to nuke 'em, before they nuke us."

"Dick, it's easy to say that when you're not President of the United States. But I want to go down in history as the man who gave America a generation of peace."

"You amaze me," the old Nixon said. "I never thought I'd see the day when a Nixon would be talking peace with Godless Communists."

"Look, I'm very busy," the President said. "Is there anything else you wanted to discuss?"

"Yes, there is. How come you let the American Bar Assn. shaft you on your Supreme Court appointments?"

"I don't know what you're talking about," the President said. "It was always my intention to appoint Powell and Rehnquist to the court."

"Who are you kidding? This is me, Tricky Dick, you're talking to. You came up with some of the most mediocre candidates in the country, and they ran all over you. You looked worse than the New York Giants against the Philadelphia Eagles last week."

The President's face went red. "You sure know how to hurt a guy."

Going C.O. In The Stockade

By JOHN STRIKER

If Saul of Tarsus were to have a sudden conversion today, say on the road to Fort Dix, rather than Damascus, he would probably spend weeks answering questionnaires, parrying with psychiatrists, confessing to chaplains, arguing with hearing officers and, quite possibly, pulling time in the stockade. For last spring, in Ehlert v. United States, the Supreme Court turned "late" C.O.s over to the tender mercies of the military.

Under Ehlert if your beliefs crystallize after you receive an induction order, but before actual induction, the army will sit in judgement of your conscience. As of October 19, a newly revised DoD Directive (1300.6) governs military processing of the late crystallizer. He must file application for discharge within 72 hours after induction.

After filing, the C.O. is sent to a psychiatrist. The assumption is that anyone who seeks discharge as a C.O. may be suffering from a psychiatric or characterological disorder. (In all likelihood, this message is not lost upon the isolated young man, who senses certain odds mounting against him.)

Next, the chaplain takes his turn. If a C.O. is unresponsive or uncooperative, the chaplain and the psychiatrist will note this in their reports. (Lack of cooperation reflects unfavorably upon a C.O.'s sincerity.)

Finally a hearing is conducted by an officer of the rank of captain--or lieutenant in the navy--or higher: The C.O. has the right to counsel--but only at his own expense. He can also present witnesses--providing he can secure their attendance. A verbatim transcript will be made--if the C.O. can pay for its production. Inevitably these conditional rights will take their collective toll--especially since the hearing will often be conducted at a great distance from the C.O.'s friends and resources.

Of course, while this whole procedure and a final decision are pending, the C.O. must satisfactorily perform military duties assigned to him. If he does not, then, military discipline and the stockade may become a real threat.

The threat is heightened by the unavoidable antagonism between the C.O. and a totally inhospitiable environment. As Mr. Justice Douglas lamented in his dissent from Ehlert: "In my time every conscientious objector was 'fair game' to most top sergeants who considered that he had a 'yellow streak' and there fore was a coward or un-American."

Justice Douglas recounted the story of one C.O. who wound up in the stockade, where a sergeant "frisked" him: "I spread out against the canvas. He started kicking me and yelling, 'spread out a--hole.' He kept kicking me and yelling until I fell down and then said, 'what's wrong with you pussy can't you stand up--get up.' I stood up and he said 'spread out Doddamit.' He started kicking me again.... He then pushed my face into the canvas, slapped my neck and arms, punched me in the sides, yanked the crotch of my dungarees painfully between my legs, slapped and pinched my legs and said, 'alright now stand at attention....

"After much more harassment I went back to my cell and I heard a man coughing and then a Corporal yelling at him to shut up. Two other Corporals joined in harassing the man and when he couldn't stop coughing they pulled him out of the cell and made him dive on a cup on the floor pretending it was a grenade. They got several other men out of their cells and had them all diving on the cup with the coughing man on the bottom each time."

Of course, Justice Douglas did point out: "What (happens) in the barracks or in the detention center is ... not the measure of what would transpire at the hearings. But the military mind is educated to other values; it does not reflect the humanistic, philosophical values most germane to ferreting out First Amendment claims that are genuine."

During the recent draft debate in the congressional conference committee, the Senate conferees proposed an amendment that would have prohibited induction of late crystallizers; but the House conferees were adamant in their opposition. "Therefore," in the words of the conference report, "the Senate receded with the understanding that in unusual cases, local boards would have the discretionary authority of extending to such registrants a hearing on their late claim if the circumstances so warranted."

Despite this quaint understanding on the part of the Senators, the claims of late crystallizers may not be considered by draft boards under current operating procedure (Local Board Memorandum No. 111(2)). As a result, a C.O. who does not prepare himself, and file his claim before the last minute, may find himself spiritually, at least, behind enemy lines.

Joint Responsibility

To the Editor:

Much of the debate at last Thursday's Faculty Senate meeting centered around whether or not students should have a say in faculty personnel decisions. Many faculty senators were, of course, adverse to this happening. They consider personnel policy the responsibility of solely the faculty. It would seem that they would keep students out of the system that decides who gets tenure, merit increments, and the general benefits from being a good faculty member. The exclusion of students excludes the only people who can truly say which professor is a good teacher and counselor and which professor isn't.

The next question that arises is the role good teaching plays in making personnel decisions. There are a number of devises that can be used to find the good teachers, and it is important that it be done. Some may think that it is sufficient that the results of the Teacher-Course Evaluation be used in personnel decisions, but it is equally important that the representatives of that opinion (the students themselves) be present and voting when the decisions are made. Of course, this is not to mention the case of the professor who refuses to have his course evaluated, or the one who refuses to have the results used by the personnel committee. Who are the representatives of good teaching in those cases?

There are approximately six criteria on which faculty are judged, these being: 1) Teaching; 2) Counseling; 3) Research; 4) Service; 5) Extension Work; 6) Professional and Scholarly activities and recognition. Students are clearly the experts in judging two of the six criteria, and have a superficial knowledge in the other four. Faculty have an expertise in judging four of the six and have a superficial knowledge in the other two. Students, then, would not be detrimental to a personnel committee, but rather would add a needed perspective to the committee. Students are the ones most directly affected by a professor who has tenure and is a poor teacher; students are the ones that are most directly affected by a poor teacher who may receive merit increases. The affects of a professor who does poor research, little service or extension work, and is unrecognized in his profession are borne by the entire institution. No one person feels the load that must be carried because of the incompetence of this single person. A poor teacher, on the other hand, robs the students in his class of a truly enriching educational experience. No one can replace the time lost because a teacher wasn't doing his job well, and the loss will not be shared by an entire institution to make the load lighter. The students, who are here only for a short four years, have been harmed by that professor because they haven't gotten their money's worth.

Students, therefore, have a great stake in tenure decisions, decisions which affect their immediate academic lives. It is the joint responsibility of the faculty and students to insure that the quality of the University of Massachusetts grows and is enhanced by the faculty; it is the joint responsibility of the faculty and students to insure the highest quality in teaching, since that is the prime function of the institution. I would therefore submit that instead of arguing who has the sole responsibility for the quality of the University, that we recognize the expertise that each other possesses and benefit from it.

We Can Pray

To the Editor:

On Friday of this week the AEC and the Pentagon, backed by the rest of the military-nuclear pigs, are setting off a nuclear blast 250 times larger than the Hiroshima atomic bomb and larger than any previous test. This is despite overwhelming evidence of reports from scientists that the blast may have hazardous effects on the environment. An earthquake, a tidal wave and radiation pollution are all possible results of the blast, not only to our country but to others also, this being but another instance of the U.S. making moves which are not in the best interest of other peoples who have no say in their fate. Nixon contends that the test is necessary for our national defense. There is speculation that the ABM system for which the test is being done will be obsolete in a few years under the current plans for further nuclear expansion. He maintains that we need the test to remain in a position of strength to bargain at the SALT talks. I feel that the most favorable position we could be in is to show the rest of the world that we mean business by taking the initial step now toward disarmament. The dangers of proceeding far outweigh any danger of cancelling the blast.

The blast is scheduled to go off this week so it is probably too late to do anything. However it will be fought in the courts by environmental groups right up to the last minute. We can pray for at least a delay. I ask you the people to make your concern heard in order to stop this tragic sin against man. Please send a telegram or a postcard today to the President. Only he can stop Amchitka.

Vote Note

To the Editor:

I think it is imperative that I clear up a point that you made concerning the date of the next register-in on the campus.

First of all, the registrars have not stated yet, as a body, that they would come onto campus. They will be meeting this Thursday to make that decision.

The coalition has offered the registrars the date of November 18, not November 14, as the date for the next register-in. This topic will also be discussed this Thursday night by the registrars.

I did say to your Collegian reporter that it seemed very likely that the registrars would come to campus on the 18th of November, but that was all.

I don't want the registrars or anyone else to think that the coalition through me or anyone else has stated that they will be here on the 18th. However, I feel, that there is, certainly, "sufficient" reason for them to come back to campus November 18th, i.e. the two thousand people at the McGovern speech.

In closing, I would like to say that while the students of this campus are waiting for the registrars to return, they may register to vote at the Town Hall from 8:30-4:30 Monday-Friday. The only requirement is that you have been a resident of Amherst for at least six (6) months and you are 18 years of age or older. You may switch your registration from anywhere else to Amherst simply by informing the registrars when you do register.

Fall Guys

To the Editor:

We would like to protest the decision of the SUG Board on Thursday, October 28th concerning the escalator slide in the Campus Center. Owing to several accidents, the most serious of which involved a thirteen-year-old boy who may be paralyzed as a result, the SUG Board is obligated to close down the slide. However, they feel enough students will protest this decision, that they must provide an alternative to the escalator slide. This involves $2000 of the student's money payed in the form of a $60 Campus Center fee which will be used to build a plastic tubular slide. We feel that this is a ridiculous waste of our money and would like to see more consideration given to the students' feelings in this matter.

Editorial Points

George McGovern seems to be an honest man with strong principles. But he doesn't have charisma so how can you vote for him?

The biggest problem that this country has to face is that the stakes of power are most often in the hands of the ground beef of the world.

Perhaps if Nixon realized that he could blow his chances for reelection on the Amchitka blast, he might do something.

Judging by the amount of candy floating around, it was a bad year for the little monsters.

Cold In Their Graves

To the Editor:

Mr. Baglione, in his letter published in last Thursday's Collegian, again proclaimed the ineptitude of mass demonstration as a method of ending U.S. involvement in Indochina. By satirizing the organizers of the movement as confused and virtually ineffectual, he hoped to demean a form of dissent which asks the American people to rely on the only force that hasn't sold them out. Themselves. Baglione's remarks concerning the Mobe's and other anti-war group's lack of organizing ability have no basis whatsoever. One need only consider the fact that three quarters of a million people demonstrated in Washington D.C. last April 24th, and there were only eight arrests, fewer than in any normal day in the nation's capital. Mr. Baglione has pointed out the fact that only 220 people attended the SMC Oct. 13th teach-in, while there are 20,000 students on campus. Attendance at the teach-in reflects in no way the anti-war sentiment on the campus. When the students passed judgment on the war in a referendum last spring, 94% voted for the immediate withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Indochina. They don't require a teach-in to tell them why we should be out now. The purpose of the teach-in was to build the Nov. 6th rally on Boston Common. About 60 people helped in the distribution of 20,000 leaflets in the surrounding areas that afternoon. Of course, Mr. Baglione doesn't believe in mass demonstration, he believes in the ballot box. Mr. Baglione, don't you realize that the vote has been used as a display of anti-war sentiment for the past seven years? What has it accomplished? Virtually nothing. In 1964, Lyndon Johnson was elected in order to defeat that warmonger, Barry Goldwater. In 1968, Richard Nixon was elected as "the man with a plan". Innumerable "doves" have been elected to both houses of Congress, yet the war continues. The annihilation of a subcontinent goes on. The cost of the war is an increasing burden placed on the working people. I'm not saying young Americans shouldn't vote, participation in mass demonstrations doesn't negate the right to vote. You've stated, Mr. Baglione, that "the pose they (anti-war movement) strike, is overly serious and silly". If the sentence made any sense in the first place, I would question how any one can be overly serious about saving lives. Does the idea of our nation at peace seem silly to you or was the word just thrown in to add an air of sophistocation? You speak of reality. You say reality mocks the demonstration tactics of the anti-war movement. Just whose reality are you refering to? Your own Mr. Baglione, here at UMass, sitting in the Collegian Office? Or the reality of the people of Southeast Asia, who every day of their lives face the possibility of death, who see their homes destroyed, and their land defoliated and poisoned by the 100 tons of explosives dropped by American aircraft every hour of every day. When was the last time you were faced with death Mr. Baglione? When was the last time your sister was raped? I think you had better reevaluate just what the reality of this war means. Your statements, in effect, have suggested to your readers that they should ignore Nov. 6th completely and wait until the next election. I'm sure the people of Indo-China, thousands of whom will be cold in their graves by 1973 would appreciate your timely and astute advice to the UMass community. But go ahead and use your vote, Mr. Baglione, stay home and watch a ball game next Saturday. Decide which "dove" you'll vote for next time around, then say a prayer that he's not lying like the others.

Abortion Information

Every Woman Should Know

(EDITOR'S NOTE: The following interview with Rev. Sam Johnson of the United Christian Foundation on the Clergy Consultation Service for problem pregnancies is being presented by the MDC as an educational service. Some questions on liberalizing abortion laws were raised at Senator George McGovern's lecture Monday night and we feel it is our responsibility to tell the public what the situation is now.)

QUESTION: What is Clergy Consultation Service, or CCS as it is more commonly known?

ANSWER: It is a national organization of clergymen whose purpose is to help women who are pregnant clarify in their own minds what they want to do about their pregnancy and then to suggest resources for whatever decision they make.

Q: Does this mean that if a woman decided to have an abortion you would be able to suggest a place where it could be done?

A: Yes. We know of clinics and hospitals in New York that are able to give medically safe, low cost abortions.

Q: What if she decides to do something else, say, see the pregnancy through and put the baby up for adoption?

A: CCS would still be able to help. We know of agencies that are set up for that purpose.

Q: How much does CCS charge for its services?

A: Nothing. It is strictly a service for women who have problem pregnancies.

Q: Do you get money elsewhere - e.g. the clinics in New York?

A: No. We operate solely on donations or funds from the church agencies for which we work.

Q: Do you advise the woman on what she should do?

A: No. We think that the decision can only be made by the woman. She is the only one who truly knows her situation. For us to try to tell her what the right decision is would be presumptuous. All we do is help her clarify what the issues are for her and what she wants to do about the situation. Then, when she has made the decision we will try to be supportive of her in it.

Q: Do you give any advice in terms of her life, especially her sex life?

A: You mean a sermon? No. We don't do that either. The last thing she needs at that point is advice on how to run her life.

Q: How much does an abortion cost?

A: If the pregnancy is not over 12 weeks from the first day of the last menstrual period it will not be over $150 and will probably be lower. If it is over 12 weeks, it will not be over $350.

Q: If a woman wanted to get into contact with you, how could she?

A: She could either call the Western Massachusetts CCS number which is (413) 586-3478 or, if she is on campus, she could call the United Christian Foundation at 545-2661 and ask for an appointment.

Q: Does she need to see a doctor before she sees you?

A: Yes. She really does but if she is having trouble making an appointment we can help her get one soon. She should also bring a doctor's note telling how many weeks pregnant she is and whether she is Rh negative or not.

Q: Approximately how many women do you see a week?

A: That is a hard question to answer because the number varies quite a bit from one week to the next. I would estimate approximately 8-10 women each week.

Q: Don't you think it is strange for a minister to be involved in this area?

A: Not really. It is an area that involves our concept of life and death as well as vocation in the sense of what we want to do with our lives. If a minister is not involved with those vocations, then he really should not be a minister. Moreover, the need for this service is great and when we started there was no one else ready to do it.

Q: For those women who have abortions or put up their babies for adoption, do you have any contact afterward?

A: Yes. We request that all women come back afterward. While most do it is not quite appropriate for us to go after them if they do not. Moreover, starting in November the CCS group on the campus which works out of the United Christian Foundation will be running 4-week support groups for women who have had abortions and would like to talk to other women who have had the same experience.

NOVEMBER 5
is the LAST day to drop a course WITHOUT the permission of an academic dean.

Placement Offers Carreer Planning

Submitted by JANET PEARLMAN STUDENT SENATE SERVICES COMMITTEE

The Placement Office has initiated a program to collect more Career Planning information for the students here on campus. It has formed a committee made up of administrators from Mental Health Service, The Placement and Career Planning Office, CASIAC, and the Counseling and Guidance Office who will go out to all the academic departments on campus and ask career planning kinds of questions. One administrator will go with one student to interview one dean at a given time. They will ask this type of question:

What are the potential careers that are available for your majors?

Do you advise your students to seek career planning advice in your department or at the Placement Office at Whitmore?

How does your department handle its career counselling? Does one faculty member have a stash of data? Are many well qualified to advise your majors? What is your department doing to enhance the opportunities for women and minorities?

They want students to come along to ask their kind of questions. They want this collection to be an effective one.

This is a special effort by this office at Whitmore to assess the total career planning service that now exists on campus. If it is successful, the Placement Office, headed by Mr. Morrissey, will have competent advice to give any major student who comes to them for help. If someone helps them, they will have made some order of the great madness of the "factory" school. They cannot do it alone, Kids. Please help them. If you want to help with the interviewing of faculty, please call or write Janet Pearlman, Chairwoman of the Placement Advisory Council at 465 Cance House, 546-5149 or leave your name in her senate mail box. Or, leave your name at the Placement Office in Whitmore. They will be glad to see you.

WE HAVE
SOLUTIONS TO EVERYDAY PROBLEMS.

In this instance, we are lifting a complete house to demonstrate a new concept of aerial delivery of assembly line-produced dwellings from factory to homesite.

But . . . this same Sikorsky® helicopter could have been effecting a rescue mission off a wallowing tanker in a North Sea gale. It could have been airlifting food and supplies to starving villagers in flood-ravaged Tunisia . . . or transporting equipment for on-the-spot control of off-shore oil pollution.

Obviously, what we're pointing out is the impressive record and adaptability of our helicopters in solving really important human problems.

There's much more to come in our world of exciting, advanced VTOL aircraft systems. For example, Heavy-Lift Skycranes™ and Tilt-Rotor Transports. And just around the corner are our High-Speed Commercial Transports—designed to ease short-haul mass transportation headaches.

Does this kind of engineering attitude stir your sense of responsibility and imagination? Then you should talk careers with us. There's ample opportunity for innovation in: autonavigation systems • avionics • computer technology • electronic test • materials engineering • mechanical analytical design • structures engineering • systems analysis . . . and more.

Female, minority group and veteran applicants especially welcome.

Consult your College Placement Office for campus interview dates—or—write to Mr. Leo J. Shalvoy, Professional and Technical Employment.

Have A Little Heart

It's ten miles, from the UMass Infirmary to Cooley Dickinson Hospital. It's a walk to raise money for the Heart Fund. It's happening November 13th (a Saturday). There's a table on the Concourse level of the Campus Center if you have any more questions. Or would you like to sponsor a Brother from Alpha Phi Omega or a Sister from Gamma Sigma Sigma-or even walk along with us. Look for the girls pictured above, drop by and have a little heart.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

A novelist whose life and work exemplified his zodiacal sign was F. Scott Fitzgerald. Born under Libra Sept. 24, 1896. Fitzgerald could tip the Scales from the beautiful to the ludicrous. The Libran features are symmetrical; there is an aura of glamor about natives of this sign. And there are numerous artists born under this Venus dominated group. Libra (the Scales) tips from one extreme to another, nothing halfway. That's the way it was with Fitzgerald, in his life and his writing.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Full moon position now emphasizes money, possessions, ability to collect what you need. Take calculated risk. Your worth will be appreciated. Communicate ideas. They will pay dividends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Feeling of having completed something worthwhile prevails. You are now free to express yourself to greater degree. Throw off inhibitions. Full moon is in your sign; judgment is on the beam.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Mystery is solved. What was puzzling gets benefit of greater light. Keep confidences. Don't reveal all you know. Some are testing, seeing if you can keep a secret. Key is discretion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent on how to serve and be served. Accept social invitation. Cement friendships. Live up to responsibilities and potential. Stick to familiar ground. One close to you does have answer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Advancement made, greater recognition comes you way. Utilize innate sense of showmanship. What was an obstacle becomes a stimulating challenge. You receive encouragement from professional superior.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lunar position accents journey; gain through written word. Look beyond the immediate. Perceive future possibilities. Strengthen philosophical concepts. Leo person plays prominent role.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Partner's assets come to light. Measure actions. Take it slow and easy. Don't force issues. Compile facts. Money gain indicated if careful. New procedure will prove beneficial.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Lie low; do more listening than talking. Permit mate, partner to take initiative. Review decisions. Some changes are necessary. Be aware of public relations. Check contracts, agreements.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Relative in transit may be responsible for extra work for you. Adhere to Golden Rule. But also take care of yourself in health area. Avoid extremes. Pace yourself. Improve relations with associates.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lunar aspect points to creative energy, romantic interests. Change of scenery due. You enjoy what you do and you receive meaningful compliments. Brighten surroundings. Take care with colors.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Put finishing touches on project. Secure property, valuable possessions. Come to terms with dissident family member. Harmony at home now is of paramount importance. Know it and act accordingly.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Emphasis on ideas, short journeys, notes which aid in getting puzzle pieces in place. See through sham; reject the superficial. Select quality. Don't be misled by wild claims. Go to source.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have strong creative urges which require an outlet. You are a combination of sensuality and the spiritual. You are subject to moods but you have talent for making others happy. If single, marriage is upcoming.

Women's Full Tennis Proves Successful Venture

By TERESA SNYDER

Tennis in the fall? Yes, behind Wope for the past two months there has been tennis in the fall, as the women's tennis team has played six matches, been rained out of one, and participated in a New England Tennis tournament.

A second tournament, this past weekend, featured six of the UMass netwomen, as the girls wrapped up their season with the mixed doubles tournament last Saturday morning.

Last year Sally Ogilvie, the coach for the women's team, collected her team in the spring, but found much difficulty, as did the men, in getting in matches between the snow and the rain. Thus came the fall tennis season, undoubtedly one of the better ideas to have been initiated here, and it would be wise for New England collegian tennis to take a hint from this.

Weeks ago the women opened their season with the New England Collegiate Tennis Tournament for women, which was held at Yale. Over 20 teams participated, with a girl from Yale eventually capturing the singles title. As far as UMass went, success was found in two of four matches, as both singles players failed to make it by round one, while two doubles combinations were dropped out of the draw in round number two. This was the second year that Coach Ogilvie has sent her team of women to the tournament, as the trip to Yale appeared to be worthwhile experience in preparation for the six matches ahead.

Mount Holyoke (both home and away), New Hampshire, Southern Connecticut, Springfield and Westfield were the scheduled opponents. The UMass-Springfield match was cancelled, that due to a day of rain, a week ago Monday.

In their first of three matches, UMass downed New Hampshire 5-3. Kathy Wrona led the victors with a first singles white-washing of 6-2, 6-0. Gretchen Shafer dropped a tough three setter, but UMass came back with the third, fourth and fifth singles positions. It was Jan Shockley winning 8-6, 6-4, and Carol Mottau coming out on top of a long three setter, 6-4, 7-9, 6-1. Finally Brenda Thomas gave UMass a 4-1 lead with an easy 6-2, 6-2 win.

In contrast with men's tennis, most women's team play different players in their singles and doubles positions. This is not a requirement for women's tennis, yet it is an unwritten rule, by which most of the New England team's go. Thus six new faces saw action in the three doubles matches with Bobbi Smith and Nancy Famiglietti producing the only doubles win for UMass with a 6-3, 6-8, 6-4 victory. The first doubles team of Janis Wertz and Pat Harvey, along with the third doubles pair of Bonnie Prince and Betty McGrath found the going much rougher.

Southern Connecticut was the other UMass prey as the limited court facilities at Southern Connecticut allowed for only three singles and two doubles matches. Here UMass made it a clean sweep, 5-0, as Wrona, Shafer and Shockley put their singles matches away in a hurry. Shafer and Shockley in fact had such little trouble, that they dropped but one game between them in two matches.

In the way of doubles Wertz and Harvey found a win by way of 6-4, 6-3, while Smith and Famiglietti came back from a first set loss for a 3-6, 6-1, 6-0win, to complete the shutout.

Of their three losses, one came at the hands of Westfield as a UMass "B" team dropped a five match, 3-2. With Westfield sweeping all three singles, UMass garnered their only points with Smith and Famiglietti taking first doubles, and Prince and McGrath taking second. Mottau, Thomas, and Denise Perrault were all unable to give UMass that one singles win, as both Mottau and Perrault took their opponents to three sets before losing.

The women's only losses at full strength came against Mt. Holyoke, a team that the women faced at home weeks ago, and at Mt. Holyoke last Wednesday. At UMass, the 5-3 loss saw convincing home team wins, as Wrona and Shafer took first and second singles respectively. But Wertz and Harvey, at first doubles, were the only other team to win for the hosts, while every one of the five Mt. Holyoke victories came in three set matches.

Successful was the women's fall tennis season, as beautiful weather earmarked the two month long session. Six matches and two tournaments made it a worthwhile fall for relatively inexperienced and skilled women's tennis squad.

Monday Practice...

The People Who Made It Happen

By EARLE BARROLL

There is nothing like a Monday football practice after a Saturday win. And for that matter there's nothing like a Monday practice to get a better insight into the game itself from the people who made it happen...the coaches and the players themselves.

So that's just what I did yesterday afternoon by venturing down to Alumni Stadium to take in the practice and find out just what did happen outside of the socring itself.

Daily Collegian

Practice was light consisting of a mile run, execution for the punting and kicking units and heavy windsprints to wrap up the field work before a Vermont-UMass movie in the lockerroom.

Head Cocah Dick MacPherson felt his team has showed a tremendous character in coming back from adversity to put together "two strong performances in the last two weeks."

"Our attitude has been fine as it has been all season," said the coach, "we have never let down even though others have. We have had to overcome a lot and we did."

He was also pleased with fleet running back Paul Metallo who rushed for 128 yards and now gives UMass the speed back Mac has been looking for.

It was right at the beginning of the third quarter that the floor began to slip from under the Redmen on Saturday. They had eleven penalties, interceptions, fumbles...you name it and they had it.

Mac was substituting freely at this time and this caused for the lack of smoothness in the attack and even on defense where he subbed execution way not smooth.

"Many of the guys we put in were a bit nervous as they had not played a lot so far this year," explained the first year coach.

This Saturday the Redmen host Holy Cross, now 4-2 and drawing a lot of print on the strength of a surprising season.

Mac noted they had a fine quarterback and two real strong running backs and also let it be known his men would be ready...this will be a big game.

Piel Pennington was throwing on the sideline to Marty Evans a reserve signal caller. He played the first half and was instrumental in the early Redman burst but was unable to come out in the second half due to a sore shoulder.

Piel explained this as "a pinched nerve in the neck that went right to the arm. The shoulder just wouldn't hold up so they gave Mark (Tripucka) some needed work.

"The shoulder won't heal until it's operated on at the end of the season and I won't be able to throw effectively with the harness that I'm wearing."

He also gave praise to the offensive line that kept him well protected from the pass rush. "They did the job not only this week but also last week against UConn."

Rich Cronin was just coming off the field after a workout on the kickoff team. He had his best game Saturday in which he looked like the big back UMass has been looking for.

"If it goes just as good next week, I'll be real happy," he said of his performance. "It gave me a lot of confidence in myself."

Cronin is a converted linebacker and has been used mainly as a blocking back for Pennington and Metallo this year. He's a real good one when it comes to this. "I'm used to hitting people...I love it."

Walter O'Malley caught his first touchdown pass of the season on Saturday on a play he called "a sprint out action pass".

It was simple according to him. "I just got by the defensive back and it was like gravy."

Walt is a Worcester product and the Holy Cross game means just that much more to him. He remembers when he and Bill DeFlavio played for St. John's High against St. Peter's which had Steve Greaney, DeFlavio's line mate, on it on Thanksgiving at Fitton Field, the home of Crusader football.

DeFlavio himself remembers those days and before he go in a few sprints he said, "this one is something a little more special."

On the way to the locker room he showed his pleasure over the performance of the defense that held Vermont to minus 58 yards on the ground and a hundred yards total offense.

"We hurt them with our quickness," he remembered. "As for myself I tried to confuse their offensive line by lining up in the gap or head on the center, as they were trying to double and triple team me."

The end result speaks for itself: they were not successful at stopping Bill and another opposing coach called him the best defensive tackle he's seen this year.

The heart of the UMass offensive, center Dave Levine, noted that the excellent shape of the offensive line was the key factor in the early surge that produced a quick 17-0 lead.

"Vermont was noticeably slowing down to us. They were not substituting and we moved them pretty well and it was not until they began to substitute in the second half that they contained us to some degree."

He also said that the practices have been great during the past couple of weeks and for him "I'm starting to have some fun."

And as the sun set I just meandered back to Southwest for another meal at Berkshire Dining Commons and another long trek to the Collegian...with a memory of a Monday football practice.

A CHAMPION'S STRIDE-It was a big win for coach Ken O'Brien and his cross country team when they came from a seemingly questioned filled beginning to a thundering victory at the Yankee Conference Championship at Storrs, Connecticut on Saturday.

On the left are freshman Bill Gillin (68) and junior Rick Barry (61) as they drive through the mile mark in good position on the tight UConn course. Gillin was the second UMass runner to finish and the fourth to complete the 4.7 mile trek in the entire field. Barry placed nineteenth in the field of 53.

On the right is Peter Crisci, the surprise of the season for UMass cross country. A big question mark before the season began, Crisci came on to run a consistent season with not one bad race and finished as the third Redman and fifth overall in the Conference meet.

Tomorrow these three can be seen along with their teammates in a home meet against Central Connecticut and Coast Guard beginning at 3:30 p.m.

Be there early to get a good seat in the Orchard and see one of the powerhouses in New England cross country. (MDC photos by Rick Tashjian.)

Captures 60% Of Votes Cast

Boston Mayor White Wins Re-Election

BOSTON (AP)-Boston Mayor Kevin H. White won a second four-year term Tuesday night, apparently collecting more than 60 per cent of the vote in a contest with U.S. Rep. Louise Day Hicks, (D-Mass.)

Complete unofficial police returns from all of the city's 252 precincts gave White 112,875 and Mrs. Hicks 70,214.

"The people in Boston have spoken in the only way people in a democratic society collectively can," White said in a victory statement.

"They say they support all the things we have stood for. The battle we've waged has been waged almost six months. It's been fought to give this city a sense of purpose and the people in it a sense of hope."

White said the outcome demonstrated that he "still maintains support among blacks and whites." He added that his victory margin "will make my job for the next four years easier because that approval gives us confidence."

For Mrs. Hicks, a conservative who strongly supported the concept of the neighborhood school and vigorously opposed busing to achieve racial balance in the schools, her second defeat for mayor was a bitter pill. She lost to White in 1967 by a narrow margin.

BOSTON MAYOR KEVIN H. WHITE

Mrs. Hicks' political future appeared to be further dimmed by a pending redrawing of congressional district lines.

A bill realigning the 12 Massachusetts congressional districts is awaiting routine enactment by both houses of the state legislature before going to Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

As the measure now stands, Mrs. Hicks' 9th district would lose some of the Boston areas that have supported her and would pick up some suburban towns where her strength could be expected to be less.

Mrs. Hicks told supporters at the Statler Hilton ballroom: "Thank you very much for the wonderful help you've given in a frustrating campaign. To Mayor Kevin White my deepest thanks for all the wonderful things that are going to be beginning in Boston.

"He has been given a second chance. I hope he gives the people of Boston a second chance...I pledge my support to Kevin White."

The mayor at a brief news conference at his headquarters at the Sheraton Boston, said, "We ran a positive campaign in the sense that we never struck out at Mrs. Hicks."

"The bigger the margin, the more satisfying," the mayor said, adding that "the vote doesn't mean that 100 per cent of the people think we're right. But it proves that we've held the city together."

Mrs. Hicks told her supporters that despite her defeat for mayor, "I'm still in Congress and I'll be in Congress from the 9th Congressional District wherever that district goes." She added, "It seems to me that all of those people have moved to the suburbs. I guess I'll just have to go and find them."

Asked her view of why she lost, she replied: "What we needed in this campaign was lots of money, and what we needed was to find Kevin White and we just couldn't find him."

Unofficial police returns from 240 of 252 precincts gave White 105,745 votes and Hicks 66,258.

City Council candidates for Boston who won are Moakley, Ianella, Piemonte, O'Neil, Kerrigan, O'Leary, Dicara, McDonough, Tierney.

The voting, on a cloudy day of showers, was slowed by a last-minute snag over ballots cast by newly enfranchised young voters. Challenges at the polls forced some of the young voters to cast paper ballots and record their names on them.

One of White's aides claimed the challenges were coming from Mrs. Hicks' supporters, but she denied this.

"Don't you see what they're doing? They're just trying to stir it up," she said. "I have no challengers and no checkers. No one has any authorization to challenge or to check."

The challenges, alleging improper registration, occurred chiefly in the Back Bay and Allston districts where the large college student population was enfranchised by the lowering of the voting age to 18.

A ruling by the Massachusetts attorney general recently held that students could vote where they attended school, as long as they resided there.

At one polling place on the Boston University campus, at least 103 youthful voters had to identify themselves on paper ballots because of challenges, all of them signed by one person.

A City Hall aide claimed the challengers were identified as Hicks' supporters because they had to sign the paper ballots along with the challenged voters.

"We know her people," he said.

Such ballots, said an election official, would be held aside and counted into the final tally at the end of the day. The vote would stand until such time as the challenges were proven, he said.

"Fad" Has Endured Test Of Time

SIMS Enjoys Increasing Popularity

What started as a campus phenomena and fad several years ago has quietly endured. Students International Meditation Society, the student branch of International Meditation Society, now exists on campuses, public schools, and communities across the United States, Canada, Europe and India.

The organization's primary purpose is to make available to as many people as possible the knowledge and applicationof the practice of Transcendental Meditation as taught by the Indian sage, Maharishi Mahesh Yogi. Because the technique is now attracting the interest of great numbers of people including scientists, scholars and educators, the movement is rapidly expanding in a variety of directions.

An expansive Teacher Training Program is now in progress to supply the increased demand for lectures and courses in Transcendental Meditation. Simultaneously, interdisciplinary research in the Science of Creative Intelligence is proceding through student, faculty and professional researchers. SCI is the systematic inquiry into the source of all knowledge in order to provide a unifying wholeness, to all branches of learning.

What this implies to science is that Creative Intelligence obeys natural laws like every aspect of nature and can therefore be explained and understood by the various disciplines of modern science. Several leading universities including Yale, Goddard, Stanford, and the University of Colorado are already offering such a course for credit. Plans are now being made to establish an SCI course in the Five-college-area.

The lab work or practical aspect of the Science of Creative Intelligence is the same as what is offered at Introductory Courses by trained teachers. Transcendental Meditation is a simple, natural technique which allows the conscious mind systematically to experience finer states of mental activity until it "transcends" the finest state of activity and arrives at the source of thought or the field of pure creative intelligence.

It is a process of direct experience rather than intellectual analysis. Meditators results have been the primary reason for the rapid growth of the movement. Reports of increased emotional stability, mental clarity, physical energy, and productive activity are the most common endorsements to the claims that "Transcendental Meditation unfolds full mental potential, provides deep rest and unfolds life to a natural state of freedom."

Various aspects of science are now in the process of scientifically exposing the effects and implications Transcendental Meditation has on the Human nervous system. Major physiological studies show that EEG, oxygen consumption, cardiac output, blood lactate, and skin resistance are beneficially changed during TM.

The current iddue of TIME magazine includes an article concerning the scientific studies done on TM, in particular, its possibilities in eliminating or at least alleviating hypertension. Major areas of research also show the possibilities of TM being an effective deterant in drug abuse. Transcendental Meditation has also been considered and requested to be taught in prisons and mental institutions.

The UMass branch of SIMS is growing proportionally to the International organization. Now considering the Western Massachusetts coordinating center, it offers lectures, courses and information to area high schools, colleges, civic groups and anyone interested. There are now over 200 meditating students and several faculty members at UMass.

The Space Allocation Committee is providing SIMS with office space where meditators and interested people may obtain information and literature about Transcendental Meditation. In addition, Regular checking, which is recommended for meditators, is held every Sunday from 2-5 in room 904-908 C.C. Group meditation and advanced lectures are provided every Sunday everning 7-10, 904-908 C.C. Room 801 C.C. is open every day from 4-6 P.M. for any individual's meditation.

Until office space is concretely given to SIMS, information on lectures and courses may be obtained by calling 253-7246. There will be an introductory lecture on Transcendental Meditation on November 3 in the Campus Center room 162 at 12 noon and 8 p.m.

New Draft Classifications Created

WASHINGTON (AP) - A new draft classification was created Tuesday for registrants too young to be drafted-the 18-year-olds-and older men with such high lottery numbers they're unlikely to be called into military service.

Selective Service laid down also new ground rules for personal appearances before draft boards for a young man to make "a fair representation of his claim" for exemption or deferment. At the same time there's a built-in brake designed to keep protesters from overloading the boards with appeals.

Deputy Director Daniel J. Cronin said the new "holding" classification, 1H is designed to enable the service to "do business with the people likely to be drafted and let the other people go about their business."

The rule changes put the draft operation in line with the new draft law, including the phasing out of college, trade school and junior college deferments. They become automatically effective in early December, 30 days after they are published in the Federal Register, as required by the new law.

A major change not required by law wipes out the catchall 1Y classification that lumped together men with borderline physical disqualification, homosexuals, criminals and a variety of others. From now on a man in this area will be given 4F as physically unfit, 1A-RR1, meaning being adjudicated, or 1A-AO, meaning acceptance undermined.

Rents Remain Frozen

Rents will remain frozen after Nov. 15 until such time as the national Price Commission modifies the rent freeze, Albert D O'Connor, New England regional director of the President's Office of Emergancy Preparedness (OEP), has announced.

O'Connor said he was issuing the statement as the result of numerous complaints to OEP from tenants charging that they have been notified of rent increases as of Nov. 15, when Phase 1 of the economic freeze ends.

There are only two exceptions to the rent freeze, O'Connor said If leases contain tax escalator clauses and new taxes were legally effective before Aug. 15, landlords may pass the tax increases on to tenants on a dollar-for-dollar basis. They may also increase rents if they have made substantial capital improvements.

In the case where a tenant does not have a tax escalator clause, the increase in real estate taxes may be passed on only if it has been the customary, documented practice of the landlord in each of the three previous years.

(Editor's note: the office of Richard M. Howland, Student Senate Attorney, has asked that students take note that the rent freeze still applies.)

College Enrollment Up 5%

There are about nine million students enrolled this year in the nation's colleges, an increase of about 5 per cent over 1970, Dr. Garland G. Parker of the University of Cincinnati reported this week.

Dr. Parker, a national authority on college enrollments, makes an annual enrollment study for the educational journal, School and Society. The final study will be released in December.

His preliminary report said that an "enrollment explosion" seemed to be subsiding before this year. He added, however, that "indications are that part-time enrollments may be down noticeably, reflecting depressed economic conditions and rising tuition rates."

He said that graduate enrollments could be expected to hold their own or increase in most fields.

Dr. Parker, in reporting the increase in full-time enrollments, said, "undoubtedly a relatively calm and peaceful campus in the 1970-71 academic year provided inducement for more students to enter or return to college."

VISTA And Peace Corps Recruitment Starts

For the first time, representatives of Peace Corps and VISTA will be on the UMass campus together to discuss their programs with potential applicants.

Both Peace Corps and VISTA are now part of a new agency called ACTION and joint recruiting is one of the most visible effects of the merger.

"VISTA and Peace Corps are still the same," observed Travis Gamble, former Peace Corps Volunteer, "and they will retain their own identities."

Gamble feels joint recruiting for VISTA and Peace Corps is a good idea. "It is surprising how many college students are interested in both Peace Corps and VISTA They want to look at both programs before making a decision."

On the UMass campus, the VISTA and Peace Corps reps are especially interested in speaking to engineers, education, and agriculture majors, although students with other skill backgrounds can also apply.

According to Gamble, UMass has been a high producer of volunteers for both VISTA and Peace Corps in the past. "Still, most of these applications come in through the mail and not at the recruiting table. We're hoping to change that this year since we'll be located near the flow of student traffic."

The representatives of Peace Corps and VISTA will be on campus Wednesday and Thursday, November 3-4 in the Campus Center on the second level and also in Stockbridge Hall. Interested students may stop by the booths anytime during the day between 9:00 a.m. and 4:p.m.

Police To Study Drug Abuse

Atty. Gen Robert H. Quinn reports that the 15th Drug Abuse Education School will be held Nov. 8-18 in Amherst.

The school is offered to law enforcement officers and other interested citizens from Franklin, Hampshire and Hampden Counties. It will be held at Alumni Hall on Churchill St.

The two-week school, which has been in operation since March, 1970, is aimed at creating enlightened law enforcement and an awareness of the legal as well as the medical aspects of drug abuse.

Among the topics to be covered are: history and effects of the various drugs: the history of national and international drug traffic: treatment and rehabilitation: the news media and drug abuse: federal and state drug laws: The community approach to drug abuse.

Over 500 police officials from throughout the Commonwealth have graduated from the Attorney General's Drug Abuse Education School.

After completion of the basic course, an Advanced School is available to greater professionalize law enforcement officers in the critical areas of drug abuse.

Police officials and other interested individuals may apply to the school by requesting an application form from the Drug Abuse Section. Attorney General's Office, State House, Boston 02133

Job Forecast Bleak

College students who graduate during the remainder of this decade will face the bleakest employment outlook since before World War II, according to Herbert Bienstock, regional director of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the United States Department of Labor.

Speaking last week at the annual conference of the New York State Personnel and Guidance Association, at Lake Kiamesha, Bienstock cited projections by his bureau that indicate that 10.4 million jobs will be filled in the 1968-1980 period in categories normally filled by college graduates. During the same period, he said, about 10.5 million people with college degrees are expected to enter the labor market.

Bienstock suggested that in view of the near balance of supply and demand the best employment prospects would be enjoyed by those college graduates who focused their studies toward a vocation.

He said that students would find themselves at a disadvantage in the labor market if their studies were generalized, or were focused in a field like teaching, where the demand is not high.

He said it would be more necessary than before for students to know the employment outlook in their fields of interest, and he said that the close relationship between job supply and demand indicated a substantial need for expansion of vocational guidance at the college level.

Discussing other employment prospects, Bienstock said that most job openings in this decade will continue to be filled by individuals who are not college graduates. He said that eight of every 10 jobs to be filled in the 1970's would be open to individuals who have not attained college degrees.

In this category, he said, those who had focused their schooling toward a vocation would probably fare better.

Grad II Referrals Ready

Seniors and graduate students who completed the GRAD II student input forms to identify common categories between students and employers should visit the office of Career Planning and Placement, Room 239 Whitmore Administration Building, to pick up the student referral report listing the companies with which their credentials most nearly matched.

In this poor economic year the number of companies involved in the program is limited and therefore some will find that there were no matches with their particular degree, major and interest and the companies involved in the program. This does not mean a lack of employability but merely indicates that they do not meet the requirements of the companies involved.

Those with company matches should be sure to take interviews with these companies when they visit the campus, or write to those not visiting campus. Students with no matches should consult with a member of the Career Planning and Placement staff for advice and suggestions.

Four Killed In Army Training Flight Crash

FT. BENNING, Ga. (AP) — Two Army helicopters collided and crashed in flames yesterday. A public information officer said four persons were killed.

The crash occurred at Lawson Army Air Field, part of the sprawling infantry center here. Both aircraft-a UH1H "Huey" and an OH6-were on training flights.

Names of the dead were not immediately available.

An information officer said Pfc. Dave Morgan witnessed the crash and quoted him as saying he saw one helicopter losing altitude rapidly and dropping on the second helicopter.

He said there was a burst of flames when the helicopter descended below the tree line.

Amchitka Opposition

The Coalition for Environmental Quality will have a table on the concourse of the Campus Center today to help students show their concern and opposition to President Nixon concerning the nuclear test CANNIKIN to be exploded on the island of Amchitka in Alaska. Interested students will be asked to write a short note on post cards provided, which C.E.Q. will mail.

Selectmen Appoint Secretary

By CHARLIE BERKOW

The appointment of Mrs. Mary L. Yarrows as Secretary to the Board of Selectmen was announced today at the weekly Amherst Board of Selectmen meeting.

In other major business, the Board heard testimony from Deputy Police Chief Don Maia on the question of whether or not Amherst should join the Lower Pioneer Valley Police Mutual Aid Agreement, and placed the question on the agenda for Monday's meeting.

Mrs. Yarrows was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of the Board's long-time secretary, Eleanor R. Dunn. Recent reorganization followed Mrs. Dunn's retirement has changed the position to a full-time one. Mrs. Yarrows has been employed as secretary to the Zoology Department at UMass since 1961. She is expected to assume her new duties November 15.

The Lower Pioneer Valley Police Mutual Aid Agreement is a plan for regional cooperation in the area of police service among 44 communities in the Valley. Twenty-four of these communities presently have no organized police service. The plan also calls for the creation of such inter-community organizations as a tactical squad and a regional investigating unit. The plan will be further discussed and acted upon when the Selectmen meet Monday night.

The Selectmen spent most of their time considering various license applications and passing the bills they had approved around the table for everyone to sign. Towards the end of the meeting, Selectman John P. Sullivan, Jr. suggested that the Selectmen have a secretary stamp their signatures on the decisions, to save them some time.

The Board also considered some traffic problems and approved the erection of a stop sign on the corner of Stony Hill and Aubinwood roads.

In last week's meeting, H. Hills Skillings, who has been a Selectman for 12 years, announced that he will not run for re-election in February. He said that the town and its problems were getting too big, and that being a Selectman took too much of his time. The Board granted permission for the erection of various telephone poles and the laying of certain power lines, and they dealt with minor traffic and licensing problems.

Manson Guilty In Two More Slayings

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Charles Manson, the clan leader already under sentence of death in the seven Sharon Tate murders, was convicted yesterday on two more counts of first-degree murder.

He was found guilty in the killings of Malibu musician Gary Hinman and one-time movie stuntman Donald J. "Shorty" Shea. Shea's body never has been found.

The prosecution contended both were slain within a month of the Tate slayings in August 1969. Although Manson already was a condemned man when the trial started last June, the district attorney said all charges against him would be prosecuted.

Manson, 36, had been evicted from the courtroom for most of his trial because of disruptive behavior.

The jury of eight men and four women deliberated more than 43 hours since receiving the case Oct. 21. Under California law, a separate penalty trial must be held to determine Manson's sentence. It was set to start at 9:30 a.m. Thursday by Superior Court Judge Raymond Choate.

Civil Rights Group Opposes Rehnquist

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Leadership Conference on Civil Rights decided Tuesday to oppose President Nixon's nomination of assistant Atty. Gen. William H. Rehnquist for the Supreme Court.

Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., counsel for the organization, said it took no position on Lewis F. Powell, Jr., a Richmond, Va., lawyer who is Nixon's nominee for a second vacancy on the court.

Rauh said opposition to Rehnquist is based on "his failure to show devotion to civil rights and his lack of support for the Bill of Rights."

A similar stand had been taken earlier by Americans for Democratic Action, a liberal organization of which Rauh is vice chairman.

Both ADA and the Leadership Conference, composed of more than 100 labor, civil rights and church groups, have asked to be heard at Senate Judiciary Committee hearings starting Wednesday.

Committee sources said they expect Rehnquist to be called for questioning ahead of Powell.

So far there has been no sign of any organized opposition to Senate confirmation of Powell, the third Southerner Nixon has attempted to place on the Supreme Court.

Judge Clement F. Haynsworth, Jr., of South Carolina and Judge G. Harrold Carswell of Florida were rejected by the Senate for a previous vacancy on the court.

The American Bar Association's Committee on the Federal Judiciary, which has investigated Powell's and Rehnquist's qualifications at the request of the Senate panel, has not yet disclosed its findings.

It is expected to submit its report to Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, shortly before the start of the heaings.

Powell, 64, a millionaire who formerly was president of the ABA, was nominated by Nixon to succeed the late Hugo L. Black.

Rehnquist, 47, was nominated to succeed John M. Harlan, who retired from the court because of ill health. Rehnquist practiced law in Phoenix, Ariz., before his appointment to the Justice Department in 1969.

ZPG Sponsors Lecture

Tonight at 8:00 p.m., Stephen Keese, Vasectomy Councellor, will give a lecture sponsored by the Pioneer Valley Chapter of Zero Population Growth, in Room 106 Thompson Hall on the UMass Campus. Keese is associated with the Boston Family Planning Project.

The topic of his lecture will be methods and effects of male and female sterilization. A question and answer period will follow. The lecture and discussion are open to the public free of charge.

After attending Harvard College, Mr. Keese served with the Peace Corps in Brazil for two years and then on the Peace Corps training staff in California. He has also served as an interpreter for USAID at Harvard and Tufts Medical School. Since January 1971, Mr. Keese has been a Community Educator with the Boston Family Planning Project.

Sec. Rogers Decries Defeat

Key Democrats Oppose Nixon Foreign-Aid Plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chairman of the Appropriations Committee joined two other key Senate Democrats Tuesday in opposing President Nixon's plan for a temporary rescue of the foreign-aid program.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers, meanwhile, joined the administration outcry against Senate defeat of the aid bill. He told reporters the action weakened Nixon's international negotiating position and appealed to Congress for prompt action "to correct this damage that has been done."

The administration wants Congress to extend the present aid program at least one month beyond the Nov. 15 expiration of existing authority.

Sen. Allen Ellender, (D-La.,) chairman of the Appropriations Committee, said it will refuse to go along with any temporary extension unless there appears to be progress on authorizing "a shortened, revised version of our aid operations."

In that case, the Louisiana Democrat added, he might agree to extension of the existing program until Dec. 1.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, (D-Ark.,) chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, said, "I think we can" draw up a revised aid authorization measure by late this week or early next week.

Such a bill would likely be heavy on humanitarian assistance, such as the $250 million item for Pakistani refugees in the defeated bill, and light on military aid.

Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana told newsmen the existing fund of more than $4 billion in the foreign aid pipeline could be used to pay salaries and administrative costs after Nov. 15 until a new aid bill is approved.

The secretary of state met with President Nixon at the White House for an hour Tuesday morning and later told newsmen the Senate action is "one of the factors that will have to be considered" in mapping future U.S. troop withdrawals from Vietnam.

Asked about the effect of aid defeat on Vietnam troop withdrawals, Rogers said:

"I would not want to leave the impression the President's decision is going to be directly affected, but certainly it will be one of the factors that will have to be taken into consideration as we look down the road in the next year or two."

"The only thing they haven't said defeat of the bill would do," Sen. Stuart Symington, (D-Mo.,) told reporters when apprised of Rogers' statement, " is cause smallpox."

Rogers made these other assertions after his meeting with the President:

—The Senate action "weakens the President's powers in negotiations throughout the world" and deals a "damaging blow to the Nixon Doctrine."

'Protective Reaction'

Navy Jet Attacks Battery Within No. Vietnam

SAIGON (AP) — A U.S. Navy jet darted into North Vietnam Tuesday to attack a battery that fired two missiles at it while bombing inside Laos, the U.S. Command reported.

The U.S. plan was not hit in the missile attack and the results of its strike at the North Vietnamese site, 105 miles north of the demilitarized zone, were not immediately known.

The command said the missiles came up at the Navy A6 Intruder from North Vietnamese territory while a bombing mission was underway over the Ho Chi Minh supply trail. It was the 70th so-called "protective reaction" strike by U.S. war planes inside North Vietnam this year.

The command also announced that enemy gunners had shot down two more American helicopters Monday in the central highlands, raising total U.S. aircraft losses in the war to 8,004.

American helicopter gunships killed 24 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops in the Mekong Delta, 140 miles southwest of Saigon, but a battlefield lull persisted elsewhere in Vietnam.

An American crewman was wounded in one of the Monday plane crashes-that of an OH6 light observation helicopter 17 miles west of Pleiku. A UH1 transport went down 34 miles northwest of Kontum City with no casualties.

The low level of fighting in South Vietnam prompted military commanders to divert U.S. B52 bombers to targets along the Ho Chi Minh trail in eastern Laos and storage depots in eastern Cambodia.

There was speculation that the South Vietnam lull might be linked of U.S. Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird's scheduled arrival Wednesday night. He is to spend three days in Saigon, conferring with top U.S. and Vietnamese officials.

Sources predicted that Laird would outline President Nixon's plans for speeding up U.S. disengagement from Vietnam-possibly a cutback from the current 196,000 to a 40,000-50,000-man residual force by July 1.

In Cambodia, the government reported 291 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong killed in a campaign at Prakham on the northeastern front. Eight enemy battalions withdrew after failing to seize a key point on Highway 6.

Prakham is one of the rear strongpoints for the 20,000 Cambodian troops of Operation tchenla.

Peking Chooses U.N. Delegation

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP) — The People's Republic of China has named two men knowledgeable in Soviet and American affairs to lead it into the United Nations.

Peking sent word Tuesday that a deputy foreign minister, Chiao Kuan-hua, will head its delegation to the General Assembly. Its ambassador to Canada, Huang Hua, will be permanent U.N. representative and delegate to the Security Council.

A U.S. delegation spokesman said they are expected "very soon." Other diplomats have speculated that it will be Thursday or Friday.

Chiao is 57. Since 1969 he has been China's chief negotiator in border disputes with the Soviet Union. He visited Moscow with Premier Chou En-lai in November 1964, just after the fall of Nikita S. Khrushchev.

Huang, 58, became ambassador to Ottawa last July amid speculation that he would put his Western knowledge to work in contacts with the United States.

Ole Algard, Norway's ambassador to Peking and a General Assembly delegate, called Chiao "a perfect choice for China to send here."

"He is a very able, very intelligent diplomat," said Algard. "That the Chinese have chosen him reflects what we have thought all along-that China intends to play an active and responsible role in the United Nations."

Huang will be deputy head of the 10-member delegation to the assembly. Other members of the delegation were listed as Fu Hao, Hsiung Hsiang-hui, Chen Chu, Tang Ming-chao, An Chin-yuan, Wang Hai-yung, Hsing Sung- yi and Chang Yung-kuan.

An East Asian scholar at Columbia University, Donald W. Klein, said Chiao was the "best possible man" and Huang the "next best."

The U.S. spokesman said the American mission "will be dealing with the Chinese on a direct basis."

Asked whether this meant the United States would maintain quasidiplomatic relations with Peking through the U.N. missions, he replied affirmatively.

U.N. activities have moved at a slow pace since the decision last week to seat Communist China and oust the government on Taiwan.

One major issue that cannot be resolved until the Chinese arrive is the selection of a successor to U Thant, who plans to step down next month as secretary-general.

There also is speculation about the possibility China will enter the lagging Big Four talks on the Mideast. A British spokesman said his delegation had no desire to exclude the Chinese from the talks, but noted that the talks were not directly connected with the Security Council.

The announcement of the Chinese delegation came as Sen. George McGovern an aspirant for the Democratic presidential nomination, told U.N. correspondents he supported the decision to seat Peking.

"I don't think the United States was rebuked," the South Dakotan said. "I think our President was ill-advised to interpret it the way he did."

Plot Similar To One 366 Years Old

British Parliament Opens Despite Bomb Threat

LONDON (AP)- Queen Elizabeth II opened a new session of Parliament on Tuesday, ignoring a threatened gunpowder plot 366 years after the Guy Fawkes tried vainly to blow up the palace.

Protected by a massive security operation that turned Parliament into a citadel, the monarch drove calmly through London streets to the Palace of Westminster and amid pomp and pageantry outlined her government's lawmaking program for the coming year. This was featured by proposals to prepare Britain for membership of the European Common Market, and harsher penalties against criminals using violence.

But about the only detectable explosion in the precincts of Parliament was oral. It took place in a caucus of the opposition Labor party. Gunning for colleagues in their midst who back British entry into the Common Market left-wingers demanded that Labor seek to censure Prime Minister Edward Heath's government on the issue. The stormy meeting broke up without decision.

Then Labor's leader, former Prime Minister Harold Wilson, sailed into the attack as soon as the House of Commons went into formal session. He denounced the queen's speech-written for her by Heath and his Cabinet ministers-as "complacent, obsessional and wrong-headed."

The guard of 7,000 police and troops that ringed Queen Elizabeth has had no precedent in her 18-year reign. Fears of a terror-attack on Parliament lay behind it. Threats of an onslaught had come after two bombs damaged a 620-foot-high Post Office tower Sunday, and an army barracks Monday. Both were in downtown London.

Every building near Parliament was searched Monday night from rooftop to cellar by police. Motorists were checked, their cars searched Police launched with frogmen aboard patrolled the River Thames where it sweeps past Parliament.

Without being certain, British authorities said they suspected the bomb dangers came from members of the Irish Republican Army, battling against a Protestant majority in Northern Ireland to establish a united Irish state under Roman Catholic leadership.

Guy Fawkes' gunpowder plot of Nov. 5, 1605, also had its origins in the same religious rivalries.

Fawkes, a Protestant-turned-Catholic, was engaged to blow up the Houses of Parliament to foil the religious activism of Protestant King James I. But on the eve of the intended explosion the plot was discovered. Guy Fawkes was arrested, tried and executed.

The crisis in Ireland figured high in the queen's speech and in the Commons debate that followed.

"My ministers are determined that violence in Northern Ireland shall be brought to an end," she told the scarlet-robed peers, bishops and judges. "They are no less determined to continue their efforts to establish political conditions in Northern Ireland which insure for the communities there an active, permanent and guaranteed role in the life and public affairs of the province."

Peking-Lima Set Diplomatic Relations

LIMA (AP)- Peru's military government established diplomatic relations with Red China on Tuesday and won Peking's official support for the Peruvian claim to a 200-mile limit of territorial waters in the Pacific.

This claim by Peru, as well as by neighboring Ecuador, and Chile, is disputed by the United States. Peruvian and Ecuadorian naval patrols have seized U.S. fishing boats many times inside the 200-mile limit and maritime officials have levied heavy fines against them.

Peru is the third Latin-American government to establish ties with Peking. The others are Chile, whose president is a Marxist Socialist, and Cuba. Argentina is considering establishing relations.

The announcement of Peru's ties was made in a brief communique issued simultaneously by the Peruvian Foreign Ministry and Peking.

The communique pointed out that the Peruvian government recognizes Peking as the only legal Chinese government.

It also stated that Peru takes note of the Communist Chinese claim that Taiwan is "an inalienable part of the territory of the Peoples Republic of China."

The communique said the two governments would exchange ambassadors 'within a short time.'

Shortly after the announcement, Nationalist China suspended relations with Peru.

It was the fourth time Nationalist government had suspended instead of severing relations with a nation that has recognized Peking, in an apparent nationalist attempt to partially preserve the government's dwindling diplomatic ties as more and more countries recognize Communist China.

In a brief television appearance Monday night, Gen. Edgardo Mercado, Peru's foreign minister emphasized Red China's position as a world nuclear power and pointed out that Peking backs Peru's 200-mile jurisdictional claim.

"China's recognition of the 200-mile thesis is of great historical significance for us," Mercado said, "because within this pluralism of power, in this new strategic balance, the positions of the great nations have been taken.

"The Soviet Union and the United States are opposed to our thesis," the foreign minister said. "Today we have an element of the same level, of the same power-within the atomic club-which officially and publicly...supports the 200-mile thesis."

The official Communist Chinese recognition marks "a new step in acquiring a greater number of countries to support our 200-mile thesis," he added.

Pollution, Food Shortage Hits India

NEW DELHI (AP)-Serious food shortages and widespread water pollution posed a new danger Tuesday night to the coastal areas of eastern Orissa state, already devastated by a tidal wave and cyclonic storm that caused thousands of deaths.

The official death toll, released by the state government and still based only on sketchy reports, mounted to 6,000.

But the Indian government radio expressed fears that as many as 25,000 may have perished. A correspondent for United News of India said after touring the hardest-hit districts that at least 10,000 families-or about 50,000 persons-were feared dead.

Most of the coastal regions still were inaccessible, leaving doubts as to how many of the nearly five million persons who lived in the 5,000-square-mile area had survived.

The 16-foot tidal wave and 100 mile per hour winds struck last Friday night. They left roads filled with fallen trees and the debris of thousands of homes, delaying emergency medical teams.

Witnesses said bodies floated in many of the rivers, polluting the only main water supplies in the area. Once fertile fields were vast graveyards littered with the dead, they said.

Thousands of boats sank or washed out to sea, further hampering rescue efforts.

There were official fears that many survivors would die unless airplanes began immediate food drops in isolated areas that have been cut off from supplies for the last four days. Officials said mass inoculations also should begin at once to prevent a cholera epidemic.

Officials in Orissa confirmed that about 2,500 East Pakistani refugees had died on the offshore Jambu Islands, which bore the initial brunt of the tidal wave. The victims had survived civil strife in their homeland, a cholera outbreak in refugee camps this summer and floods in September.

The tidal wave spread tons of salt water from the Bay of Bengal over the area's rich farmlands, destroying this year's rice crop and ruining chances of any new plantings.

The government radio said units of the armed forces-which have been on alert for the past two weeks in a show of force along the borders with Pakistan-would be sent to Orissa for rescue and relief work.

A high-ranking team of army officers was flying to the state to map out relief plans. The navy moved into devastated Paradip port, 200 miles southwest of Calcutta, and began setting up emergency communications.

All major rail links into the state remained cut.

Amchitka Test Readied

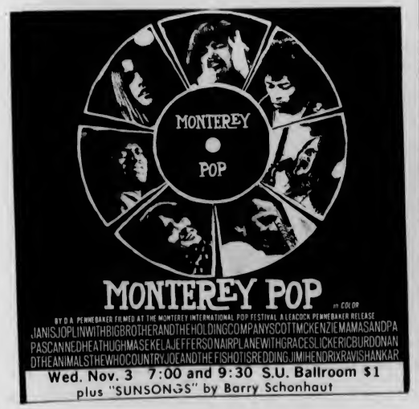
WASHINGTON (AP)-The Atomic Energy Commission announced Tuesday "we now expect to be in a state of readiness to conduct the Cannikin test no earlier than Saturday, Nov. 6."

The Cannikin test is the proposed big underground blast of a five-megaton nuclear device on Amchitka Island off the coast of Alaska.

Meanwhile, opponents of the explosion appealed a judge's refusal to halt the blast. Environmentalists appealed also the decision of U.S. District Judge George L. Hart Jr., to keep secret some documents which they say prove the potential dangers of the blast.

Seven organizations headed by the Committee for Nuclear Responsibility claim the blast poses a threat to wildlife and could trigger earthquakes or tidal waves.

In preparing an environmental impact statement required by law, the conservationists claim the AEC ignored or suppressed reports from four government agencies opposing the blast.



On Monday Judge Hart ordered some of the documents made public, designated some for the eyes only of environmentalist attorneys and said others should remain secret. In their appeal filed in the U.S. Court of Appeals, the environmentalists asked that all documents be made public. They also requested a preliminary injunction halting the blast.

On Oct. 5, the Appeals Court turned down a request for a stay, but that was before the three-judge court had a look at the disputed documents.

The judges have been studying the reports since Monday night.

The environmentalists say they expect the Appeals Court to call a hearing on the case sometime Wednesday.

In Physics, Chemistry

Connecticut, Canadian Men Win Nobel Prizes

STOCKHOLM (AP)- The 1971 Nobel prizes for physics and chemistry were awarded Tuesday to a Connecticut scientist who found a way to make three-dimensional photographs and a Canadian who explored inside the microscopic building blocks called atoms.

The Swedish Royal Academy of Sciences gave the physics award to Dr. Dennis Gabor for his discovery of 3-D "holography" picture-taking-an idea he said he got while watching a tennis march. Gabor was born in Hungary, became a British citizen and now works at the Columbia Broadcasting System Laboratories in Stamford, Conn. He is no relation to the Gabor sisters who also come from Hungary.

The academy picked a physicist, Dr Gerhard Herzberg of the National Research Council of Canada in Ottawa, for the Chemistry prize. It cited his work with "free radicals"-molecular fragments which take part in chemical reactions and help produce the smog that irritates the eyes of city-dwellers.

Herzberg, 66, and Gabor, 71, both studied in Germany but emigrated west as the Nazis rose to power in the 1920s. Each receives $88,000 with the prestigious award.

Herzberg was in the Soviet Union when his award was announced, participating in a Soviet-Canadian scientific exchange program.

In Stamford, Gabor told a telephoning reporter his first impulse was to bank the prize money. But he did a quick turnaround and vowed: "I'll buy my wife a mink coat."

His lensless 3-D invention already has generated a worldwide business and its future applications promise to be vast. It could be used for memory cores in computers, to add perspective to television and to improve 3-D movies.

Unlike some earlier 3-D methods, Gabor's holography shows the photographed object from all angles-giving the viewer the impression of looking in a window.

This leads to one of its projected uses in medicine, where surgeons hope to photograph and "look around", a tumor to judge its size and possible malignancy.

The Swedish academy said research by Herzberg has led to "a revitalization of studies of chemical reactions in gases."

One source said these studies have produced a better understanding of the role played by "free radicals". In air pollution these are especially active in contaminants from automobile exhausts and the burning of other wastes. Sunlight hits the gases, causing "free radicals" to react. The result is a smog that irritates eyes and lungs, damages plants and even corrodes substances.

Senators Call For End To Corrupt Army PX's

WASHINGTON (AP)-Following one of the most bizarre investigations in U.S. military history, a team of senators demanded Tuesday an end of the "ethical decay" they said allowed corruption to flourish in the Army's club and PX systems.

Members of the Senate's Permanent Investigations subcommittee, in a final report on a three-year probe of PX and off-duty soldiers' clubs, introduced four reform bills and recommended a wholesale housecleaning.

Emphasizing they do not intend to indict the military as a whole, the senators said there is evidence of a lack of vigilance by persons up and down the chain of command and added:

"Testimony and documentary evidence showed that the military services failed to properly administer and police the operations of the nonappropriated funds which are used to finance military clubs and PXs throughout the world."

As a result of the hearings, retired Maj. Gen. Carl Turner, former Army provost marshal general is now serving a federal jail term for income tax evasion. Other high-ranking officers, civilians and enlisted men have faced indictments, courts-martial, trials, dismissals, forced retirements, demotions and the loss of decorations and awards.

In Europe, Asia and the United States, a pattern of corruption and criminality existed within the club and PX systems and "too often dishonest practices were considered the normal and customary means of doing business," the committee said.

The report accused such large American firms as Jim Beam whiskey and the Carling Breweries of contributing to the corruption of poorly paid military personnel by their brokers and salesmen.

"They used every corrupting device-gifts, bribes, kickbacks, free housing, entertainment, sex-to persuade PX and club personnel to buy their goods," the report said.

Led by Chairman John L. McClellan, D-Ark., and Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., who actually headed the investigation, the senators introduced bills designed to:

—Set up an Inspector General within the Defense Department with authority to investigate wrongdoing in all branches of the armed services.

—Permit the U.S. comptroller general to audit PX and club accounts.

—Set up a governing board in the Pentagon to centralize PX and club policies.

—Bar the unauthorized acquisition of confiscated or contraband firearms by government officials.

The Senate probe uncovered evidence Turner obtained a large number of handguns from the police departments of Chicago and other cities, restored them and sold them for his own profit.

Irish Guerrillas Bomb Tavern, Stores

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)- Guerrilla bombs blew up a crowded tavern and a clothing store Tuesday, hurling bodies and debris into the air and injuring passengers in a passing bus. Police said a man and woman were known dead, 35 persons were injured and the death toll was expected to climb.

Heather Martin, a 16-year-old receptionist who works nearby, said, "When the dust cleared, there were loads of people lying everywhere with blood pouring from them. One man was flung across the road and landed against a wall."

The injured, included 13 women and two policemen in Belfast's worst incident since the outlawed Irish Republican Army stepped up its bombs-and-bullets campaign a few weeks ago. The deaths raised the two-year toll in strife-torn Northern Ireland to 148.

Police said rescuers were digging for several persons feared trapped below the rubble of the tavern, on the capital's southern outskirts. A police spokesman said the people in the building "had no chance."

The explosions were the third and fourth bomb attacks on civilians in Belfast since Sunday.

Three gunmen charged into the Red Lion Inn with guns blazing and told those inside they had only 10 seconds to escape. The gunmen dumped a bag containing a bomb and ran out. A policeman spotted them and one guerrilla was believed hit in a brief gunfight.

Other guerrillas left a bomb in a clothing store across the road seconds after girl shop assistants had left. The two bombs exploded almost simultaneously. Several passengers in the passing bus were cut by flying glass and debris.

The force of the tavern blast blew in the walls of a sandbagged police station next door. A nearby boutique was badly damaged.

Police said a man driving a bullet-riddled car was arrested at a roadblock soon after the explosions.

Elsewhere in violence-ridden Belfast:

—Four armed bombers shattered two floors of a six-story office block after ordering everyone out of the building. A blood transfusion center across the street was wrecked and four persons were taken to a hospital suffering from shock.

—IRA guerrillas blew an office apart during the Monday morning rush hour.

—Gunmen hiding behind a shield of children ambushed a British army patrol. The troopers did not return the fire and no casualties were reported.

—Two other army patrols ran into firefights with snipers and a sniper hit a police patrol jeep. There were no casualties.

—Troops swept through three Belfast trouble spots and arrested 10 men and a woman, all suspected IRA members.

—Home Affairs Minister John Taylor told the provincial Parliament that women were taking a bigger part in guerrilla actions. Three have been killed in the past few weeks. Taylor said: "One regrets very much the need to fire upon women. But...some are engaging in activities that are putting at risk the lives of men, women and children. They must therefore accept the consequences."

Clark Univ. Students, Faculty Stage Sit-In

WORCESTER, Mass. (AP)-About 25 Clark University students and faculty members staged a peaceful sit-in Tuesday outside the university placement office where two uniformed Marines were conducting interviews.

Spencer Potter, director of career planning, said, "It was all very orderly, and we are thankful for that. After what happened at Holy Cross, we were afraid we might have more problems than we did."

About 200 students and faculty members staged a peaceful demonstration at nearby Holy Cross Monday when the same two Marines were recruiting there.

There were no incidents at either school. At Holy Cross, the demonstrators surrounded the Marine display table on the steps of the campus center and stared silently at recruiters.

The Holy Cross demonstration was headed by the college chaplain, Rev. Robert E. Manning.

At Clark, the demonstrators sat down in the hall outside the placement office in Jonas Clark Hall and staged a series of slide presentations showing the "horrors of war," Potter said.

"About 15 students picked their way through the bodies to come in and be interviewed by the recruiters," Potter said.

As at Holy Cross the day before, the demonstration at Clark ended when the recruiters left the campus at 3 p.m. as scheduled.

Election '71-Local And National Results

Nationwide

Rizzo Takes Philadelphia Evers Looses: Ford Back In

PHILADELPHIA: Former Police Commissioner Frank L. Rizzo, running a tough law-and-order campaign, defeated Republican reformer W. Thatcher Longstreth. Democrat Rizzo, 51, told his cheering followers, "We have a job to do now. One of the first obstacles is to bring this entire community back together again." During the bitter campaign, which had obvious racial overtones, Longstreth attacked Rizzo as a man afraid to go into the black neighborhoods. Conceding defeat, however, he repeatedly urged support for the new mayor, despite cries of "No" from his supporters, many of them black.

CLEVELAND: Republican Ralph J. Perk won an upset victory over Arnold R. Pinkney, a Negro independent who had the backing of outgoing mayor Carl B. Stokes, also black. Stokes, who was the first black elected to lead a major American city, appeared at Pinkney's election headquarters to make a concession statement. Perk's win ended 30 years of Democratic domination in the city. The new mayor said he planned to "establish a coalition administration of Republicans, Democrats and independents." The other major candidate was Democrat James M. Carney who had been favored in the polls and who trailed in the balloting.

KENTUCKY: Wendell Ford, a Democrat who campaigned against Republican economic policies, defeated Republican Tom Emberton for the Kentucky governorship. His election shattered Republican hopes of winning the governorship twice in a row for the first time in history. Ford was lieutenant governor under outgoing Gov. Louie B. Nunn, a Republican, who could not succeed himself.

MISSISSIPPI: Democrat Bill Waller, an attorney, defeated independent Charles Evers, the Fayette mayor and the first black to seek the governorship of Mississippi. Waller pulled ahead early in the race and kept the lead, even in heavily black areas of the state.

INDIANAPOLIS: Mayor Richard G. Lugar, a Republican, defeated Democratic challenger John F. Neff in a race focused on busing and a new form of city-county metropolitan government that Lugar sponsored in the Indiana Legislature. Lugar, president of the National League of Cities, called the win "a statement in favor of unified government."

BALTIMORE, MD.: William Donald Schaefer, a Democrat and president of the City Council, won a landslide victory over Republican Dr. Ross Z. Pierpont for mayor, The vote capped Baltimore's quietest political campaign in years.

RICHMOND, Va.: State Sen. Henry E. Howell Jr., a populist style Democrat running as an independent, held a lead over Democrat George J. Kostel in a tight, three-way race for lieutenant governor. Howell took an early lead in returns from the large cities, with Kostel gaining strength from outlying areas. George P. Shafran, like Kostel a member of the House of Delegates, trailed badly.

PORTLAND, Maine: Maine voters refused to repeal the state's two-year-old income tax, defeating a proposal initiated through a citizens' petition drive. The repeal referendum was the first of its kind in the country. Supporters of repeal argued that the tax was unfair to the working man. Those favoring the tax said its repeal could throw the state into financial chaos.

SAN FRANCISCO: In another big mayoral race, Joseph Alioto, once a rising star on the national political scene, was fighting to keep his job in San Francisco. His leading challengers were Dianne Feinstein, president of the city Board of Supervisors and like Alioto a Democrat, and Republican restauranteur Harold Dobbs.

PITTSBURGH: One congressional seat was up, Pennsylvania's 18th District spot from Pittsburgh, contested by Republican Ketchup heir H. John Heinz III and Democrat John E. Connelly.

Legislatures were being filled in four states, including New Jersey, which has proved a political bellwether in recent years.

MANCHESTER, Ky.: Lethal violence marred the electioneering in Manchester, Ky., where Republican election judge John Mills was shot to death. Democratic election judge James Smith, who was wounded, and a man identified as George Duff were charged with murder. Police said the shooting came during an altercation at the Goose Rock precinct over qualifications of a prospective voter.

Springfield Analysis

By JAMES E. GOLD

Student participation in local voting apparantly is no greater than adult participation in voting if Springfield elections are any indications.

Springfield voters elected incumbent Mayor Frank H. Freedman to another two-year term over challenger State Rep. James L. Grimaldi, yesterday; 26,205-13,675.

According to an Election Department spokesman, less than fifty-seven percent of all the registered voters turned out. Donald C. Metzger, Election Commissioner had predicted a turnout of fifty-eight percent or 41,000 voters. These statistics are very close to the last municipal election.

Early indications are that there was not a large student vote to sway the elections, by the turnouts. Springfield, however, has never been known to have large turnouts for city elections, anyway. Student voters did not greatly swell the registration lists this year, either.

Observations made by a student voter in Springfield indicate that the poll workers are very willing to assist the new voters in using the voting machines.

As usual, there were many young persons holding the signs supporting candidates in front of the different voter precincts.

These were the issues:

Freedman claimed to hold down tax rates (this year's rose $4.80) while Grimaldi said they climbed too high. Freedman claimed municipal services expanded while Grimaldi said that no new services were made available. Freedman fought to hold back municipal employees wages, Grimaldi claimed that those employees were underpaid.

Winning the City Council seats are Theodore Dimauro, Mary Egan, Vincent DiMonoco, Rose Marie Coughlin, Paul Sears, Paul Mason, Leonard Collamore, Paul Ackerman, and John Sullivan.

Massachusetts

Incumbents Sweep

Incumbents shook off challengers in most mayor's races Tuesday in Massachusetts cities and towns.

Boston

In Boston, Mayor Kevin H. White ran up a surprising majority of 40,000 votes in turning back the bid of Rep. Louise Day Hicks, D-Mass., in the city's non-partisan election.

White had been favored in a rematch of his 1967 victory over Mrs. Hicks, but the size of his victory surprised most observers. In 1967, White slipped past Mrs. Hicks by 12,500 votes. (See page one)

Springfield

In Springfield, Mayor Frank Freedman scored a 2-1 victory over state Rep. James L. Grimaldi, D-Springfield, in a non-partisan election to win his third term, 26,205-13,675.

It was Grimaldi's fourth unsuccessful bid for the mayor's post.

Pittsfield

In Pittsfield, Mayor Donald G. Butler defeated Joseph Scelsi, president of the city council, by a vote of 11,785 to 9,397.

Also in Pittsfield, voters approved 10,587-3,214 a referendum calling for immediate withdrawal of U.S. troops from Southeast Asia and for an immediate ceasefire in Vietnam.

The referendum has no effect on city government, but the results are to be sent to President Nixon as expressing the sentiments of the people.

Holyoke

In Holyoke, Mayor William S. Taupier won a third two-year term, defeating police Patrolman Patrick J. Higgins. Taupier tallied 10,036 votes to 7,768 for Higgins.

Woburn

In Woburn, an incumbent mayor was upset. Edward P. Gilgun, former state fire marshal and treasurer of the Democratic State Committee for 24 years, tallied 9,246 votes to defeat Mayor Edward F. Gill who received 4,106 votes.

Somerville

In Somerville, Rev. S. Lester Ralph, first clergyman to serve as mayor in the city's history, defeated 32-year-old state Rep. Marie E. Howe. Ralph scored 18,990 votes to 10,302 for Miss Howe.

Lawrence

In Lawrence, former Mayor John J. Buckley defeated Mrs. Kathleen M. Pappalardo, a 24-year-old housewife and mother of three children. The current mayor, Daniel Kiley, did not seek reelection.

Buckley, out of office for four years, had 17,155 votes to 10,104 for Mrs. Pappalardo. Buckley currently is registrar of deeds for Northern Essex County.

Special Rates

WASHINGTON--There are so many heads of state, presidents, vice presidents, premiers, kings, queens, prime ministers and emperors traveling to other countries these days that the airlines have decided to offer special air-fare rates to world leaders.

Freres A. Jacqua, chairman of the special fares division of the International Airline Assn., told me:

"The International Airline Assn. has just completed a study which shows that, as a group, world leaders are traveling more than any other profession. Therefore we have made special discount rates to assure they will go by air."

"That's wonderful," I said.

"We are trying to get world leaders to take their wives with them on their trips, so we are now advertising a new rate. If you are the head of your country and you are on an official state visit to another country, you can take your wife for $99 plus tax, providing you don't stay in the country for more than four days."

"It hardly pays for a leader to leave his wife at home at those rates," I said.

"If you can get 10 heads of state to travel together on the same plane, our airlines will offer a 25% discount, and the leaders don't have to stay together once they land at the airport," he added.

"Too bad those fares weren't in effect when the shah of Iran celebrated his country's 2,500th anniversary," I commented.

"We also have other special fares," Mr. Jacqua said. "If you're the vice president of a country and you visit any NATO dictatorship and stay for less than 30 days, you can take your secret service men with you at half fare."

"That's better than student rates," I cried. "Do you have any special rates for dictators?"

"Yes, we have a new totalitarian rate. Any dictator may fly at a 40% discount providing he travels in uniform."

"What about heads of state who have been deposed in coups d'etat?"

"Any head of state who has been kicked out by a military coup may travel to any other country for 20% less, providing he does not fly on the weekend."

"I imagine you also have a family plan for deposed leaders?" I inquired.

"We do. They can take one wife or two mistresses and up to 10 children for half price, but there is no discount if they go over their luggage allowance."

"Is there any difference in rates charged leaders of the Communist world and those charged leaders of the Free World?" I wanted to know.

"Every airline has its own policy on that. For example, El Al, the Israeli Airline, will give a discount to Soviet leaders, but only on a standby basis--they have to wait to board, to see if any seats are left.

"We also have arranged charter fares for the United Nations. We plan to fly Peking delegates to New York for $125 and Taipei delegates back to Taiwan for the same price. The reason we can charge so little is that the planes will be filled both ways."

"What about someone like Henry Kissinger, who is not a head of state but is traveling on business for the President?"

"He has to pay the full fare," was the answer. "But if he travels with a companion she can go for half fare."

The New Majority

By LEON FRIEDMAN

What is the United States Supreme Court likely to do in the coming year? The appointment of Lewis R. Powell Jr. and William H. Rehnquist to the Court would add two more law-and-order Justices to the previous Nixon selections (Burger and Blackmun). With the continued presence of Justices Stewart and White-- two more or less conservative holdovers from the Warren Era--it appears that the nation will be faced with a six-to-three conservative majority for the foreseeable future.

With only three liberal members left (Douglas, Marshall and Brennan) how much of a retreat from the landmark decisions of the Warren Court are we likely to see? The answer is: not too much.

The most important decisions of the Warren Court--in reapportionment, the granting of the right to counsel in the courtroom (the Gideon case) and at the police station (Miranda), the application of stricter safeguards on the police, and the great civil rights advances--are not likely to be disturbed. They have become institutionalized, woven into the fabric of government or criminal procedure by state laws, lower court decisions, administrative rulings, and the expectations of millions of affected citizens. Judges who would try to reverse the important rulings of the Warren Court would be the radical revolutionaries at this point, and it is unlikely that any severe reversal would be acceptable to such moderates as Stewart and White.

But the momentum of the liberalizing decisions of the Warren Court will probably be stopped. The important Court rulings of the last ten years created pressure to carry these decisions to the limits of their logic: If counsel is necessary in a felony case, why not in misdemeanor cases or where petty offenses are involved?

If warrants are necessary before wiretaps can be installed in criminal cases, why not also in national security cases?

If the state cannot punish the private possession of obscene material, shouldn't private citizens be free to import such material from abroad?

The Warren Court would undoubtedly have extended its landmark rulings to a host of new situations, rounding out the contours of the decisions and giving them a more rational shape and structure. But the new Justices are not likely to extend the cases one whit beyond their minimal holdings and may well chip them away at the edges wherever possible.

In fact, the Court has already handed down an important case during the last term eroding the Miranda principle-- the Supreme Court permitted the prosecution to use inconsistent statements made by a defendant to the police to impeach his credibility at trial, even though he had not been given a proper Miranda warning by the police.

In the new Court term, certain decisions are likely in cases pending before the Court:

Death Penalty--The Court will probably uphold the constitutionality of the death penalty against a claim that it is a "cruel and unusual punishment" forbidden by the Eighth Amendment.

Abortions--The Court will probably permit states to continue to punish abortions.

Prisoner Rights--The Court will probably permit wardens and other prison officials to impose summary punishment (such as solitary confinement) on prisoners without any type of due process hearing. However, restrictions on a prisoner's access to reading and legal materials will most likely be struck down.

Appointment of Counsel--The Court will probably not require counsel to be appointed in misdemeanor cases; however, the Court will probably require counsel to be appointed at important preliminary hearings but not for identification line-ups.

Immunity--The question of whether full Fifth Amendment immunity is required when any witness appears before a grand jury will be heard by the Court. Justices Stewart and White have voted at various times for wide protection against self-incrimination, and the question is a close one.

Wiretaps--Whether the federal government can tap the phones of suspected subversives in national security cases is another close question before the Court. Justice Stewart has been a strong advocate of the need for securing judicial warrants in all cases. William Rehnquist, however, has been intimately involved in the present Justice Department policy of not securing warrants; he may have to excuse himself from these cases, and a more liberal rule may, then, emerge.

The New Nixon Court

By MAX LERNER

NEW YORK—There are two ways by which a Supreme Court can respond to social change: one is to express it or adjust to it; the other is to cause it, either by pushing it forward or rolling it back.

The Warren court joined with other forces to push social change forward on a number of fronts. The new court, with four Nixon appointees on it, must now choose between a true judicial restraint which tries to adjust to social change while placing bounds around it, or a reverse judicial activism which tries to roll back—and which would be simply the other side of the Warren court coin.

Clearly one of the most enduring powers packed into the presidential office is the power to appoint Supreme Court justices. President Nixon put it pretty nakedly when he said "Presidents come and go, but the Supreme Court through its decisions goes on forever."

FRANKLIN ROOSEVELT appointed eight Supreme Court judges, and his influence through them has lasted ever since. Richard Nixon will have appointed four justices in less than three years of office, and he too hopes through their decisions to go on forever.

The new court has the power to arrest and reverse the direction of the Warren court, if that is its aim. The Four Horsemen of Nixon, along with holdovers Potter Stewart and Byron White — either or both of them — will form a majority of five or six. The other three — Douglas, Brennan and Marshall — will tend to vote together as a dissenting minority.

The core question is whether the new majority will vote to reverse or only to moderate the direction of the Warren court.

It is a question of whose ox is gored and who does the goring. It is a pity that Nixon got muddled because he was on the track of a distinction worth making, between the judges' views on the right social policy and his sense of judicial craftsmanship. It is really a question of what you put in the foreground — whether it is the substantive issues (the social good you want to reach) or the procedural questions (your views on the division of powers between the branches, and the extend and limits of the judicial power).

EVERY JUDGE MIXES some of both in his final formula, but it is a question of which you put first, which second. In Holmes' book, "The Common Law," written when he was a young man, he wrote that consideration of community expediency — the very thing judges hardly ever mention — "are the secret root from which the law draws all the juices of life."

When he came to the Supreme Court, 20 years later, he still believed it, but he also believed that a judge must first recognize his own social philosophy, and then make every effort to restrain himself and keep from reading his philosophy into the Constitution, overruling what the legislators and the people behind them may reasonably want.

That still strikes me as a good approach. You can call it "judicial conservatism," as Nixon seems to prefer, but it is better to call it "judicial restraint," whether used by liberals or conservatives. The opposite is "judicial activism," which can also be used for liberal or reactionary ends, either for containment or for rollback.

The chances are that Powell will move mostly in the direction of Harlan, while Rehnquist — if confirmed — will be more activist in cutting back on the Warren court rulings in criminal law. But the Nixon court as a whole will do an ugly disservice to the nation if it forgets true judicial restraint, and tries to turn back the clock by using its skills for narrow and petty social ends.

'VERY WELL—LET'S GET ON WITH IT, SHALL WE?'

Letters To The Editor

A Vicious Cycle

To the Editor:

In Monday's "Letters To The Editor" of the Collegian, a Miss Laurel Louraine of Gorman House criticized the members of Kappa Sigma fraternity for their occasions of "yelling obscenities, quite loudly,..." at early morning hours, 2:30 for instance. She wrote that she had "no objections to parties.", but that she had "had it" with the obscenity bit.

I, like Miss Louraine, live in Gorman House, also on the side nearest Kappa Sigma. The "booming obscenities" she wrote of do occur: indeed they occur quite frequently. I, too, think the gross-outs are, if not unwanted, certainly uncalled for.

I'm sick of them, yes, but that's not the main point of this letter. Rather, I'd like to relate a few things that occurred as results of Miss Louraine's letter. At about 6:30 Monday night a small but vocal group of persons gathered on one of the back balconies of the Kappa Sigma house and in unison shouted their disapproval of Miss Louraine's letter, using obscenities directed specifically at her. This lasted but a few minutes. Much later, just after midnight, the obscenities reoccurred, again shouted in unison, again directed in name at Miss Louraine. This time the shouting lasted longer, about 20-25 minutes, enticed by vocal reactions from a group of girls in Gorman.

This is real good, huh? A young lady submits some constructive criticism to the student newspaper about something that annoys her, and as a result has obscenities shouted at her and demeaning things said about her from the group she was critical of. And then people from the young lady's dorm make matters worse by returning the obscenities with some of their own. And so on and so forth.

Whether or not Kappa Sigma deserves a bad label cannot be accurately answered for there are many of its members, I am sure, who belie such a label. The complaints brought against the house by Miss Louraine were justified, and they were enacted in a positive way by use of the complaint forum of the Collegian, i.e. "Letters To The Editor." This positive action didn't call for the negative reactions from the members of Kappa Sigma, which in their turn did not deserve the negative reaction from some of the girls in Gorman House. Kappa Sigma's reactins against Miss Louraine likely enhanced its bad reputation in the eyes of those who witnessed the whole thing, while the reaction by the Gorman girls worsened affairs, enticing the Kappa Sigs to further act in a way that warrants bad labeling.

Does this whole thing sound like a vicious cycle? If so, does it have to be that way?

Little Things

To the Editor:

This past weekend some friends of mine were here to visit. The campus was completely strange to them. They asked several people for directions. Every person they talked to was very friendly. My friends wanted me to say thank you to all those people who were so nice to them. They also wanted to express their great misconception they had about the people from UMass. They were under the impression that people around here just did not give a damn about others. Their thought was completely corrected by the friendly attitude of all those who were so helpful to them in finding their way to my dorm.

No Respect

To the Editor:

I hope that the MDC will allow me to reply to Neil Coleman's article Need For A Strong Government, (MDC, Nov. 2) which I feel is one of the most pathetic pieces of rationalization that I have ever read in my life. To say that all the good things that we have today in this country are a direct result of a stronger central rule is both absurd and insulting to the masses of people that helped bring about needed reform in this country. I first suggest that Mr. Coleman read his history, and then I believe he will realize, as the Roosevelt liberals and the New Left, that trust in a strong central government holds more evil than good. Most of the reforms that need to take place, as with past reforms, cannot come from a sovereign power in Washington.

Think of every problem we face today and the frustration we have trying to solve them because of the bureaucratic central power. I am sure Mr. Coleman is acquainted with the draft, the several poverty programs we've had, Mayor Daley, Lyndon Johnson, and all of the bankrupt quick solution reforms which have robbed the working man of billions of dollars and accomplished nothing for him or any of those around him. I am very sure that we all are acquainted with the Vietnam War and the Pentagon Papers, which show just how far a strong government can go. But no, Mr. Coleman won't be satisfied until the power of this government is stronger. I ask, if he didn't like Roosevelt handling the job with far less power, what are to be the effects of some other man with far more? The answer seems obvious to me, and I think the Left is beginning to see the same thing.

What is most tragic to me is that Mr. Coleman has no respect for freedom of the individual, and the liberties we have fought so long to have. The history of this nation is based on that fight, and the reason we are in the mess we are now is because too many people think like him.

Michael T. Kavanagh

Fine President

To the Editor:

Sen. George McGovern's speech here on Sunday night was an impressive, straight-forward one. He continually emphasized that he was against war and would spend the rest of his life seeking peace. His peace-loving followers in the ballroom cheered him on.

Senator McGovern stressed the need for the government to reduce military expenditures. He stated that the U.S. should disentangle itself completely from the immoral war in Indo-China. The money from the war budget could be used to build up our own country. His righteous followers in the ballroom cheered him on again.

McGovern next proposed that the U.S. stop sending arms to Pakistan and, instead, provide more relief funds for East Pakistan refugees. His sympathetic followers in the ballroom agreed that this was a very humanitarian gesture.

Another suggestion Sen. McGovern made, to stress his anti-war position, was to stop all military aid to the Greek military dictatorship. This, also, was greeted with a round of applause from his "Agnew-hater" followers.

Finally, as part of his program against war, the Senator said he would recommend sending jet fighters and other arms to Israel. This brought on another ovation from his hypocritical followers in the ballroom. One thing is perfectly, crystal clear: George McGovern, with his selective anti-war policies, will make a fine President in the tradition of great 20th Century American Presidents.

The Uses Of Defeat

By ARTHUR HOPPE

WASHINGTON, NOV. 7, 1972—President Richard M. Nixon was re-elected in a landslide today.

The victory followed last week's rejection by the Senate of the 43rd and 44th candidates Mr. Nixon had nominated to fill the two vacancies on the Supreme Court.

Experts agreed Mr. Nixon's overwhelming triumph at the polls was the direct result of his brilliant strategy and painstaking care in selecting aspirants for the Nation's highest court.

THE STRATEGY apparently evolved accidentally. It had its beginnings with Mr. Nixon's choice of Judges Haynsworth and Carswell, both Southern Republicans whose qualifications were mediocre at best.

The defeat of these nominations was hailed at the time as a victory for Senate Democrats, most of whom were running for President. Mr. Nixon angrily denounced them and grudgingly appointed a couple of adequately qualified Northern Conservatives, who were quickly confirmed by the Senate.

The episode might have been forgotten had not a subsequent poll shown the South to now be solidly against every Democratic presidential hopeful in the Senate and solidly for Mr. Nixon.

It was Attorney General Mitchell, insiders say, who first realized that Great Political Truth involved: "Every time the Senate Democrats reject a candidate for the Supremen Court, they outrage the group the candidate represents."

THE IMMEDIATE result was Mr. Nixon's disclosure in October, 1971, of a list of six candidates he was now considering for the court. Indicative of their quality was the fact that one had never been a judge and another had never even practiced law.

The Senate Democrats were furious. "This list will rank as one of the great insults to the Supreme Court in its history," said Sen. Ted Kennedy. The fight was on.

Two by two, Mr. Nixon happily sent his nominations up to the Senate. Two by two, he happily saw them rejected.

With the first six alone, he captured the women's vote, the Border States, California and all former and present members of the Ku Klux Klan. After that, there was no holding Mr. Nixon back.

Who will ever forget the struggle Senate liberals had with themselves over the nomination of Herman X, a Detroit cab driver? Or over that of Alvin P. Yee, a New York laundry worker who had converted to Judaism?

By August of 1972, with the rejection of U.S. Treasurer Romana Banuelos' nomination to the Court, Mr. Nixon had sewn up the vote of ever ethnic group from every geographical area.

September saw the Senate turn down Abbie Hoffman, Gloria Steinem, an 18-year-old bongo player and a 103-year- old Wisconsin alligator wrestler—thus effectively lining up the radical, women's lib, youth and senior-citizen vote for Mr. Nixon.

BUT THE CROWNING blow came last week. It wasn't so much the Senate's rejection of Stanley P. Stanley, president of the Peoria Day Liberation Front. It was the Democratic senators' reluctant vote against Democratic Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago when they learned, to their surprise, that he could neither read nor write.

This, of course, threw the nation's huge Democratic vote to Mr. Nixon and insured his triumphant re-election.

Following today's landslide victory, White House Press Secretary Ronald Ziegler said the names of two eminently-qualified jurists would be sent to the Senate first thing in the morning.

They are expected to be confirmed within a week.

A Non-Expert Talks Gay Lib

By GILBERT J. SALK

I'd like to say a few nonexpert words about Gay Lib today. Perhaps the best place to start is with an incident which occured a couple of weeks ago.

I was invited to speak to the Student Homophile League about homosexuality and the draft. The meeting started with some getting-to-know-each-other games, there were a few announcements, and I gave my talk. Then the meeting broke up, and small clusters of people formed. One guy came up to me, looked around a little sheepishly, and said, "Hi, Gil. I'm straight too." He then went on to explain hastily that he had come to the meeting to get material for a term paper he was writing for a Human Development course.

But dig where his head was. I really didn't know whether to laugh or cry or ask him how it felt to be part of a minority (it can really be threatening to the only, or one of the only, straights in a gay world, I guess) or how he knew I was straight.

The sad thing about the straight world is that those of us who live in it assume that everyone we know must be straight (to reassure ourselves about any doubts we might have about ourselves) and that only strange, easily identifiable people are gay.

It just isn't true. I can no more certainly identify a homosexual than a chocolate ice cream lover. To those of you who respond that some people look "queer," I can only say that some people eating chocolate ice cream prefer it, and some just happen to be eating it because nothing else was available. To make it simpler, some gay folks look gay, some look straight, and some straight folks look gay while others look straight. The only key to identification is our own labels of normal and abnormal.

But this attitude cripples those of us who are straight. We find ourselves with a vested interest in retaining our straight image, and feel compelled to put down aspects of our own human sexuality which might be interpreted as gay. This is not to say that everyone is gay. It is meant to challenge the assumptions that there is something wrong with homosexuality, an assumption drilled into us with such force that many people, as they awaken to some gay impulses, panic, have nervous breakdowns, or seek toreassurethemselves of their normality by beating on someone who happens to make them more aware of their own insecurities.

Why should that guy have felt it important to inform me that he was straight? Was he afraid that I'd identify him as gay? What would that have done to him? Did he believe that if I thought he was gay he'd break out in some kind of horrible rash which would mark him for life? Or did he fear that the members of SHL were normal human beings who have the same problems he has, and that he was losing some of the stereotypes which acted as his security blanket?

And don't we all have the same problem? He isn't alone in his fear, he's just a convenient illustration. Phil Ochs demonstrated his fear and insecurity at a concert he gave here last year, as did several members of his audience.

All I can do is raise questions in your minds. Neither I nor anyone else can answer them for you. But you can get more information. SHL maintains a drop-in center in the SU. Pay them a visit some time, and sit and rap. They have reading material which you can browse through. Think about it. And if you're not too uptight, do it.

NOTES:

Nixon May Get Another Year of Economic Power

WASHINGTON (AP) - Chairman Arthur F. Burns of the Federal Reserve Board urged Congress Tuesday to give President Nixon an extra year of broad economic powers. Burns called this necessary to help end uncertainty which he said contributed to falling stock prices and other unfavorable economic developments.

In making his recommendation Burns reversed totally his position of last March when he told two Senate committees the Economic Stabilization Act then being considered gave the President virtually dictatorial powers and should be kept on short congressional leash.

Appearing before the Senate Banking Committee, Burns, who has been named to head the interest and dividends committee in Phase 2 of the President's economic program, told Sen. William Proxmire, D—Wis.:

"At that time last March very few of us had any notion this power would be used. I rather felt Congress had gone overboard...

"Now, this power has been used and this vast machinery has been set in motion.

"There is a great deal of uncertainty across the nation as to how these new wage and price boards will function.

"I think some of the recent anguish in the stock market is due to this uncertainty...

"I think it would be constructive to act now to extend the authority."

The administration wants the act broadened and extended until April 30, 1973.

Proxmire disagreed with Burns, saying Congress should give the President all the tools he needs, and, if necessary, extend the basic act when it runs out in April.

"But if we wait until then we will know what we're doing," he said.

"I think we should follow the very wise advice you gave us originally and hold this power under short leash," Proxmire told Burns.

Burns said he believes the full extension should come now but added: "On the other hand, I cannot firmly oppose the view you have expressed."

He said Congress always could make adjustments, even after the act has been extended.

Merit Rate Insurance Proposed

BOSTON (AP) - State Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan Tuesday proposed a merit rating automobile insurance plan which would impose surcharges ranging from $4 to $40 on an estimated 25,000 motorists convicted of traffic violations between Sept. 1, 1970 and Aug. 31, 1971.

Ryan's proposal would replace the merit rating plan provided under the no-fault auto insurance law which went into effect Jan. 1.

Merit rating--a system of insurance premium rewards for good drivers and penalties for poor drivers--is to go into effect next Jan. 1, under terms of the no-fault law.

The schedule of surcharges under the no-fault legislation has been found unacceptable on grounds that the dollar cost of convictions for various offenses would vary according to where a driver lived.

The schedule also has been criticized on grounds that the penalty for speeding is greater than the penalty for more serious offenses, such as leaving the scene of an accident.

Ryan said he would recommend a merit rating plan which will impose flat dollar surcharges for various traffic violations in place of the percentage charges provided in the no-fault statute.

Under his plan, the additional charges for the 25,000 motorists convicted of violations between Sept. 1, 1970 and last August would total about $500,000.

He said that the general 1972 premium rates would be reduced by an equal amount, approximately one half of one per cent.

Under the plan, those subject to the surcharges would have to pay them for five successive year.

In his statement, Ryan said persons involved in auto accidents would not be subject to surcharges.

"This would penalize the guilty and innocent alike, and there is no practical way to determine which drivers involved are at fault," Ryan said.

Persons convicted of operating under the influence of liquor or drugs would be subject to a premium penalty of approximately $40 under the plan. The same surcharge would apply to persons convicted of three speeding violations in one year.

Leaving the scene of an accident and operating recklessly or to endanger would result in a surcharge of approximately $20.

Most relatively minor violations would be penalized by a surcharge of approximately $4, Ryan said.

He said the new plan will be aired at a rate hearing scheduled for Nov. 12.

Paintings At Amherst College

An exhibition offering a cross-section of American landscape paintings from 1820 to 1900 will be open to the public in Amherst College's Mead Art Building until November 24.

The exhibition is part of the College's sesquicentennial celebration. Viewing hours at the Mead Art Building are from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., Monday through Saturday, and 11:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sundays.

The paintings are from the collection of Henry Melville Fuller of New York City.

Russian Poet Suggests Suppression Of Work

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP)- Yevgeny Yevtushenko, the noted Russian poet, suggests that publication of his works in the Soviet Union is kept at a minimum by authorities.

Yevtushenko is now visiting Hungary at the invitation of the National Writer's Union. In an earlier interview published in the Hungarian newspaper Esti Hirlap, he claimed that Soviet critics were passing him over in silence, a new method of disapproval.

In a television interview Saturday the poet said he would like to write more prose but feels he is not "mature" enough. He added: "In poetry, you can hide behind symbolic language. In prose you cannot engage in suggestive symbolism. You are found out by your readers at once."

Referring to low circulation figures for his poems, Yevtushenko explained: "The only genuine indication to go by is the presale subscription figure. My last volume, entitled 'White Snow Is Falling', was published in 60,000 copies, while 1.5 million readers signed the advance subscription list.

Asked to comment on "harsh criticism," eight years ago when Yevtushenko was a vociferous champion of literary freedom, the poet responded: "We all used to shout a lot when we were young. But now, at a more advanced age, I have realized that the calm voice has the most telling effect. He who is right does not usually shout out loud." Yevtushenko is 38.

He added: "The type of criticism which tries to strike your personality would only make the criticized poet more self-assured, it confirms him in his original conviction.

"If anyone in a boxing ring can only knock you out with hits below the belt, I am the stronger because he cannot tackle me by means of regular punches."

Yevtushenko declared that criticism of a close friend hurts more than reproaches of a "small-minded nonentity." He said if he had changed a bit it was because of "gentle scolding of friends, and my own merciless self-analysis."

Superman, Capt. Marvel To The Rescue

SALT LAKE CITY (AP)- Superman, Captain Marvel and Flash Gordon are helping to put 20-year-old David Faggioli through college.

The University of Utah junior earns his tuition by collecting and selling old comic books. He has made more than $2,000 so far.

"Like most little kids, I started a comic book collection," said Faggioli."Later I got turned on to comic strip art, to its combination of graphic design with motion. I decided to make a profit out of that interest."

Hundreds of comic books, some dating back to the late 1930s, are stacked in neat piles in the Faggioli home. Many of the older editions are sealed in plastic bags.

The short, slender youth sells most of his comics by advertising in a national comic collectors' magazine. He puts his more valuable acquisitions up for bid.

He was recently offered $200 for his most precious comic, a 1939 Marvel Mystery. It will be his biggest sale.

The value of a comic is largely determined by its rarity, Faggioli said.

"Comics published in the '40s are the most valuable because most got thrown out during war-time paper drives," he said.

It's not unusual to sell a wartime comic for $50 or more, Faggioli added.

The current nostalgia craze has been a boon for comic book sellers, Faggioli said.

"People like old, funky things now, and they like to look at the world the simple way it was 20 or 30 years ago. Comics do a good job of showing that world.

Faggioli, a music major, says he hopes to end his comic-selling career next year and open a shop dealing in graphics and rare jazz and classical records.

Police Concerned With Student Welfare

By BILL KILLION

Contrary to what most students think the University Police are very concerned with the students welfare. According to Sgt. Frank Mazzei of the University Police, "our main purpose is to give the students as much protection as we can." To help do this the University Police carry out 24 hour patrols daily, throughout the UMass campus and surrounding areas.

The University Police consists of 21 patrolmen and five officers, plus 12 security guards who patrol the dorms and campus grounds on foot. Extremely deserted areas such as the Hills area are also covered by patrolmen on foot at night.

"Thefts and drunks are our largest problem," says Sgt. Mazzei, "and these disturbances pick up around Thursday night and last through the weekend."

"But theft is our largest problem," explains Sgt. Mazzei, "and we are constantly trying to improve our methods of protection."

Car strippings and thefts are a major problem, and to help decrease this type of crime several actions are taken. The police patrol the parking lots with their lights out, and often have men in unmarked cars parked in large lots like F lot. The University Police also have a modern vehicle identification computer hooked up with a computer in Washington D.C. to keep track of missing cars.

When asked about the drug situation on campus, Sgt. Mazzei replied, "We're mainly concerned with the heavy narcotics, heroin and cocaine, and it's in that area that we concentrate."

Since theft from dorms is the largest problem, Sgt. Mazzei recommends that "Doors should be locked at all times, and the serial numbers of valuable items should be recorded to increase the chance of recovery.

Amherst Fields Plan Lives Yet

The Amherst Fields project is up from the canvas.

Paparazzo Associates reported yesterday that scaled down plans for the project have been submitted to the Zoning Board of Appeals, the board which had seemingly KO'd the development the week before the October special town meeting.

The town meeting requested Paparazzo to cut the size of the proposed development by about 50 per cent and commit new plans to town boards for further study.

According to Paparazzo spokesman John Williams, the new plans call for 1,328 units on 333 acres. Paparazzo had previously requested permission to build 2,176 units on 648 acres.

The new plan reflects a reduction of 40 per cent from the previous plan and increases the density of unit per acre from 3.99 as opposed to the 3.36 density previously planned.

The Zoning Board of Appeals has scheduled a public hearing for the first stage of Paparazzo request for Nov. 18.

The ZBA had previously denied Paparazzo's application for a planned 2,200 Unit Residential Development, citing the town's inability to handle the increased traffic load, the lack of sufficient school facilities, and the inadequacy of the Amherst sewage system.

Several days after the ZBA report was released, the Planning Board made public its recommendations to the Board of Appeals, which differed sharply from the ZBA's decision.

The Selectmen added their support for a smaller Amherst Fields project at the special town meeting.

The new plan includes only land currently zoned neighborhood residential. Williams said the possible development of the Paparazzo land zoned outlying residential depended on how the project is received during the next few years.

The new plan, said Williams, is similar to the old one in respect to the road system. He added that the builders had again tried to maximize the amount of open road space in the development.

Get Behind The Eight-Ball

The Campus Center Program Council Recreation Committee will conduct the Annual Pocket Billiards and Straight-rail Billiards Tournament in the Student Union Games Area starting on Friday, November 12, 1971.

Applications may be filled out at the Games Area in the Student Union starting on November 5. A fee of $1.00 will be assessed; however, there will be no cost for using the table during the tournament.

There will be a men's division and a woman's division for both pocket and straight-rail billiards. Rules and regulations will be governed by the Association of College Unions-International Tournament Committee.

The New England District Tournament will be held at UMass this year on the weekend of February 18. Winners of the campus tournament will be eligible to represent UMass at the Regional Tournament. Winners of the New England Regional may qualify for the National Tournament held in the spring.

UMass Artist Wins $1000

UMass artist has won the $1,000 first prize in a new International Silver Co. sculpture competition conducted by the University of Connecticut Foundation.

Chosen as the recipient of the cash award was Robert Mallary, professor of art, for his sculpture "Piaffe II." The award was presented Friday, Oct. 29, by International Silver President John Stevens, at a dinner at the UofC Museum of Art. The purpose of the competition was to stimulate creative activity in the art of metal sculpture.

Two other artists were awarded honorable mention. They are Arthur E. Balderacchi, an assistant professor of art at the University of New Hampshire, for an untitled work, and John Townsend, an associate professor of art and director of graduate studies at the University of Massachusetts, for his "Tree Figure." Winners were selected from a field of 19 entries.

Prof. Mallary has had numerous one-man shows including exhibitions at the San Francisco Museum of Art, the Santa Barbara Museum of Art and the Fine Arts Society of San Diego, all in California. He has participated in group shows at the Institute of Contemporary Arts, London; the Museum of Modern Art Traveling Exhibition, and the Yale University Art Gallery, New Haven.

His work is in such public and private collections as the Los Angeles County Museum, and the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York City. He has received a Tamarind Fellowship and a Guggenheim Foundation grant.

Competition sculptures will be displayed at the UofC Museum Oct. 30-Dec. 19 at an exhibition entitled "Small Packages." The art show then will tour the U.S. as a circulating exhibition.

New Wildlife Plan Hits Massachusetts

There are long-range implications for Massachusetts hunters in a new wildlife habitat management plan that comes from Minnesota via UMass.

The plan is based on long-term research in Minnesota on the role of aspen stands as providers of food and shelter for ruffed grouse. A UMass research group headed by Frederick Greeley has adapted some of the Minnesota findings to fit the needs of Massachusetts.

Greeley and his forestry and wildlife management students, working under an agreement with the Massachusetts Division of Fisheries and Game, have put two years of work into the project, using the state's new Swift River Wildlife Management Area in Belchertown as a model. The result is a 28-page proposal that has been presented to the Division.

The essence of the plan is that trembling and large-tooth aspen or popple--if there are enough of them and if there is enough diversification in their ages--provide winter food, spring and summer browse, nesting cover and concealment to native game birds and mammals in Massachusetts. These include the ruffed grouse, woodcock, cottontail rabbit, white-tailed deer and, in some areas, the snowshoe hare.

Grouse, for example, feed on flowering buds from male aspen trees, a single bird nibbling off perhaps 200 a day. A 15-year-old aspen tree, according to one count, can provide around 1500 such buds. Thickets of young aspen provide brood cover for grouse and woodcock and browse for deer. Aspen stands generally provide protection from predators for all species.

The UMass proposal is the result of a detailed study of the Swift River area, 800 hilly acres of forest, open land and swamp off Route 9 in Belchertown. UMass student-faculty teams started out by doing a forest-type map of the area and then did a wildlife inventory. Tracks and sign of grouse, gray squirrel, white-tailed deer and cottontail were mapped by the UMass Student Chapter of the Wildlife Society and deer density estimates were made by pellet counts over a number of years.

In three succeeding springs, UMass field crews marked drumming centers of ruffed grouse and singing grounds of woodcock by audio-triangulation. Forest trees were inventoried and aspen stands were mapped according to sex, age and species.

Lecture At Mt. Holyoke

Life With The Chimpanzees

Dr. Jane van Lawick-Goodall, under the auspices of the L.S.B. Leakey Foundation, will present a lecture and film entitled "My Life Amongst the Wild Chimpanzees" on Wednesday, November 3, at 8:00 p.m. in Chapin Auditorium at Mount Holyoke College.

Dr. Goodall, who has been studying wild chimpanzees in their natural habitat in the Gombe Stream Chimpanzee Reservoir in Tanzania since 1960, began her work tramping alone through the bush in search of chimpanzees. Her hope that she might gain the chimps' acceptance in order to study their behavior was daunted only by months of wandering without observing a single chimpanzee. Instead she becameaccustomed to the terrain and waited for the chimpanzees to appear. Patience rewarded her, and the chimps not only emerged, but they eventually became familiar friends with faces, names and habits.

The purpose of her many years of observation, first alone and then with her photographer/husband, Hugo van Lawick, is that she saw chimpanzees as a clue to man's origin and development. Detailed observations have strengthened Dr. Goodall's conviction that understanding chimpanzee behavior will contribute to a fuller understanding of human behavior. According to Robert Ardrey, her most recent book, In the Shadow of Man, "...has made some kind of major breakthrough into an area combining purest science, purest art, and purest adventure for which there exists no literary precedent."

Dr. van Lawick-Goodall received a Ph.D. degree in ethology from Cambridge University as the seventh student to be admitted for a Ph.D. degree without a prior B.A. degree of any sort. She is the author of numerous articles for the National Geographic Magazine and other scientific journals. Her first book, My Friends the Wild Chimpanzees, has been followed by two written with her husband, The Innocent Killers: Wild Dogs, Jackals, and Hyenas and Grub: The Bush Baby. She is now Scientific Director of the Gombe Stream Research Center on Primate Behavior where eight to 12 students work full time. She spends at least three months of every year there with her husband and four year old son, Hugo, nicknamed Grub.

Presented at Mount Holyoke by the lecture committee, the Sloan Fund, and the departments of psychology, biological sciences, and sociology, Dr. van Lawick-Goodall is visiting the United States with the L.S.B. Leakey Foundation Lecture Program. She recently appeared on NBC's "Today" program, and her film which shows the chimpanzees' gradual habituation to her and follows their general social behavior, nest-making, feeding, locomotion, and development, has been shown on national television.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

If you want a passionate response, pick on Scorpio. If you desire a romantic solution, ask LEO. If you are seeking a pioneering concept, consult Aries. If you want to learn a secret, arrange a clandestine meeting with Pisces. If it's gossip you seek, hurry over to Gemini. If higher education is your goal, Sagittarius should figure prominently. If you want to talk about money, Taurus will relish the assignment. If seeking an astrology buff, look no father than the nearest Aquarian.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Genuine bargain is available. Key is to recognize what you want when you see it. Family member will co-operate. Throw off false pride. State needs. Your requests probably will be granted.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle continues high, take initiative. Sense of perception is heightened. You see beyond surface indications. You know what will occur before it happens. Follow through; be confident, positive.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Past responsibilities catch up. You are called upon to fulfill obligation. Do so. Trying to skip essentials would be an error. Realize this and respond accordingly. Capricorn is involved.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Friendship is tested. You could be embarrassed by riches in this area. Means one you care for uses influence to aid. Be as good a guest as you would be a host. Not easy but now it's necessary.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): New start, added independence, possible promotion all strongly indicated. Stress fulfillment of ambitions. Set sights on goal. Don't sell yourself short. Be independent, original.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Money connected with travel, education comes under consideration. Value judgments are accented. You are called upon to make decision in education, publishing areas. Heed inner voice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Light touch can overcome embarassing financial situation. Bring forth sense of humor when talking money with mate, partner. Sagittarius individual figures prominently. Key now is to be flexible.

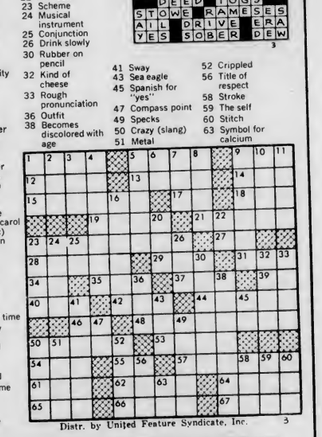
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Details may appear to multiply. Take one step at a time. Build on solid base. Get aid from Aquarius person. Tear down with idea of rebuilding. Be aware of alternatives. Legal matters high on agenda.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be sensible about money matters. Applies especially in dealing with one born under Libra. Those who share your interests will be of aid. Get going on basic chores. Views are vindicated.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Many notice another side of your nature. It is a part of you often kept hidden. It is soft, pliant; you make friends and influence people. Romance is featured. Love is given, received.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Situation close to home requires careful handling. Tendency is to see through rose-colored glasses. Key is to be sensitive, but practical. Real estate transaction could be on agenda.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Money and relatives do not mix now-not well. Put off financial discussions. Avoid senseless arguments. Be on move, but don't scatter forces. Finish what you start. Develop ideas. Stress versatility.



IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have ability to laugh at your own foibles. Your intellectual curiosity is one of your more ingratiating qualities. You have been through a period of change; you now have desire to settle, to find your place and to create your own design for living. Much of what you want will come to pass in up coming months.

Celtics Are Back

By DAVID GREEN

"Swish--Boston"

Ladies and gents the Boston Celtics are back. Surely not in the powerhouse of Cousy, Sharman, Russell, Heinsohn and Ramsey, but in a whirlwind of young upstarts and seasoned veterans.

By defeating the world champion Milwaukee Bucks last Friday the Celtics have shown the basketball world they are not only an exciting group of athletes but also a team that should be treated with the utmost respect by the proven National Basketball Association leaders. The Celtics (6-2) have shown they can win without all-pro John Havlicek. They have won convincingly without all-star Jo Jo White and what's more, the Celts have won when playing poorly; a characteristic of all sports champions.

Hustling center Dave Cowens (6'8") has proven he can play the pivot despite his lack of real height. Third year man Steve Kuberski appears to have the confidence he has needed to become a legitimate N.B.A. starter. His crashing of both the offensive and defensive boards bring Boston Garden fans roaring to their feet, while his aggressive play puts opponents through the floor.

Guards Jo Jo White and Don Chaney bring on memories of the Jones boys. A soft jumper by Jo Jo demands that you look twice at his jersey to make sure he's not number 24 (Sam Jones). Chaney's ballhawking on defense shows the maturity of a young K. C. Jones.

Pillars of the club are old champs John Havlicek, Tom Sanders and Don Nelson. The three men have 29 years pro experience between them. Watching them play reminds fans of the great days when Bill Russell would start the fast break off the boards for an easy layup downcourt.

Havlicek scored his 15,000th point against the Bucks last week. "Hondo" is priceless. Look for his number to be retired--but not too soon.

Nelson and Sanders step onto the court to give the youngsters a breather. They are the steadying force of the bunch of firey winners that surround them.

Yet as the team matures so does the coach. Tom Heinsohn, now in his third year at the helm, is now making the right substitutions at the right times. His strategy is more consistent than the gambling tactics of his two previous years. It may be because his players can do more with their natural ability but it must be pointed out Heinsohn has come a long way as well.

It won't be a championship year for the Boston Celtics. The Milwaukee Bucks do dominate the N.B.A. But theNew York Knicks and louder. Red Auerbach is lighting victory cigars once again.

DeFlavio Heads Weekly Conference All Stars

New Hampshire halfback Dennis Coady, UMass tackle Bill DeFlavio and Holy Cross cornerback Mike Guildoile have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Coady, a 5'7 165-lb. sophomore, carried 20 times for 101 yards, including TD runs of 13 and 7 yards, returned a punt 51 yards and caught a 9 yard pass to pace UNH to 26-0 win at Rhode Island that put the Wildcats in first place in the Conference with a 3-1 league record.

DeFlavio, a 5'9 220-lb. senior, tackled Vermont quarterbacks 6 times for 39 yards in losses to spark UMass to a 24-15 Conference win. DeFlavio, who was triple-teamed most of the day, was hailed by Catamount Coach Joe Scannella as "the best defensive player we've seen this year." UMass held Vermont to minus 58 yards rushing.

Guilfoile, a 5'10 155-lb. sophomore, had played only 5 minutes before Saturday. He intercepted 2 passes, returning one for a 38 yard TD to put HC ahead and stopping a fourth-quarter drive with the other, made 6 tackles and broke up 2 passes as HC tipped Northeastern 17-7.

NOTE TO MEDIA: Although new Yankee Conference members Holy Cross and Boston U. do not play enough league games to qualify for the Conference championship their players will be listed in the weekly award winners and statistical rankings.

A Season Of Surprises Boosts Harrier's Image

By JANIS AHMADJIAN

This has been a season full of surprises for the UMass Cross-Country Team, now Yankee Conference Champs. They've come a long way from what was expected of them at the beginning of the season. With the loss of the five top runners from last year and only two top veteran runners returning, speedy sophomore Doug O'Connell and junior Rick Barry, the future didn't look too bright and promising.

Coach Ken O'Brien first thought this would be a season of building and development due to the inexperience of the team. However, internal competition and momentum roll have both highly contributed to the harrier's success.

The loss of the top five had an extremely positive effect on the remaining members of the team. With relatively the same ability, they strove to fill those empty key positions and to keep them. No one is secure in his position and the ladder is constantly changing. Competition is keen; spirit and enthusiasm are high.

There have been many unexpected Redman surprises on the team that Coach O'Brien hadn't fully anticipated. First there is senior Tom Dederian, the "bearded Armenian", who did a fantastic job in Saturday's Yankee Conference meet placing second. He missed the fall semester last year but is making up for it now.

Sophomore Paul Segersten and junior Chris Chambers, both away from running for the past three years, have certainly gotten back into full condition showing powerful ability. Junior Pete Crisci who ran in his freshman year, but not while a sophomore, has developed into an extremely strong runner, the surprise of the season for UMass cross-country.

Then, of course, there are two runners, who though only freshmen, have certainly proven their valuable worth to the varsity team. Bill Gillan, cross-country sensation in Holliston High, has made the incredible jump from high school two mile cross-country up to the college varsity five mile level with unbelievable ease. In Saturday's Yankee Conference meet, he placed fourth and has continued all season to be one of the top runners on the team.

Randy Thomas, from nearby Fitchburg, has also shown measurable progress and strength though only a freshman on the varsity team.

These surprise additions to the team have combined with the powerful efforts of veteran runners. O'Connell has constantly been on top all season showing his exceptional ability, while Barry has shown consistent strength throughout the season.

Mike McCusker, Don Dunsky, Roger Nasatka, and Bob Sullivan, all powerful runners, have been in the top seven nearly half the time and could easily advance straight to the top.

With so many good runners Coach O'Brien is in a situation that most coaches dream of. He says that the team is an actual powerhouse, one of the strongest he's ever had.

The team is proud of their new cross-country course with the Orchard edition. Though extremely difficult, it builds endurance and confidence.

O'Brien feels that two factors have greatly contributed to the harrier's continued success. The first, is the great natural environment of Western Massachusetts which forms ideal conditions for cross-country running, tree- shaded roads and open grassy fields providing an infinite variety of paths. Second, is the tradition that the older veteran team members pass on to the younger ones. They set good examples of hard work and enjoyment of the sport, influencing the young to follow the same. They teach well says the coach.

Coach O'Brien is extremely pleased and happy with the harrier's success and is confidently looking forward to the upcoming meets. Today is the last home meet of the season against Central Connecticut and Coast Guard starting at 3:30 PM on the Wope fields. It is bound to be a thriller. Coming up Monday is the New England Cross-Country meet at Franklin Park.

Hughes Did Not Die To Prove A Point

By STEVE GERSHMAN

Since the tragic death of Chuck Hughes of the Detroit Lions, I waited for the football moralists to come out and wrap football. Well, I had to wait longer than I expected, but it finally happened last Friday in one of the Boston papers.

The writer came out and blasted football's violence and rocked its whole foundation. He sounded like a Sunday preacher spitting fire at mortal sinners. It gauls me to hear these opportunistic writers who wait for a coincidental accident like this to vent out all their hatred on the game. The best line on any of these stories is that the writer felt this way all along. Well, if he did, then he did a good job of hiding it.

Let's get one thing straight; Chuck Hughes died of a heart attack from a heart that was likened to that of an old man. He probably would have died soon whether he played ball or not. It was just an unfortunate stroke of luck that it had to happen on the field in front of so many.

If Chuck Hughes was an ordinary man, nobody would have said anything, but because he was a football player, then the moralists are screaming murder at the game. When a football player puts on a uniform, he realizes the risks involved.

I just hope no other opportunists take this tragedy and use it for ammunition for their fight against football. Chuck Hughes did not die trying to prove a point and so nobody else should put words into this tragedy.

Booters Seek Rebound Vs. Chiefs

By STEVE FERBER

About the toughest way for UMass to rebound from their latest three game skein would be to travel to Springfield, and face the Chiefs on their home astroturf. Which is exactly what UMass will be doing, as the 5-2-2, sixth ranked Redmen, face the seventh New England ranked Chiefs, who own a 7-3-0 record.

Springfield, like the Redmen, had hopes of post-season play throughout this '71 schedule, but neither team has lived up to their pre-season expectations. The earliest ratings to come out this fall placed Springfield and UMass third and fourth in New England behind Harvard and Brown. Well Harvard and Brown are still ahead of them, but so are Wesleyan and Tufts and Williams.

But as disappointing as the Chiefs have been, they have been unbeatable at home. And the reason is simple: astroturf. Astroturf, a surface that makes the game a quick one. The ball skips along on astroturf, and seemingly rolls forever, instead of slowing down due to the friction that is found on the regular good old grass fields. Players get cramps and burns on their legs from this surface, and a team that is unaccustomed to this playing surface is at a distinct disadvantage.

Once before have the Redmen played on astroturf. That was at B.U., at Nickerson Field in their second game of the season, and that game saw B.U., a big underdog, play UMass to a 0-0 tie; thus astroturf is likely to be the major factor in this afternoon's clash.

Springfield, with a 6-0-0 slate on their turf, has had their problems away from home and consecutive losses to Wesleyan and Yale, by 3-2 and 1-0 scores respectively dropped Springfield down in the ratings and out of post-season consideration.

FEATURETTE-Redman booter Lindo Alves skirts the Vermont defense in Saturday's loss to the Cats. The Redmen seek a return to the win column today at Springfield. (MDC photo by Bob Medeiros)

Among their wins have been Brown, Dartmouth and UConn, the latter being the only common opponent of both the Redmen and the Chiefs. UConn fell to the Chiefs 1-0, while the Redmen handily did away with the Huskies, some four weeks ago 4-0. But Springfield's win against Brown will be enough to tell UMass that there will be no picnic at Springfield today. While the Bruins travelled to Springfield, they found themselves against a Springfield squad that had lost just one game all season, and that by an upset to Southern Connecticut. Brown, at the time, was undefeated, but lost to Springfield 3-2, and finally the effect of the astroturf was finally making its mark.

But the Brown win was the only real high point for the Chiefs season, as they too had disappointing losses against underdogs. Thus today's game should see a strong battle, among two teams who still might be among the top five in New England on ability, but who suffered defeats, despite outplaying their opponents.

In Yankee Conference standing, Vermont is on top, and when the Redmen travel to New Hampshire, for their season finale on Saturday, they will be playing to tie Vermont for the title. URI also has a shot at a tie, as they host UConn on November 13th, and if they win at Kingston, they too will hold a share of the YanCon title at 4-1-0.

Today's game comes down to a big status game, as both teams boast excellent quality teams, with lots of skill on both sides. The game is especially important for the Redmen who must get back to their winning ways before facing the New Hampshire Wildcats in their bid to share the YanCon title.

Champion Harriers Host Tri-Meet In N.E. Tune Up

By JAY NESTOR

It's through the Orchard again for the UMass cross-country team tomorrow, as they tangle in tri-meet action with Central Connecticut State and the Coast Guard Academy scheduled to start at 3:30.

Neither team seems to be as strong as the Yankee Conference Champions, but they boast some fine individuals who will put the Redman harriers to the test on their gruelling home course.

Bill Lees and Steve Ellis are a fine one-two combination for CCSC, and Coast Gurard possesses a steady harrier by the name of Ed Bohlayar. After these men the depth is questionable with Coast Guard having a fifty-two second five-man split to the eighty second five-man split of CCSC.

Some of the most exciting aspects of the meet will take place within the UMass team itself. This is a fine chance for those who did not go to the Yankee Conference to make the New England team.

Mike McCusker and Don Dunsky will be looking for a good race which could give them the edge for the New England Meet. Team competition is keen in this Redman squad of such depth.

Many of the Yankee Conference veterans have been training through this meet in an effort to be in the best of shape, mentally and physically, for the New Englands this Monday. Apprehension centered on this meet is growing.

The cross-country now holds an eight win, three loss record. The losses were sustained in the first two tri-meets to Northeastern, Providence, and Harvard. Harvard does not compete in the New England Championships as they run the Heptagonals. The only other major New England power is Dartmouth who suffered a one point loss to Northeastern recently.

If the team goes through this tri-meet in good spirits, and everyone performs according to what he thinks is acceptable, the stage will be set for the New Englands.

UMass would have to be considered a dark horse, and if they pull it out, it will be a surprise to everyone-except the Redman harriers. They are confident in their ability to run as a team, and this could be a big factor.

This team has come a long way, and a good finish in the New Englands would climax a fine season. Tomorrow's tri-meet will be the last tuning up for the New Englands. At any rate those at the Orchard tomorrow will see the Yankee Conference Champions do what they do best.

Dobson Hurls International No-Hitter

TOYAMA, Japan (AP) — Pat Dobson made international baseball history Tuesday as he hurled the first no-hit, no-run game of his career and gave the Baltimore Orioles a 2-0 victory over Japan's champion Tokyo Yomiuri Giants.

Tetsuharu Kawakami, one of the greatest batters Japanese baseball ever produced and now manager of the champion Giants, praised Dobson's performance and said, "he will go down in U.S.-Japan baseball history as the greatest hurler of all-time."

Baltimore's manager Earl Weaver said, "It was the best job Pat did this year."

Dobson, one of Baltimore's four 20-game winners the past season, outshone first baseman Boog Powell who smashed a two-run homer in the fourth inning, accounting for the Orioles' only tallies.

The Orioles, now in Japan as guests of the Giants for a 17-game barnstorming tour, are the 14th U.S. major league baseball team to visit Japan since 1931, and Dobson was the first American to pitch a no-hitter.

After the game, the excited Dobson said this was the first no-hit, no-run game in his 11-year professional baseball career.

Completing the nine innings in 115 pitches, he forced nine men to ground out to infielders, five to fly out to infielders and six to fly out to outfielders while striking out seven and issuing three walks.

The Orioles scored their only runs in the top of the fourth when Merv Retternmund singled and scored ahead of Powell, who smashed his second home run in Japan off Yomiuri's ace, Tsuneo Horiuchi.

Horiuchi, 23, who had a 14-8 won-lost record the past season, yielded six hits in going the distance. The loss was his second to the Orioles, while Dobson chalked up his second victory.

NSA Delegation Funds Upheld

By HUGH OWEN

Heated debate filled the Student Senate meeting last night when President Lee Sandwen moved to go into Special Business to vote to cut off the funds for a UMass student delegation to the National Student Association.

Sandwen argued that the NSA conference was a waste of time and student money, especially when the money could go to much worthier causes. He also cited that the students were only going on a "junket" and not really obtaining any worthwhile information at the conference.

Debate then flared over whether the NSA conference was really necessary and whether the money should be appropriated to send delegates to the conference. Opinion flashed back and forth across the room over the issue. The final result being that the Senate voted to fund the delegation going to the conference.

Then the Senate moved on to New Business. A bill was introduced that would establish an Ad-Hoc committee to investigate the feasibility of building and maintaining a low income apartment complex primarily for married students. The bill was passed in short order.

Mick Apostola presented a bill that would honor Dr. Oswald Tippo by recommending that the new twenty-eight story extension of the library be named the "Oswald Tippo Library." The question was brought up as to whether a building in the University could be named after a living person. It was resolved that it was possible and the Senate passed the bill.

In other business the Senate moved to appropriate additional funds to purchase a new University bus to be ready for use next spring. The Senate also passed a bill that would recommend to the Chancellor that all non-academic undergraduate student fees must be fully discussed by the Rents and Fees committee of the Student Senate before any final action is taken effecting the fees; and that no undergraduate fees may be levied without the consent of the Rents and Fees Committee and/or the Student Senate.

Student Senate President Lee Sandwen announced that more than twenty members of the University's undergraduate Student Senate will be making personal commitments this Saturday (November 6) to protest the continuation of the War in Vietnam.

Most pledged to be in Boston on that day to rally along with students from throughout New England on the Common. Eleven, including Sandwen, will be fasting from 7 p.m. Wednesday until 7 p.m. Saturday to make clear their commitment to the purposes of the Boston rally.

Then the Senate once again engaged in fierce debate. Being argued was a bill that would allow Senators serving as Judicial Advocates and serving on the Women's Committee to fulfill the Senate requirement of serving on one Senate committee. The question had not yet been resolved at the time of the Collegian deadline.

The Running Of Campus Center

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

Who runs the Campus Center?

It is necessary to understand the administration, the Student Union Governing (SUG) Board, the management in the Campus Center and probably the student body to answer this question.

In other words, to get a clear picture of what's going on in the Campus Center, be prepared to be at Whitmore, the Sug Board office and the management offices in the Campus Center at the same time.

The issues concerning the Campus Center have long been hidden behind misconceptions. The issues have also been further distorted because of the personalities involved in the various and far reaching issues which will eventually affect the individual student.

The major issue concerning the Campus Center is the fact that the students feel that they own the Campus Center. Therefore the students feel that they should have complete control of all Campus Center operations. The average students feels that if he is to carry the financial burden of the Campus Center then he should have final and complete say in all matters concerning the operation of the Campus Center.

The Campus Center is divided up into a number of organizations that are supervised by professional management. Each of these organizations is suppose to pay their operating costs. All of the organizations with the exception of food services is able to pay for their own operating costs. The profits that are made from such services as the Hotel, the Bookstore and the Campus Center Restaurant go back into the running costs of the building.

The University provides the Campus Center with the utilities such as water and heat. There is also a Management Services Agreement which provides the Center with services such as repair work from the Physical Plant. It is up to the student to pay one-fourth of the operating costs which is approximately $300,000.

It is also the student that must cover the building costs. The Campus Center cost the students $20 million to build, but security payments and interest charges will probably bring the actual cost to over $30 million. The student covers the operating and building costs in the $60 that he pays in a Campus Center tax.

Another aspect of the Campus Center is that the student is paying much of the money that keeps the Campus Center services "in the black". The student does this by paying for services with prices far from competitive. The student is the major revenue producing area as far as the Campus Center is concerned. So each year the students will pour millions of dollars into the Campus Center.

It was only last spring that a committee was formed to study reorganization of the Campus Center. This study was made as part of a larger study that was to include the whole campus. The committee was made up of faculty members, students and representatives from the Administration. There were no members from the Sug Board on the committee to study reorganization of the Campus Center.

The study for the reorganization of the Campus Center was presented to the Sug Board after its completion. The Sug Board quickly rejected the plan.

Bob Nims, President of the Sug Board, said, "We did not reject the plan because we didn't like it, but because we felt we needed more time to study it."

A major issue has been the question of how much input there should be in the formulation of policy in the Campus Center by Whitmore.

Dr. William F. Field, Dean of Students, said that he doesn't think that the Sug Board should have final say in policy matters concerning the Campus Center. He said that the Campus Center doesn't belong to anyone.

The University is a total institution of which the Campus Center belongs," said Field. "The Campus Center is interdependent. You have to look at the whole University in order to understand the workings of the Campus Center."

Field said that a building such as the Campus Center was needed by the University community. He said that it was decided by the Board of Trustees that student money should be used to build and operate the building. This was done with the idea that state money would be used to build and operate the new library and fine arts center.

Field said that all parties should have a say in the decisions of the Campus Center. Nims agrees that Whitmore, too, should have a role to play in the Campus Center, along with the Sug Board.

Emory Rounds, who was on the Sug Board for two years before resigning this year, said that the Campus Center should be sold to a private concern. He said that one of the problems in the Campus Center has been that people on the payroll know that they are going to get paid whether or not their particular service shows a profit or not.

Rounds said that when you have to make money you have to please people. He said that what is needed is a fresh drive to make money for the Campus Center to improve services and possibly lower prices.

Commenting on the Sug Board, Rounds said that the trouble with having students on the Board is that they usually don't have the time or concern to get involved in the management of the Campus Center. He said that in order to know what's really happening in the Campus Center it would be necessary to work with management on an eight hour day.

Indian-Pakistan Border Conflict Heating Up

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The government charged Wednesday that four Pakistani warplanes intruded into India's air space, but were driven off by Indian jets. It also said Pakistani forces carried out hostile actions along the borders.

At the same time, United News of India reported that 25 Pakistani soldiers were killed in battles with Indian forces in two eastern villages during the day. It identified the villages as Gede and Sikarpur.

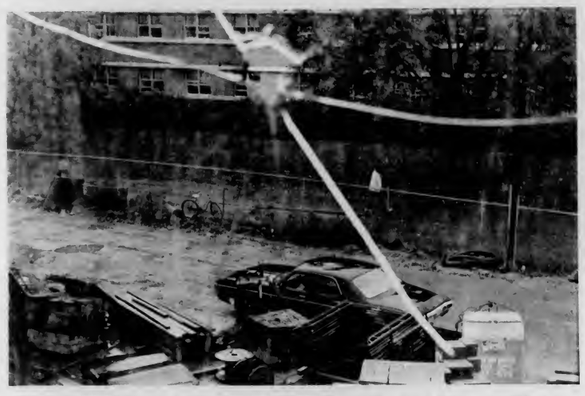
The agency added that Indian border forces fired on a Pakistani helicopter flying over Indian territory in the same area on Wednesday.

The government spokesman gave no details of the air action and it was not clear whether the jets of either side used their armament.

He said the Pakistani planes, in flights of two, flew over Indian territory Tuesday afternoon in the Punjab sector. It marked the first time the government has reported violations over Punjab.

All previous air intrusions were reported to have occurred over the northernmost Indian state of Kashmir.

"Our air force took immediate action to drive the planes away," the spokesman said.



The government also charged the Pakistanis with three cease-fire violations on Sunday and Monday along the Kashmir border. These were reported to U.N. observers in the area, the spokesman said.

He also reported a number of incidents along India's western border, including the derailing of a passenger train by a mine in West Bengal state Monday. The incident injured 26 persons, the spokesman said.

The same day, a bomb exploded in a movie theater in a small West Bengal town, killing four persons and wounding 46, several of them critically, the spokesman said.

Six Pakistani saboteurs, he said, surrendered to Indian forces on Saturday along the West Bengal border. The agents were carrying mines, hand grenades and a wirecutter.

Although the Indian government has attributed hundreds of cease-fire violations to Pakistani forces along the eastern and western borders, the spokesman emphasized "our army has strict orders not to cross the border" in retaliatory action.

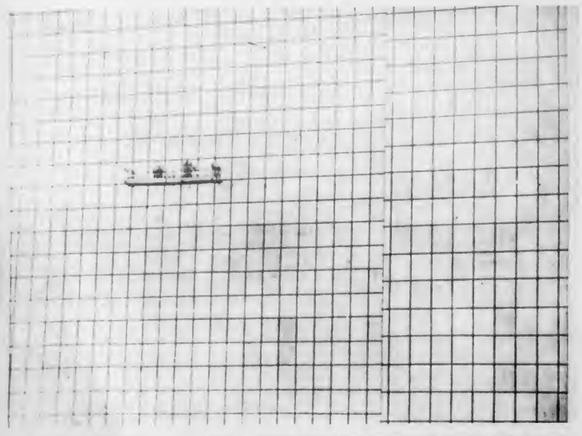
Effects Of Corporate Guidelines Nil

NEW YORK (AP) — The government's new guideline limiting corporate dividend increases to 4 per cent in 1972 appears to have had little immediate impact in financial circles.

Brokers and economists said Wednesday that putting a clamp on dividend boosts failed to arouse much reaction because:



Dividends have become secondary to capital gains as the goal of investors in stocks.

As a result of the economic slowdown in 1970 and 1971 relatively few corporations are in a position to consider raising dividends now.

The Committee on Interest Rates and Dividends said Tuesday that after Jan. 1 dividend increases should be held to 4 per cent of the base rate paid in fiscal 1969, 1970 or 1971. This raised the curtain on Phase 2 of President Nixon's economic program. Further clampdowns on wages and prices after the initial 90-day freeze expires Nov. 13 have yet to be disclosed.

"Only a few stocks sell on a yield dividend basis," said Newton D. Zinder, analyst for the brokerage firm of E. F. Hutton & Co., in commenting on the guideline. "Most sell on the basis of earnings."

Robert Johnson, research director for another brokerage house, Paine, Webber, Jackson & Curtis, agreed, saying, "Not many people are investing in stocks for income these days, but instead are seeking capital gains."

Gregory Put's In Surprise Appearance

Humorist Dick Gregory spoke to an overflow audience in the Student Union Ballroom yesterday morning as part of the School of Education's Center for Innovation presentation on institutionalized racism.

"The U.S. is the number one racist country in the world," Gregory said. He explained that racism is built into the institutions of the country.

No woman can be elected President of the U.S., according to Gregory, because children are taught in the schools that a man has always been President. They are unaccustomed to the idea that a woman can do the job, therefore they refuse to accept it, Gregory said. He compared discriminatory attitude toward females to the racist attitude toward Blacks in the U.S.

Institutional racism manifests itself at UMass and other colleges because everything is slanted to a white racist system, according to Gregory. Some of this is conscious, and some of it unconcious, he explained, but no matter what it is, the whole institution-system will have to be changed to deal with human beings in general and not just whites.

"When you understand the institution, you understand how to deal with it," Gregory said. He stressed that understanding racism is a "big job", and that it is most important to recognize that the racism exists.

Gregory pointed out several fallacies that are generally believed to be true about the Negro birth and mortality rates. He also noted the ironies of teaching white subjects to Black children, who are always inundated with white ideology. Black studies is important because a man who doesn't understand himself is no good, he said.

Gregory said it is very important to participate in the peace march scheduled for November 6th. He added however that an untapped army for peace exists among the people at home who don't want to go out and march. He suggested that a turkey or Christmas boycott be organized for these people "in the secret of their houses" and see if an end to the war can be brought about by economic pressure.

On the topic of civil rights bills, Gregory said he was "tired".

The Center for Innovation sponsored Gregory in conjunction with the School of Ed, which is highlighting of the problem of racism this year.

Bishops Uphold Marriage Ban

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The World Synod of Bishops has overwhelmingly upheld the ban against marriage by Latin-rite priests and forbidden them to hold political office without permission from their bishops.

One Roman Catholic priest holds major political office in U.S. government--Rep. Robert F. Drinan, a Massachusetts Democrat and a Jesuit.

Father Drinan was elected to Congress last year. During the campaign Father Drinan, on leave of absence as dean of the law school at Boston College, said, "I asked and received permission from my Jesuit superiors just the way I would if I wanted to change assignments."

The section banning priests from holding political office or assuming leadership roles for political factions--except in rare cases with their bishops' approval--was approved 149 to 1, with 5 abstentions and 47 qualified approvals.

It said all priests should keep "a certain distance from political activities," adding that the specific priestly mission must pervade priests' lives and take priority over all else.

"Assuming leadership or militantly active function must be ruled out, for every priest," the approved propostion said, "unless in concrete and exceptional circumstances it is required for the good of the community and with the consent of the bishop in consultation with a council of priests, and if need be, with the whole episcopal conference."

The strong vote for priestly celibacy was a blow to liberals who maintain that lifting the ban is the only way to attract more young men to the priesthood. But the synod also left room for a broad recommendation that already-married men be ordained, to discourage defections.

These were the key decisions in voting on the synod's priesthood document. The results were announced Wednesday by the Vatican.

The biennial meeting of bishops also learned that a conservative oriented "constitution" for the Roman Catholic Church has been defeated by votes mailed in by bishops. The vote was an unprecedented rejection by bishops of a major Vatican document.

The chances for advising Pope Paul VI to allow ordination of married men appeared to have gained strength. A proposition meant to discourage all married priesthood got only 95 "yes" votes--far short of the 134 needed for passage.

Ten voted against that propostion, six abstained and 91 submitted "reservations" or "modi."

The Wednesday session started with a report by Pericle Cardinal Felici, head of the Vatican Commission to Revise Canon Law, on rejection by bishops of the propsed "constitution" or "fundamental law."

The law, meant as a preamble to a revised church law, underscored papal authority and appeared to make Bishops' synods take a back seat to the Roman Curia. Critics also said it left priests and laymen too little voice in shaping church reforms.

Cardinal Felici's commission eked out a narrow victory in a mail referendum on whether such a law should even exist. But the proposal as drafted was rejected 422 to 61, with 798 approvals "with reservations."

"Reservations" do not count as a "yes" vote but usually offer some support for a proposal along with criticism. In some cases, however, these written opinions may tend toward a negative vote and may include a wholly different substitute proposal.

Mobe Plans For Nov. 6

By Judd Sparling

The UMass Student Mobilization Committee met last night to organize members to work at various duties leading up to the Nov. 6 End the War demonstration in Boston.

At the meeting, led by Co-chairperson Tom Moriarty, members volunteered their time manning the SMC tables selling bus tickets to Boston for Saturday's demonstration.

Members volunteered to pass out MOBE leaflets at all dining commons, the Student Union, and the Hatch tomorrow night. Moriarty also requested SMC members to volunteer as marshalls for the demonstration.

The SMC expects to need at least two chartered buses and probably more, to accommodate UMass students who want to demonstrate Saturday.

Thursday night at 8:30 on WMUA, SMC members Tom Moriarty, Mike Brillo and George Johnson will discuss in detail their organization's plans and activities to end the war.

Amherst To Sign Police Aid Pact

The Amherst Board of Selectmen yesterday voiced its intention to sign the Lower Pioneer Valley Police Mutual Aid Agreement, but postponed official action until the final draft of the agreement is made available.

The Board also passed action on land-taking in order to acquire East Amherst school sites, approved the renewal of certain town notes pending reimbursement from the state, and accepted the long-range capital budget for study.

The selectmen also approved three license applications for a total of nine game machines on the first floor of the Campus Center at UMass.

Deputy Police Chief Donald Maia presented the Lower Pioneer Valley Police agreement to the board and made suggestions regarding Amherst's participation in it.

The agreement calls for cooperative police efforts between the 40 communities in the Lower Pioneer Valley. Maia called it "the first formalized agreement between communities...the first to spell out the communities' commitment, financially and otherwise." The police mutual aid group would concentrate on emergencies such as natural disasters and civil disturbances.

Maia suggested the town enter the agreement but recommended the town not participate in the "tactical squad" program because the training required would create a manpower shortage in Amherst. He asked the selectmen to reserve the right to enter any future project under the police mutual aid agreement.

The order of land-taking adopted by the selectmen includes three parcels of land for which the town will pay $160,150.

On the request of Town Treasurer Alan Hobart, the board agreed to renew two town notes which the town cannot pay until it is reimbursed by the state.

In other business, the selectmen signed a memorandum agreeing to the designation of Northampton as administering agent of the Emergency Employment Act for Hampshire County.

The act provides Federal money for hiring some town personnel according to the town's population and level of unemployment.

According to Tegley, the town is currently employing an engineering aid under the act. He also expressed confidence that the town's application for the funding of one patrolman position would be granted.

The application of the Cheese Gift Shop of Amherst for a package goods store license was taken under advisement by the board. Atty. Paul Ford, representing the shop's manager, Josepha Kwapien, indicated the license request was for wine only.

No Off-Cape Oil Drilling Allowed Yet

BOSTON (AP)-State Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said Wednesday night he has assurances from the U.S. Interior Department that no exploratory drilling for oil off the New England coast until jurisdictional disputes are settled in the courts.

Quinn reacted to reports that the Interior Department was preparing to hold hearings on leasing areas off Cape Cod and the New Jersey-Maryland shore for the first such drilling off the East Coast.

Quinn said his office obtained "explicit assurances" Wednesday from U.S. Solicitor Gen. Erwin N. Griswold and Under Secretary of the Interior William T. Tecora that "no issue of permits is contemplated at this time."

Attorneys general from 13 Atlantic Coast states, including Quinn, have a suit before the U.S. Supreme Court on whether the states or the federal government have jurisdiction over the ocean floor more than three miles off the coast.

He said he would authorize no agreement between the state and the federal government until "the court resolves the complex constitutional issues involved."

Rehnquist May Disqualify Self From Wire Tap Cases

WASHINGTON (AP)-William H. Rehnquist implied strongly Wednesday that he would disqualify himself from wiretap cases if he is confirmed to a seat on the Supreme Court.

Testifying before the Senate Judiciary Committee the nominee defended the Nixon administration's wiretap policies. But he said surveillance should be used only to solve or prevent crime-and not to stifle dissent. And he said the primary purpose of the Bill of Rights is to "put restraints on the government."

Rehnquist said that as an assistant attorney general he acted as an adviser on wiretapping and that "if the Justice Department position was indefensible or personally obnoxious to me I would have resigned."

Rehnquist was reluctant at times to give his views of wiretapping, citing an "attorney-client relationship" with Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell and with President Nixon.

But drawn out by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., he made some general observations including that he does not think government bugging, with and without judicial warrants, is "pervasive."

The Nixon administration's policies are up for decision in the Supreme Court, particularly Mitchell's stand that a warrant is not required in order to wiretap groups or individuals he concludes may pose a security threat to the government.

Rehnquist did not say specifically that he would not sit in such cases. But he said he thinks a justice would be disqualified if he "personally participated in litigation" or played the role of "advising." He then described his job on wiretapping as "advisory."

Again with some reluctance Rehnquist gave the committee his general view that wiretapping "is not an appealing type of thing and it is justified only by exigent circumstances."

Rehnquist said he has changed his mind since 1964 when he wrote a letter to a Phoenix newspaper opposing a local ordinance to assure blacks equal public accommodations.

He told Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., who raised the question, that he found the ordinance readily accepted by the people in Phoenix and, more important, he had become aware of "the strong concern minorities have for recognition of their rights."

Asked about a 1967 letter and his views on school integration, Rehnquist said his own son had profited from playing basketball and football on integrated teams in a Virginia suburban school.

But, the nominee stressed, the Negroes who attended the school live in the neighborhood. He said he believes in the "concept of neighborhood schools" and "has some reservations about transporting students great distances" to accomplish desegregation.

Rehnquist's views on these points were drawn out by Sens. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., and Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., critics of many of the policies of the Nixon administration. Rehnquist had a role in formulating the government's position on wiretapping and other sensitive issues as head of the Justice Department's office of legal counsel.

As he appeared at the confirmation hearing, he and President Nixon's other nominee for the Supreme Court, Lewis F. Powell Jr. were rated highly qualified by the American Bar Association.

Elections Show No Trends

WASHINGTON (AP)-Democrats and Republicans lodged counter-claims of national success Wednesday in the outcome of odd-year city and state elections. But the real message of the scattered balloting may have been that, nationally, there isn't any.

The strategy that worked in Kentucky flopped in Pennsylvania. The hard-line, law-and-order approach that helped Frank L. Rizzo capture Philadelphia's City Hall took a drubbing in Boston.

A Democrat captured Tuesday's biggest prize as Wendell Ford was elected governor of Kentucky, boosting his party's statehouse dominance to 30 of the 50 states.

Ford campaigned against President Nixon on economic grounds, and said his victory was a portent of what is to come in 1972, the beginning of a "dump Nixon" movement.

In general, National Chairman Lawrence F. O'Brien said the Ford victory in Kentucky was particularly significant as "the first major referendum" on President Nixon's new economic program. Ford defeated Republican Tom Emberton, who had the active backing of outgoing GOP Gov. Louie B. Nunn.

Predictably, Sen. Robert J. Dole, the Republican national chairman, denied that. "...Kentucky issues were mostly local, and I can see little significance in the outcome of that race," he said.

Passport Requires Loyalty Oath

WASHINGTON (AP)- Secretary of State William P. Rogers has ordered that every person applying for a passport be required to take an oath of allegiance, ending for the time being at least a dispute dating to the 1950s.

State Department officials acknowledged Wednesday that Rogers had decided on a mandatory oath even though recent Supreme Court decisions have eased restrictions on passport applications. "There didn't seem to be any real reason why an oath shouldn't be required," one official said.

The secretary's action followed a July directive by a federal District Court that the department decide by Oct. 31 to either make the oath mandatory or drop it altogether.

Until recent years any American citizen applying for a passport had to either swear or affirm his allegiance to the United States. However, the passport oath came under attack in the 1960s by the American Civil Liberties Union and others who said it was irrelevant.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP)-Protests against the planned underground nuclear explosion off the Alaskan coast at Amchitka Island ranged from Anchorage across Canada on Wednesday and even echoed in Britain's House of Lords.

A three-judge federal appeals court in Washington refused for a second time to halt the five-megaton test set for Saturday afternoon by the Atomic Energy Commission. Environmentalist opponents of the blast said they would study the possibility of an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

DETROIT (AP)-Sales of new cars by U.S. automakers in October were the best for any month in the history of the industry, as buyers flocked to showrooms to take advantage of frozen prices.

The four major U.S. automakers sold 933,713 cars in October, shattering the mark of 885,328 set in October 1968. Because of new model introductions, October is traditionally the industry's strongest sales month.

SAIGON (AP)-Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird met the top U.S. officials in Saigon Wednesday night to discuss plans to send thousands of GIs home for Christmas.

Laird said American battlefield casualties for the seven-day period ended last Saturday were the lowest at any time since March 1965, when U.S. forces expanded their mission from an advisory role to include combat operations.

Although Laird declined to say how many U.S. soldiers were killed in action during the period, informants put the toll at two.

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP)-A 22-year-old former mental patient climbed to the tower of a junior high school he once attended, fired sporadically with a rifle for two hours failing to hit anyone, and then committed suicide, police said.

Michael O'Hearn, a former student at Mid High School in Carlsbad, walked into the building at about 10 a.m., carrying a gunnysack with a 30-30 rifle protruding from the top and carrying a .22 automatic.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate passed a $2 billion military construction bill Wednesday after some senators again underlined the evils of excessive dollar spending overseas.

One of the controversial issues concerned the $5.8 million included in the bill for conversion of heating plants in U.S. Army barracks in Germany.

Prayer Vote Showdown Comes Monday In House

WASHINGTON (AP)-Opponents of the school-prayer amendment are gaining ground in the final days before Monday's House vote, but neither side is eager to predict victory.

Spokesmen for both sides said Wednesday opponents of the amendment are picking up strength from congressmen who previously supported it or were undecided.

And House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla, announced his opposition and said he thinks it will fail.

"In the past week the mail to some offices has reversed itself and congressmen who once supported it are joining our side," said Stuart Johnson, a Washington attorney who is helping lead the anti-amendment forces.

"There is some vacillation," conceded an aide to Rep. John Buchanan, R-Ala., a supporter of the proposal.

A two-thirds majority of "yes" votes among those present and voting is necessary to approve the amendment and send it to the Senate, where its opponents say they are not sure it can be stopped.

If all current members of the House were present and voting, 143 nays would be required to prevent the required two-thirds majority.

"We've got over a hundred we can count on now," Johnson said. "It will be decided by those who are now undecided and the no-shows."

Mrs. Ben Ruhlin of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, and an ardent supporter of the amendment, said Wednesday she thinks passage is certain, declaring there are only about 88 sure opponents.

She said some of those congressmen have been fooled by church officials who oppose the prayer amendment and claim to be speaking for large groups of rank-and-file churchgoers.

Jim Hamilton, executive director of the National Council of Churches, which is working against the amendment, said "It's a very tough political issue and it's an awfully tight contest. At this point we have made more progress interpretting" the significance of the amendment "than I had thought we would. I'm cautiously optimistic.

Hamilton and other opponents say the amendment-which would also have to be approved by the Senate and three-fourths of the 50 states legislatures-say organized prayer has no place in public schools.

"Prayer is an intimate and personal voluntary kind of expression of faith," Hamilton said. "No one can define 'non-denominational' prayer which the amendment seeks to allow.

Both Sen. Sam J. Ervin, D-N.C., a leading opponent of the proposal, and Hamilton said Supreme Court decisions of 1962 and 1963 outlawing organized and required prayer do not prohibit a student from saying his own prayer "so long as he doesn't bother anyone," Ervin said.

A GREETING MIDST THE DOOM--Pickets parade near the White House today, warning of possible catastrophe if a nuclear device is exploded underground at Amchitka, an Alaskan island. One marcher carries a sarcastic greeting to the 49th state.

Advisor Warns Against Test; Amchitka Set For Saturday

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Nixon's top environmental advisor warned, in a secret document made public Wednesday, that a planned five-megaton atomic blast on Amchitka Island could set off a chain of earthquakes like a line of falling dominos and perhaps send a tidal wave across the Pacific Ocean.

Environment groups seeking a court injunction to halt the blast told the U.S. Court of Appeals that the Atomic Energy Commission, in belittling such hazards, had deliberately omitted such adverse views from its public environmental impact statement.

The AEC announced meanwhile it has tentatively scheduled the blast for Saturday, Nov. 6, at 5 p.m. EST- 11 a.m. on Amchitka, an island in the remote Aleutians.

A three-judge federal appeals court Wednesday refused for a second time to halt a massive nuclear explosion scheduled for Saturday on Amchitka Island off the Alaskan coast.

The court turned back environmentalist opponents of the test a few hours after it was disclosed that President Nixon's top environmental advisor had warned that the five-megaton blast could set off a chain of earthquakes and perhaps send a tidal wave across the Pacific Ocean.

The U.S. Court of Appeals decision virtually closed out any possibility that the underground blast will be stopped.

Opponents of the blast said they would study the possibility of an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Environmentalists had claimed that even government experts believe the explosion could trigger earthquakes or tidal waves, kill wildlife or release radioactive waste into the air.

Lawyers for those seeking the injunction argued that the Atomic Energy Commission not only belittled such hazards but deliberately omitted such adverse views in its public environmental-impact statement.

At the same time, the AEC made public four government documents previously made available only to attorneys for the seven environment groups headed by the Committee for Nuclear Responsibility.

One of the key documents released Wednesday is an environmental assessment by Russell E. Train, chairman of the President's Council on Environmental Quality.

Train told an under-secretaries' committee of the National Security Council that the huge blast, code-named "Cannikin," could trigger an earthquake by its direct impact on earth faults, or by forcing water into faults and lubricating them.

Train said that earlier, smaller atomic blasts had caused quakes whose force was always less than the blast itself. If that pattern were dependable, he said, "then there would be no apprehension with regard to the Cannikin event."

"Unfortunately, this is not the case," Train said.

He said recent scientific findings indicate a large earthquake may be made up of a series of smaller quakes, each one setting off the next.

In this theory, Train said, "Once one lock point is broken, sufficient energy may be released to break other lock points. If the stored strain energy is large then the triggered earthquake could be of much greater magnitude than the triggering event.

"The underground explosion could serve as the first domino of the row of dominos leading to a major earthquake."

"The real danger from the triggering of a large earthquake by the nuclear explosion is in a tidal wave or tsunami...It is not possible at this time to assess quantitatively the probability of a tsunami following the explosion," he said.

Foreign-Aid Impasse Still Unresolved

WASHINGTON (AP) — A two-hour discussion between Secretary of State William P. Rogers and the Senate Foreign Relations Committee failed Wednesday to resolve the foreign-aid impasse.

Rogers made clear following the session that the administration still wants an extension until next June of the program, defeated last week in the Senate, at about current levels. But Senate critics restated their determination to force sharp cuts and changes.

In the House, Chairman George H. Mahon of the Appropriations Committee said he would introduce a continuing resolution, due for action next week, to extend the aid program and provide funding of other federal programs until Congress adjourns--in about a month.

But the continuing resolution, a device used to keep programs operating when regular appropriations bills remain unpassed, faces stiff opposition in the Senate. It would, in effect, keep the defeated aid program in operation.

Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, reiterated he thinks his committe can come up with a new aid bill within a week.

Several members of the committee said they expect it to write a bill authorizing $2.5 billion or less for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972. And Sen. Gale McGee said he thinks Rogers would accept a "bare bones" bill pending further review next year.

"He doesn't like it," the Wyoming Democrat said. "But he is reasonable enough to have caught the tone."

Sen. John Sherman Cooper, R-Ky., predicting a revised measure might total as little as $2.2 billion, was asked if he thinks the administration would accept it.

"I think they would," he said. "I think they'll have to." Rogers himself said the administration wants the aid program to be extended until next June 30 "at about its present level."

That is about $3.1 billion, compared with $3.5 billion sought this year., $3.4 billion voted by the House and $2.9 billion in the rejected Senate measure.

Rogers did make at least one concession to the committee by agreeing to accept a $341-million spending limit and other restrictions on U.S. activities in Cambodia.

He indicated also willingness to discuss the limits of U.S. involvement in Indochina in light of the close Senate vote to remove from the aid bill an amendment cutting off funds for all U.S. actions except withdrawal, members said.

Fulbright, and Sens. Stuart Symington, D-Mo., and Frank Church, D-Idaho, saw little in what Rogers said that would indicate a relaxation of the administration position.

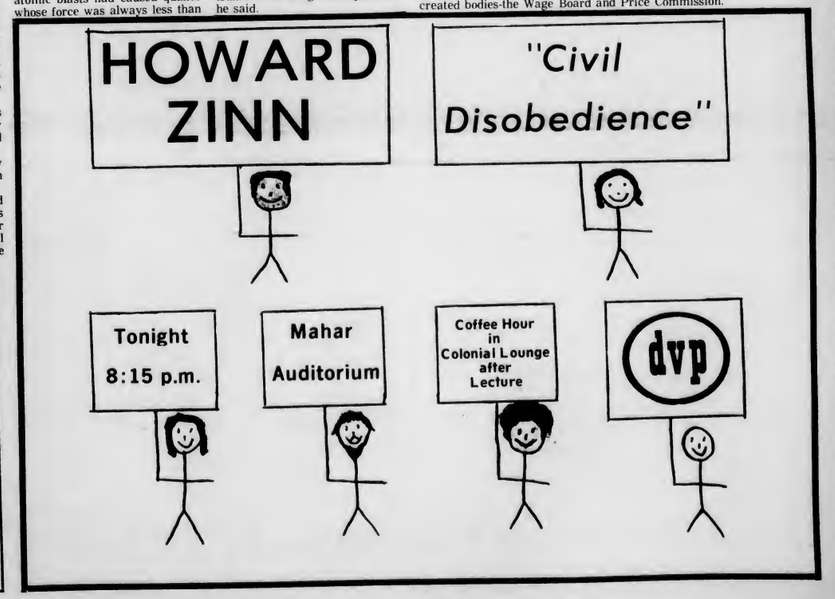
No Damages Under Phase 2

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Banking Committee refused Wednesday to write into Phase 2 legislation provision for consumers to sue for damages if they are charged more than approved prices.

Defeat of this and several other amendments proposed to the draft of President Nixon's legislation increased indications that it will be approved in essentially the form he favors.

However, key votes on interest controls and duration of the wage-price regulating authority were put off until Thursday.

Some members are pressing for a shorter extension of control powers than Nixon seeks to give Congress a chance to review the operation of the controls some time during the next year. Otherwise, the committee appeared inclined to give the President essentially what he asked.



The administration is asking for extension of wage-price-rent control powers for a full year, until April 30, 1973.

The legislation also would add standby authority to control interest rates and dividends, strengthen enforcement provisions and provide a special review court. It would ratify decisions already made on wage and price matters.

As the committee concluded public hearings on the legislation Tuesday, consumer advocate Ralph Nader urged it to rewrite the legislation completely.

He called it "the most radical proposal made by any president in the 20th century," involving a massive grant of power to presidentially-created bodies-the Wage Board and Price Commission.

Classic Guitar And Girl Watching

By TONY GRANITE

(Ed Note: A collection of news notes from the pages of the student press of other campuses.)

CLASSIC GUITAR is a new course at Fresno (Calif.) State College, which has drawn more than 60 students, according to the Insight, laboratory newspaper of the journalism department there.

Instructor John Urritia says the course is popular because the guitar is a "comfortable" instrument which is highly portable.

The 15-week course carries a fee of $38. Instruction focuses on playing techniques from 17th to 20th Centuries, as well as some folk and contemporary msuic.

MEANWHILE, THE DAILY CARDINAL of UWisconsin, flushed with the victory of discovering 100 per cent affirmative response to the question, "are you a girl watcher?", did it again.

Two secretaries, a coed, and a lady bus driver told their inquiring photog-reporter the good news in varying ways: "It would be a shame if one of the football stars went by and I didn't see him."

"I don't have a boyfriend, so I like to keep myself open."

"Boys with paunchy stomachs and freckles are most attractive to me."

"Next to my pet goldfish, Rex, boys are the prettiest objects I could watch."

HONEST PROF AND TEXTBOOKS have been noted at Michigan State, and the word has traveled as far as Mankato (Minn) State College, where the Daily Reporter reports that one of three authors of a textbook used in an Ag class is refunding dollar bills to every student who buys his text.

"We are here to teach students, not to profit from them," they say. "A professor is a professional, not a mercenary."

SEX IS NEVER AN EMERGENCY is the title of a free booklet on sex education that is being distributed at Queens (NY) College, according to a recent issue of Phoenix.

The 54-page monograph was prepared by a student personnel dean and four students who took part in a tutorial on sex education at the College.

A second tutorial is now meeting, with a series of speakers who present such discussions as "Sex Advice Your Family Doctor Never Gave You" and "To Be or Not To Be Raped."

BICYCLISTS BEWARE is a new cry at the Texas Tech campus, according to The University Daily.

The newspaper has announced that traffic security offers will begin issuing tickets for "moving" violations that will be returnable in city court.

Among the "crimes" are listed "running stop signs or lights, riding on sidewalks, wrong way on one-way streets, and stopping in the street to talk with pedestrians or other bike riders."

No-Fault Property Signed Into Law

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Francis W. Sargent Wednesday signed into law a bill extending the Massachusetts' first-in-the-nation no-fault automobile insurance concept to include property damage coverage.

The bill, which in effect combines property damage and collision insurance, also makes such coverage compulsory. And it requires insurance companies to settle claims within 15 days.

Companies which fail to settle claims within the time limit risk paying double damages if a motorist's suit prevails in court.

The extension of the law, under the bill, is to take effect Jan. 1. But Sargent also announced that he is filing legislation giving the commissioner of insurance authority to delay implementation for one year.

The governor and Insurance Commissioner John G. Ryan told newsmen that it was not clear whether President Nixon's wage-price freeze could effect the implementation of the program. They suggested that since it is a new program, it would be exempt from the freeze.

A limited no-fault plan, covering compulsory liability insurance, took effect in Massachusetts last January. According to reports by state officials, that plan has provided dramatic savings to the insurance industry by reducing the number of claims filed and the average cost per claim.

Premium rates for compulsory liability insurance were decreased by 15 per cent this year from last year's rates in anticipation of the success of no-fault.

Savings under the plan have been substantially more than that, according to state insurance officials. Sargent also signed a bill Wednesday authorizing Ryan to set up the machinery for providing rebates on this year's premiums or additional reductions on premium rates in 1972.

Under the limited no-fault plan, claims under $2,000 are settled out of court and such "nuisance" claims as pain and suffering are eliminated unless medical expenses exceed $500.

State officials attribute most of the success of the program to the elimination of these claims.

Under the new bill extending no-fault, three options for property damage coverage are provided.

One would provide coverage similar to that available to those who have property damage and collision insurance under the existing system.

The second option provides recovery for damages only in cases where the motorist would have been able to collect from the other party under the tort system, in use in most of the country. Under that system, damages are paid by the party who is determined through court action to have been at fault in the accident.

Under the third option, the motorist would not be entitled to recover for damages to his own car but would be free from liability for damage to another's vehicle.

Proponents of the bill have said the plan will provide premium savings to some 85 per cent of the state's motorists. Sargent said, however, the savings probably would not be "as dramatic" as those under the plan which went into effect last January.

Home Ec Change Coming

Completion of one phase of the Long Range Plan is nearing an end in the School of Home Economics. According to Dr. Bruce Morris, Dean of the school, curriculum proposals are being completed in the departments and the proposed curriculum changes will be presented to the Committee on Academic Affairs the first of December.

Discussing the curriculum changes, Dean Morris said in a recent interview, that "each department will have specific majors, with professional choice provided for the student would be a joint major in mass communications, journalistic studies or business.

Students have the chance to help determine the future of the School of Home Economics by participating on various committees. Dean Morris emphasized that there are still openings for students on these committees.

Interested students should see their department heads to join liaison committees in each deaprtment. Students are also needed on the Personnel Committee and the Search Committee for a new TCEA department head.

"An organization for students as a whole to express their opinions" seemed desirable to the dean.

It has been recommended in the Long Range Plan that a College of Human Resources be formed, which would include the schools of Nursing, Public Health, Human Development and a school containing the departments of Nutrition, Environmental Art & Design and Community Service.

Learning How To Get A Job

By DON POUTRY

A symposium on successful job selection and interviewing will be held in room 163 of the Campus Center tonight at 7:30. It will be sponsored by the Marketing Club, the University chapter of the American Marketing Association.

According to John Barrows, president of the Marketing Club, the symposium will be an opportunity for students to learn what some major companies look for in job applicants.

The companies that are sending representatives to the symposium are I.B.M., Star Market Company, Aetna Life and Casualty and American Optical Corporation.

The symposium is open to all students whether they are business majors or not.

Draft Counselor's Corner

The New Draft - Part 1

By GILBERT J. SALK

Brothers! One of our ruling institutions has seen fit to redefine the chains by which it binds us! Hearken to these words from the Lord Selective Service System, and live your lives according to It's dictum!

Curtis W. Tarr has issued new regulations to the local boards incorporating the new Selective Service Law passed by Congress a month ago. For some, it will make freedom just a bit more difficult to attain; for those who think they can be free while others are enslaved, and who are lucky enough to fall into certain categories, freedom will be even more secure.

It will take about three columns to cover all of the changes in depth, so read today's column, and the ones in next Tuesday and Thursday's Collegian carefully. Make sure that your friends also see them.

First, some new things about age. Under the old regulations, you were required to register for the draft within five days after your 18th birthday. You may now register during a 60-day period extending from 30 days before your birthday until 30 days after. You will probably be given a newly created classification almost immediately. This will be the I-H classification. The board will do nothing further with you until after you receive your lottery number, and then only if your number is low enough so that there is a likelihood that you will be called. More about the I-H later.

At the other end of the age scale, the V-A classification has been abolished. Men were put in this category if they were either over 35 or, if they had never held any deferments, over 26. Now draft boards will simply destroy the files of these men and they will no longer be required to carry their SSS membership cards.

The IV-G classification is also newly created. It will be given to men who fit into one of four categories. 1) If you are the sole surviving son of a man killed in the military. 2) If your father, or a sister or brother was killed in the line of duty after 1919. 3) If your father, sister, or brother is a prisoner of war. 4) If your father, sister, or brother is missing in action. If you fit into one of these categories, you are exempt from the draft.

If you are a divinity student, or if you are an undergraduate who is pre-enrolled in a divinity school, you are entitled to another new deferment, a II-D. If you remain a II-D until you are 26 years old, you will be exempt from the draft.

Your board must give you at least 30 days notice of your Induction date, instead of only 10 days as was previously required.

An important change is that you will now have only 15 days after the date of mailing of an unsatisfactory classification to file a written appeal. This makes it urgent that you take steps to ensure that your board always has your current mailing address. If a letter gets to you late because it was sent to the wrong address, or sent home and forwarded by your folks, it is your problem, not the boards, and you may lose your appeal rights.

Personal appearances before local boards will, in most cases, be limited to not more than 15 minutes. You will be allowed to present up to three witnesses before the local board. You are now entitled to a personal appearance before the state appeal board, but you will not be allowed to bring witnesses. This does not mean that you shouldn't try to present a witness. The old law was changed because of the demand for witnesses before the local boards. If you want a witness, ask to bring him (or her) along.

There are three other major areas of concern covered by the new regulations. They are: student deferments, conscientious objection, and medical deferments. The next two installments of Draft Counselor's Corner will treat these in some depth, and examine the significance of the new I-H classification. Stay tuned to this station next Tuesday and Thursday for the unfolding drama of the Selective Service Soap Opera, brought to you by "A Free Country," (Hee Haw!)

PEACE.

Soviet Jewry Group Organized

A new organization has been established in the Five-College area called the Western Mass. Student Struggle For Soviet Jewry (SSSJ). It is part of a large national organization dedicated to saving Soviet Jewry.

The large group has met twice already to discuss and implement ways of distributing materials concerning the plight of Soviet Jewry.

A newsletter will be published by the group bi-annually. It will include stories of new Russian immigrants who were lucky enough to leave Russia's "living prison". Representatives of the 5-college area will be meeting with President Nixon in April before his planned May trip to the Soviet Union. A political activists committee will make arrangements for this meeting as well as obtaining commitments from senators and congressmen in support of Russian Jewry. A speakers bureau is establishing a lecture series, and tables will be set up next week at all 5 colleges.

Sunday morning at 10:30 Channel 40 will present the second program on the discrimination against Jews in the Soviet Union. SSSJ will participate in this half-hour special.

The film Let My People Go will be shown Sunday at 7:30 in the Nantucket and Norfolk rooms of the Student Union. Recent visitors to the Soviet Union will address the 5-College organization. For information, call Dov Gordon at 6-4004.

London Orchestra To Perform At Smith

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. - Tonight at 8:15 p.m., the New Philharmonia Orchestra (London) will present a concert in John M. Greene Hall, under the direction of Lorin Maazel. The concert will be the first of four in this year's Concert Course, which is sponsored by the Smith College Department of Music. Subsequent programs, on December 1, March 1, and April 11, will feature Allicia de Larrocha, pianist; Marylyn Horne, mezzo soprano; and the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra, directed by Szymon Goldberg.

The program for the November 4 concert will include Sibelius' Symphony No. 7, Bartok's "Music for Strings, Percussion, and Celesta," Delius' "Paris," and "Till Eulenspiegel," by Strauss.

Although the New Philharmonia is London's youngest Symphony, it is continuing a reputation that has developed steadily over the 25 years since it first came into existence. For most of that time it has been known as Britain's leading recording orchestra, and its concert performances have served to confirm its fame.

In November, 1970, Lorin Maazel was appointed Associate Principal Conductor with Dr. Otto Klemperor, and will conduct the orchestra on its 1971-72 North American tour. Mr. Maazel has been General Director of the West Berlin Opera and Conductor of the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, as well as guest conducting all over the world. He has made frequent guest appearances with the New York Philharmonic and more than fifty with the Phildelphia Orchestra, which he first conducted in 1945 as a fourteen-year-old prodigy. Last year he conducted the New York Philharmonic for six weeks and also led the Philadelphia and San Francisco Symphonies. Mr. Maazel has just been appointed Music Director of the Cleveland Orchestra. This appointment will become effective in the 1972-1973 season, and will run for five years.

Tickets for the Smith College Concert Course are available at the John M. Greene Box Office. For further information, please call the Smith College Department of Music at 584-2700, extension 261.

"The Yanamama" To Be Shown At Hampshire

The Science and Public Policy Lecture Series at Hampshire College, Amherst, Mass., will present the film "The Yanomama" tonight at 8 p.m. in the east lecture hall of the Academic Building.

"The Yanomama" is a study of a group of Indians living on the border between Venezuela and Brazil. The film depicts an eight year research project by a team of anthropologists, sociologists and geneticists headed by James V. Neel of the University of Michigan. Professor Lynn Miller, a microbiologist and geneticist on the Hampshire College faculty, will introduce the film.

A System Of Reform

Some eight months ago when I first took up my pen to write for the Collegian it was the issue of student voting that most concerned me. Today, at least in theory, that battle has been won. But it is only the battle and not the war which has been won. There are several great questions which now confront us; whether students will vote, what they should seek to change, and how it can be changed. Several students have recently spoken much more eloquently than I on the desireability of student voting. So it is the objects and the methods of reform to which I would like to address myself.

It is an inevitable consequence of these last ten years that our attention should be drawn toward the national government. Inevitable that we should think in terms of using our vote to end the war, to stop the draft, to push for the revision of laws dealing with drugs, capital punishment and abortion and to prompt the general reallocation of our resources to our domestic needs. These issues are so self-evident that they have become almost cliches. However important these issues may be, it is necessary to realize that they constitute only the top of the iceberg. They are simply the most visable and most immediate issues. A case in point is the question of what mechanism we must institute to deal with our domestic needs.

That changes in national policy are of paramount importance is self-evident, but what is often overlooked is the importance of changes in local and state governments. These spheres of government are also concerned with the very real social problems of urban decay, poor housing, transportation, declining revenue and deteriorating public services.

Here, indeed, lie the complex domestic problems which face our nation. Nowhere is the need so great to create mechanisms to deal with these problems and nowhere has our failure been so complete. Both traditional liberalism and Mr. Nixon's revenue sharing program fail to correctly perceive the root of the problem. The traditional liberal programs such as the 'war on poverty' and 'model cities' have resulted in the creation of huge bureauearacies which spent most of their funds for their own maintainance. This has consequently denied the people the money that was intended for their benefit. Mr. Nixon's revenue sharing program attempts to counter the trend towards bureaucratization by simply granting the money directly to the cities and states to use as they see fit. However, this approach fails to take into account the fact that local governments are for the most part weak, corrupt and ineffective. This approach is counterproductive since the 'no strings attached' federal grants only serve to reenforce the systems' bad habits, instead of prompting it to reform. It becomes obvious that the solution does not lie in allocating a million dollars to every county or to this or that cause; but, rather, the long range goal must be overall reform of the system which will enable it to effectively deal with the many needs of society. Every branch of government must become less bureaucratic and more effective. The principle goal must not be one of solving individual issues in a piecemeal fashion, but rather the creation of an effective mechanism that will enable the system to deal correctly with these issues as they arise and before they become problems.

The point is that the time has come for us not only to examine the objects of reform, but also the manner and the method that should be used in instituting these reforms. Now that we have won the power of the vote, let us endeavor to make sure that it does not turn out to be a fruitless victory.

Dare To Tear Your Own Soul Out

Allen Ginsberg introduced me to Moloch. I didn't like him. Moloch, that is. Not at all.

Moloch was a child-eater. He required the flesh and blood of young humans to survive, and people willingly gave up their offspring in sacrifice to him.

Moloch is one of those ancient gods of a forgotten race of people. As ancient as he is, Moloch is still with us, and going strong. Where, in this largely civilized world, can one find such a creature--such a society--that, in this modern age, still glorifies and--yes--worships this inhuman demon?

Look around you, friends.

Everywhere around you, people are yet willingly giving up their children for sacrifice. Feeding the god with human flesh and blood.

The thankless, boring, mundane factory. This is Moloch.

The irrational, inhuman, machine world of the Corporate State. This is Moloch.

The tedious superficiality of the socially elite. Moloch.

The war machine. Moloch.

The monotonous, dulling, frustrating existence of ghetto life. This, too, is Moloch.

Every day, everywhere you look, Moloch devours. He feeds upon the stupefaction and languor of the mine workers and families of Appalachia.

The narrow, opinionated, self-righteous thinking of left and right. Moloch.

The sick, irrational worms that imprison and degrade women and blacks. Moloch.

The fierce anger and frustrated dreams of the young, and the inevitable uselessness of the aged, kicked aside to make way for "progress". Moloch.

The deadened hopes and dreams of a society too stunned to hear and see and feel and act. A society that asks for a mile, is given an inch, and told how "fortunate" it is. Moloch...Moloch...Moloch.

A society of people devitalized and talked into being happy.

What's that you say? Fight? Look around you, friends. How can you fight it? You. You are Moloch.

I dare you to burn your polluting 1971 Mustang and ride a bike.

I dare you to pledge your dope money to Care.

I dare you to take your medical degree and your law degree into the inner city.

I dare men to fight for Women's Lib, and women to register for the draft; the whites to search their souls and sincerely work for civil rights; the blacks to let a man be unprejudiced without torturing him with cynicism; a leftist to allow George Wallace or Barry Goldwater or Hubert Humphrey to speak without interruption; a reactionary to really listen to a student.

I dare you to fight yourselves.

I dare you to tear your own guts out.

Letters To The Editor

It Got So I Couldn't Get Off The Staff

To the Editor:

A few months ago a new "disease" of sorts was introduced on our campus and has spread widely and rapidly - the pinball syndrome. Many of us are chronic sufferers and don't know it or, worse yet, refuse to admit it. Yet a brief walk past the row of pinball machines is sufficient to verify its existence. Actually, this is far from a joking matter and I know for I'm one of the many "addicts."

My wife and friends tried desperately to warn me when I first started dabbling at the machines but I just wanted to experiment. I felt sure that the machines could never master me against my will...but I was wrong. The disease had lodged itself with me and before long I went from supporting a quarter a day to a two dollar a day habit. At first it was just the harmless Mini-Cycle that I played on weekends but soon I was overwhelmed. My need grew to Klondike and, yes, I went all the way to the big time - Zodiac! My case is now so advanced that I can't even walk past the machines. If I try to go to the Campus Center, the machines begin humming softly as I pass, appealing to that part of me which is possessed. Struggle as I might, my body is drawn forcibly to the nearest game. As my clammy hands grip the flippers, I realize that it's hopeless. I'm caught along with the others.

And it's always the same. Everytime I lose my last quarter, I swear to myself...never again. Yet, as soon as I get home, I find myself filching nickels and dimes from the household money. The need is so strong in me that I try to sell my lunch everyday in the Hatch. I've even tried hawking the Collegian and bootlegging tapes of Clear Sky or Black Sabbath. Anything...just for that momentary "high."

Do we enjoy what we do? What makes us go on? Well, as anyone who has played those damn machines knows, pinball produces a mental high. Few are successful on their first attempts to reach this feeling and for most people, several practice games are needed. For some, those who can manipulate any machine for hours on a single dime (known in Pinball jargon as "hogs" or "heartless bastards"), indulgence can be especially rewarding. For others (known as "Karma freaks"), playing pinball is capable of producing a satisfaction with one's lot in life. But the maiority of us (known as "suckers"), play not because it is self rewarding but merely because the lights beckon and the bells lure. We struggle to reach our high, which is the elusive free game, but all too often we fail.

My purpose in writing is to warn those of you who are being urged to "try it just once." It's imperative to realize that this is no game. Not only have I been caught in its stranglehold, but I also have friends who were once quiet and industrious. Because of a lack of adequate information of the subject, they have been reduced to drooling maladroits who spend most of their time by the machines.

This letter is also a plea for help. Many of us can be helped by a mere guiding hand. You can easily separate the sufferers who need this aid by the glaring eyes, blasphemous gutteral sounds, rapid breathing and twitching flipper fingers. The sufferers who aren't playing can be recognized because they aren't calmly waiting their turn at one machine. They are usually jumping nervously from game to game, hoping to squeeze in. These are the ones who need help the most and you can aid them by trying to talk them out of playing. Take one of them aside and show him the folly of spending so much time and money playing pinball. Point out the shame that he is bringing upon himself by engaging in such a degrading activity. If he kicks your face in (pinball players always kick, this way the flipper finger is spared injury), don't hate him, pity him. But if none of this works, give him a quarter and wish him luck, he'll need it. Pinball - it's deadly.

Birds Of A Feather

To the Editor:

George McGovern's speech last Sunday night has drawn a great deal of criticism concerning his Middle East policy. Most of this criticism has come from uninformed listeners and biased "news analysts" (I use the term loosely). They have decided, without really looking into it, that Senator McGovern is a "dove" on the Vietnam War issue and a "hawk" on the Middle East issue. I would like to clarify this apparent contradiction.

The government of Vietnam is a corrupt, military dictatorship, without the support of its own people, that is currently engaged in a civil war with the "other" government of Vietnam. On the other hand, the government of Israel is a free democracy, with the full support of its people, that is currently fighting to remain in existence.

Senator McGovern's policy is not to send military assistance, but rather, to sell jets to Israel. The reason for this is to preserve the balance of power in the Middle East until a settlement can be reached. If we refuse to sell these jets to the Israelis, the Arab nations will eventually destroy the free state of Israel and we will be responsible for the destruction of one of our allies.

This, in essence, is the stand of Senator McGovern, and virtually every other leading presidential candidate, of the Middle East conflict. It is virtually impossible to find any connection between this and his plans for Southeast Asia. Those who still criticize this stand had better look into it a little deeper.

The Bust Man

To the Editor:

Recently, Henry Bouffard, Student Attorney General, stopped by the Collegian office to express concern over the bounding increase of rip-off cases appearing before student court. According to Bouffard, rip-off cases are already flooding the court sessions and are increasing from week to week. He felt that students should be made aware of the fact that now there's a new and efficient security system in operation at the University store.

Rip-offs are a violation of the Code of Student Conduct, Pt. 1, sec. 2, para.c1, regarding unauthorized removal of goods and materials from University premises. It carries penalties ranging from letters of censure and disciplinary probation to jeopardy or complete separation from the University.

Previously, prevention measures at the store were very haphazard and unreliable. At best there might be one floor detective on duty during periods of ideal rip-off conditions. But now there stalks a team of experienced security plants who have very little trouble spotting amateur techniques and nervous behavior. So to those students who don't need or can't afford the hassle-----BEWARE. The person shopping next to you in the University store might turn out to be "THE BUST MAN".

Get That Groundhog

To the Editor:

I'm puzzled. Leaflets proclaiming "GROUNDHOGS — UNITE" have been posted throughout the campus this week. The remainder of the message implores above groundhogs to march on Punxsutawney, Pa. on February 2 (Groundhog Day). I'm interested in the details of the march on Punxsutawney, primarily because it is my hometown and my mother still resides there. If, by any chance, the march may turn into a violent demonstration, I want to alert my relatives to the possibility!

I have racked my brain to determine what the "cause" in this case may be. Punxsutawney is the last place on earth that would exploit or harm innocent groundhogs, being they are its only claim to fame. I would appreciate hearing from the leaders of the march. This may be something to motivate a trip back home.

To The Campus Community

Dear Community Members:

On behalf of the members of the CCEBS Committee, the black community, and the black children suffering with sickle cell anemia, I thank all persons contributing to our campus Sickle Cell Anemia Fund conducted by the black students this past spring. I am requesting that the Collegian print the letter of appreciation from President Cheek of Howard University which was sent to me along with a letter of thanks from Dr. Roland B. Scott, Director of the Center for Sickle Cell Anemia at Howard University. I, in turn, have sent them a letter thanking these men for their efforts on our behalf and on behalf of our future black brothers and sisters yet unborn.

Sincerely yours,
Randolph W. Bromery
President
CCEBS Committee

Finger, Finger

To the Editor:

I can't believe one fraternity house can take so much blame for the things that happen on this campus. It's true that we're not angels, but is that the reason we're taking the blame for all this yelling between Gorman, Hills, and Kappa Sigma. We're being used as the scapegoat because of our reputation. People believe all the bad things they hear about us because of that reputation. Letter s are written and stories are started about us, because people like to hear themselves talk or think it's funny to degrade us. I know this won't stop. I just wish people wouldn't be so ignorant and believe everything they hear or read. We'll admit to a wrong done on our part. Nobody has to do it for us - especially someone from Gorman. Gorman has provoked enough yelling with as good an obscenity as I've ever heard - as well as Hills as well as Kappa Sigma. Let's not be hypocrits and admit to it. Next time you're pointing a finger at us, make sure you have the right to.

Steve Del Maestro
President Kappa Sigma

A Question Of Values

To the Editor:

On Wednesday, October 27, the Student Senate passed a bill appropriating the full $785.00 requested by the Student Homophile League. Before the vote, Chairman Olmstead "cautioned the body to be careful in appropriations" because the Senate funds were nearly depleted.

At this same meeting the Senate voted to:

a) Defeat the Boltwood Project funds. This project involves sending 300 student volunteers to Belchertown six days a week to administer programs such as hand-eye coordination, sex education, etc. The reason for defeat (from Senate minutes): "All good projects cannot be funded by Senate: there is not enough money; and the gravity of the Senate's financial straits have to be reckoned with."

b) Cut funds from Juvenile Opportunity Extention (J.O.E.) budget. The purpose of J.O.E. is to help juvenile inmates keep up with their education. There are 150 UMass volunteers working for the program. The bill as originally proposed drew the following reaction (from minutes): "Worthwhile organization but, as others requesting funding, no money is available." An amendment was then passed to cut $170 from their budget. Their budget was passed with this cut.

c) Defeat the Orchard Hill Tutorial Service budget. This program, if funded, would tutor underprivileged and poor residents in the ghetto area in Holyoke.

The reason for denying funds to J.O.E., O.H.T.S. and the Boltwood Project is obviously a lack of such funds. The reason for granting $785 to the S.H.L. is not obvious at all.

The S.H.L.'s justification for funding was presented to the Senate. It went like this: The budget is mainly for publications, subscription, etc. Communications with campus is their main goal. They hold monthly dances. They feel there is an urgent need for public information, i.e. gay magazines, press coverage, recent books. They have sent representatives to meetings and demonstrations such as the Christopher St. Liberation March in N.Y.C. and the Lesbian Feminist Conference in New Haven. They have provided real and useful counseling for the University Community.

How is it that the Senate considers this more worthy of their support than the volunteer programs they voted down?

We personally don't care about reading gay magazines, going to gay dances, or being represented at gay demonstrations. Their goal of communicating with the campus may be of some value. But is it, as the Senate has decided, more valuable than tutoring the disadvantaged in Holyoke or working with the retarded children in Belchertown? We don't think so.

The Student Senate is our representative body. Their decisions should echo the attitudes and opinions of the majority of the student body. Do most students agree that the S.H.L. is more deserving of Senate funds than J.O.E., the Boltwood Project or the Orchard Hill Tutorial Service: Let's hope not.

Californian Courts 'Most Activist'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — For more than a decade the California Supreme Court has been ranked by law scholars as the most activist of the nation's state benches.

It was this court that ruled unconstitutional California's system of financing public shcools by local property taxes because, the court said, the method discriminates against children in poor school districts.

And it was this court which erased a state constitutional amendment which prohibited fair housing laws.

"Without question, the California court is the most aggressive and progressive of the state supreme courts," says William Cohen of Stanford Law School.

Last year Republican Gov. Ronald Reagan appointed Donald R. Wright as chief justice and praised him as a jurist committed to a doctrine that courts should not legislate.

"Most lawyers and the public assumed a doldrums of strict constructionism would ensue," said Charles Warren, chairman of the state Assembly Judiciary Committee.

"But the record demonstrates that Chief Justice Wright has continued the court on its enlightened, compassionate and scholarly course," Warren told the California Bar Association.

Reagan has since stated his unhappiness with some of the court's decisions.

Wright joined the 6-1 majority in the court's decision last August on school funding. The ruling is the first challenge by any court against the established nationwide system of public school finance.

The court began receiving national notice under Phil S. Gibson, appointed chief justice by Democratic Gov. Culbert Olson in 1940.

Gibson wrote the 1952 opinion striking down the state's alien land law. For 32 years the statute barred Orientals from owning property.

Roger Traynor, regarded as the court's foremost legal scholar, succeeded Gibson in 1964 as chief justice. He came to the bench as a justice in 1940 from the University of California where he was a law professor for 12 years.

In 1948 Traynor wrote an opinion which voided California's law barring mixed racial marriages. The U.S. Supreme Court did not reach the same judgment until 1964.

Traynor retired Feb. 1, 1970, at age 70. Wright, 64, was sworn in as his successor May 1, 1970.

The Traynor court's most famous decision was its 4-2 opinion overturning a state constitutional amendment barring fair housing laws. The California electorate had voted Prop. 14 into the constitution in the 1964 general election by a near 2-1 margin.

The people can no more act unconstitutionally than the legislature or any other state agency, the court held. The 1966 ruling declared that Prop. 14 denied to blacks seeking housing the equal protection guaranteed by the 14th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

Justice Marshall F. McComb, 77, appointed in 1956 by Republican Gov. Goodwin J. Knight, was the lone dissenter in the decision on school district property taxes.

Wright, who was presiding judge of Los Angeles County's large Municipal and Superior Courts before Reagan named him to the state Court of Appeal, is Reagan's only appointee on the California Supreme Court.

The five others, all appointed by Edmund G. Brown, a two-term Democratic governor, are: Raymond E. Peters, 68, Louis H. Burke, 66, Mathew O. Tobriner, Jr., 67, Stanley Mosk, 59, and Raymond L. Sullivan, 64.

Wright has been a swing man in 4-3 decisions on law and order.

He wrote a 4-3 opinion that an accused person's right to have his lawyer present during a lineup identification included the right to have the attorney there when the witness actually identified the suspect.

In a case striking down the elite Carmel community's ordinance banning people from sitting on public lawns, Mosk declared the intent clearly was to discriminate against hippies. Burke, Wright and McComb dissented.

The abortion issue also produced a 4-3 split. Mosk wrote an opinion affirming the right of an unmarried woman under 21 to apply for a therapeutic abortion without parental consent. Wright, Tobriner and Peters joined Mosk.

The court's most noteworthy record since Wright became chief justice is the number of significant unanimous decisions, said Cohen of Stanford.

Among these was reversal of a contempt of court jailing of Cesar Chavez, United Farm Workers Organizing Committee chieftain. The Supreme Court freed Chavez from jail while it considered his appeal.

Writing for the court, Burke said an injunction prohibiting UFWOC boycott activity was overly broad and violated the union's right of free speech.

A united Wright court last May rejected a California law dating from the repeal of prohibition which banned women bartenders.

Herma Kay, UC professor of family law, called the decision written by Peters "the most advanced opinion to date on women's rights."

The court sits year around, with no vacation break. In one 12-month period the court issued 202 written opinions and disposed of 4,637 matters.

An exchange during oral arguments on the school finance case suggest Wright's concept of the court.

John Coons, UC law professor arguing against the school district property tax, sought to persuade the justices that the issue was not a revolutionary one.

Wright interrupted Coons, saying: "Don't worry. We're not bashful."

J.O.E. To Meet Monday To Organize Structure

J.O.E. (the Juvenile Opportunities Extension) will have a mid-semester organizational meeting this Monday at 7:30 PM in room 917 of the Campus Center. The purpose of the meeting is to tighten up the organizational structure of J.O.E. for the efficient use and coordination of available resources.

To date approximately 100 UMass student volunteers have been "doing time" at the Westfield Detention Center. They have been following a schedule largely set up around the available transportation a few volunteers could provide. However, this and many other aspects of the whole situationmay be changed since the approval of a portion of the J.O.E. budget submitted to the Student Senate. J.O.E. now has money for transportation and educational supplies.

The funds allocated to J.O.E. is sufficient seed money for the volunteers from the university to work at the detention center. However, the leaders of J.O.E. feel even a greater responsibility to kids in general–specifically the region the Westfield Detention Center serves and the newly established Middlefield Project located in Middlefield, Massachusetts.

Middlefield is a country estate rented to the Department of Youth Services for a small fee. Kids committed to DYS now have an alternative to residing at the Westfield Detention Center. However, this alternative lacks resources and members of J.O.E. are trying to remedy this problem. Therefore a call is out for donations.

What is needed immediately are educational and other resources the kids can use now. Specific things requested by Middlefield's resident teacher are general interest novels and short stories, field guides for identifying trees, flowers, insects and so on, gardening books, crafts materials, tools, information texts and work books, and magazines or the subscriptions to magazines. Educational materials could be paper of all sorts, paints, games, puzzles, scissors, rulers, pens and pencils.

If you care to make a donation you can drop it by room 105 in the Campus Center, located in the Student Activities Area and is the N.E.S. office. If the office is closed, leave it with one of the RSO staff. If you wish to contribute money, make checks payable to the Westfield Project, care of J.O.E., Box 319 RSO office, Campus Center. If you have something that needs to be picked up call Peter Ullman at 623-8923.

The above need for additional resources and other matters will also be discussed at the J.O.E. meeting this Monday. The Westfield Detention Center teacher is expected to attend the meeting to explain the specific instructional needs of the kids at the detention center. A procedure to document the many activites volunteers and staff may conduct will be discussed and finalized. It is hoped that a goal will be determined by which all J.O.E. volunteers will work by in their involvement with kids at the Westfield Dentention Center.

All interested students are asked to attend.

Women Lose Some, Win Some

(AP) — Women candidates have lost mayoral races in Boston and San Francisco, but they fared better in smaller cities, winning contests for mayor and city council.

In Boston, U.S. Rep. Louise Day Hicks, an outspoken foe of school busing who called herself the "people's candidate," was defeated Tuesday in her second bid in four years to oust Mayor Kevin H. White.

And in San Francisco, Dianne Feinstein, president of the Board of Supervisors, lost in her bid against Mayor Joseph Alioto. Mrs. Feinstein, whom many considered Alioto's toughest challenger in the 10-way race, had campaigned on a platform of improving the quality of life in San Francisco. She came in third.

Elsewhere, the picture was brighter for the women.

Anne Rudin defeated incumbent Peter Franchi to become the first woman elected to the Sacramento, Calif., city council since 1948. Mrs. Rudin said her win was the result of a "people's campaign... the 400 volunteers who joined my campaign, the door-to-door work."

Maureen O'Connor won an upset victory in San Diego, defeating a businessman for the city council in a triumph for both women and youth. Miss O'Connor is 25; her opponent 53. She said of her win: "We promised to get young people positively involved in the system and I think they responded."

On the East Coast, Patricia R. Reny of Saco, Maine, was elected to the city council, becoming the first woman ever to hold a council seat in the community. Ann T. Mikoll, a Buffalo, N.Y. city court judge for 14 years, was elected to the State Supreme Court in the eighth judicial district. "I think it's a victory for women's lib," said Mrs. Mikoll, first female Supreme Court judge from the eighth district.

A former beauty queen was elected to the Birmingham, Ala., city council in a runoff election. Angi Grooms Proctor, Miss Alabama of 1966, and one of 10 Miss America finalists that year, campaigned on a platform of saving old residential areas from the ravages of highways and high-rise buildings.

In mayoral races, Margaret Prickett of Mishawaka, Inc., a Republican, was re-elected to a third term. She's the state's only woman mayor. Janet S. Allen, the only other woman mayoral candidate in Indiana, lost to Jerry J. Miller in South Bend.

New York State's only woman mayor was elected to her first full term. Virginia B. McDonald, who was elected mayor of Cohoes two years ago to fill out the term of her late husband, was re-elected on the Citizens party ticket.

Davenport, Iowa, got its first woman mayor when Kathy Kirschbaum, a Democrat, defeated William Fennely, a Republican.

Pregnancy-How To Cope

Few women talk about it, but it's a common problem. On a campus the size of the University of Massachusetts, many women will think they may be pregnent in a space as short as a week.

Many times it's a false alarm. Psychological factors (a low grade, a roommate problem) and some physical problems unrelated to pregnancy can delay a women's menstrual period. Before you deal with a pregnancy you may not want, be sure. A simple urine test for pregnancy becomes effective six weeks after the first day of your last menstrual period. The most economical way for a UMass student to have a pregnancy test is at the infirmary, where results will be held in confidence.

If the thought of running into friends at the infirmary disturbs you, and you have $5 to pay an outside laboratory, the Valley Women's Center, 200 Main St., Northampton (546-2011) couselors can tell you how to get one off-campus.

If you have negative pregnancy test results and still don't have your period, try the test again about a week later. Positive results are always conclusive; negative results may not be–especially if you're just barely over the six week minimum.

A second alternative is to ask a doctor to prescribe what is popularly know as a "gest test"–a short series of pills which bring on your period in a few days if you're not pregnant, but will have no effect if you are pregnant. The "gest test" may have unpleasant side effects: ask the doctor before you begin taking them.

If you are fairly certain that you are pregnant, and have any idea that you might want to have the pregnancy legally terminated, have your pregnancy test as soon as it is effective. Do not be content to wait if your doctor tells you to "wait a couple more weeks and see if you get your next period." If you don't want to be pregnant, it's better to be pregnant a short time than a long time.

If you are pregnant and you've had your test at the infirmary, chances are that a doctor there has already referred you to one of the two organizations that can inform you of all the legal alternatives–from having the child and raising it yourself, to legal termination of your pregnancy. The decision is up to you.

The Clergy Consultation Service on Problem Pregnancy has a representative at the United Christian Foundation, 319 Hampshire House (545-2789), and has a tape recording that gives names of on duty off-campus clergymen at 586-3478. The Valley Women's Center, 200 Main St., Northampton (586-2011) will refer you to a woman counselor (many of whom have faced unwanted pregnancies themselves).

It's helpful if you understand why these resources (especially the Clergy Consultation Service) are not widely publicized. Massachusetts law provides criminal penalties of a maximum of three years in state prison, two and one-half years in jail or a fine of $1000 for a person convicted of distributing information that might help a woman get an abortion.

And although it's easier for a woman not to get pregnant, the law specifies the same penalties for a person who distributes information on birth control to a single woman. This portion of the law have been overturned by a United States Court of Appeals in Boston, but Massachusetts Attorney General Robert Quinn has said that he will enforce the law while the State of Massachusetts attempts to retain the law by appealing the lower court's decision to the U.S. Supreme Court. The Supreme Court is expected to hear the case late this year or early next year.

Meanwhile, because of the confused legal situation, many of the doctors who are most interested in helping you cannot tell you so publicly for fear of arrest, or for fear that public flaunting of the law will stimulate conservatives into applying enough pressure so that they will be unable to help even the people who reach them by word of mouth. If you deal on a one-to-one, face-to-face basis, birth control information is available from doctors, friends, dorm counselors-and the Valley Women's Center can help you find some of these people if you can't do it yourself.

A word about being afraid to ask for birth control or help with a problem pregnancy: don't be. It's no disgrace to admit that you're a sexual being, or that you're pregnant. And try to trust the people who try to help you–under Massachusetts law, they have more to lose than you do.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Capricorn can be explosive; natives of this zodiacal sign usually are late in blooming. Means recognition for their efforts comes in latter years, often making these persons legendary figures. One of our most important writers, Henry Miller, will be 80 years old next month, December 26. He is still going strong. Miller exemplifies Capricorn tenacity and the talent which overcomes early adversity.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Hold off on decisions, trips. Overcome tendency to decide in a hurry. Those who rush you are envious, misinformed. See clearly. Separate reality from wishful thinking. Ignore gossip.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emphasis on money, power of decision, ability to utilize assets. Key is to get what is necessary. Rid yourself of nonessentials. Clear away emtional and other debris. Streamline methods.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Partnership, legal affairs may be muddled. Key is to finish what you start. Stress wide appeal. Means popularize subject, product. Public attention centers on your personal efforts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): No time to try keeping secrets. Be frank, independent. By not concealing, you actually strengthen position. Realize this and act accordingly. Leo individual plays prominent role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Affairs become involved with one born under Cancer. Accent on revision of some hopes, wishes. Stress greater flexibility. One close to you may act in eccentric manner. Maintain positive attitude.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Obtain hint from Leo message. Reach for goal. Be versatile. Have alternatives at hand. Be wary of inflated offers. Key is to know what you are getting and how much it actually is worth.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Numerous obstacles exist. Recognize this not for purpose of being discouraged, but in order to do something about it. Thorough approach is necessary. Apparent minor details must not be overlooked.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You may be going too fast, too soon. Applies especially where investments are concerned. Conservative approach now should be favored. You won't get something for nothing. Act accordingly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Study Scorpio message. Ulterior motive may be featured in gift giving, flattery. Protect self in clinches. Let mate, partner take initiative. You gain now as quiet, shrewd observer.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Play behind scenes role. Be subtle. Being discreet now is to your definite advantage. Some associates are bluffing. Know this and bide your time. Visit one confined to home or hospital.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Friendships, romantic interests are stimulated. Social activity is accelerated. Nothing occurs halfway now; it is all the way or nothing. Don't start something you can't finish.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Complete rather than initiate projects. Map campaign; applies to personal and professional areas. Some family dissension indicated if you press, cajole. You gain most through diplomacy.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you recently assumed great responsibility. As result, rewards also will be greater. Actions affect more persons. Reconciliation with one close to you has been highlighted. Road ahead is not glass-smooth, but your chances for success are heightened. You usually are a direct person, basically truthful, even when the truth is not pleasant.

UWW Policy Board Members Named

A 10-member policy board of area educators and students has been named for the University Without Walls project at the University of Massachusetts-Amherst.

This fall, the University Without Walls pilot concept in education began at UMass with 30 students studying for bachelor's degree programs designed especially for them. Another 20 students will be admitted in January.

Deadline for applying to UWW for spring semester is Nov. 19. Brochures and applications may be obtained from University Without Walls, 207 Hampshire House, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Piority will be given to Massachusetts residents who would not normally have access to the University. For example: those who have full-time jobs or other responsibilities which would interfere with a regular college program, and those who might not meet normal University entrance requirements. University Without Walls students have diverse backgrounds, ages, and interests. Preferred applicants include people who have been working for social action agencies and who have skills, but not degrees, to get ahead professionally.

Members of the UWW policy board are: Mrs. Arlene McCrae, UWW student; Mrs. Barbara Miles, practical nurse working through UWW for her bachelor's degree; Mr. Sam Hoffman, studying science, literature, and photography as a UWW student.

"Meet The Redmen" Night Held

By EARLE BARROLL

It was labeled "Meet the Redmen Night" and that's just what a healthy-size crowd of 600 basketball fans did last night at Curry Hicks Cage.

This was the first such endeavor of its kind ever undertaken by a UMass basketball team and was a big success in light of what the objectives to the program were and what came out of it.

Head coach Jack Leaman was pleased with the turnout. His main objective was to give his players some playing time in front of people after being confined to a practically empty Hicks Cage for over a month...this was accomplished.

Leaman also set out to give Redman fans a sneak preview of what to expect from the team this year...this too was accomplished.

In his opening comments Leaman made it known that this was a team "the fans would be proud of come March 4. We certainly miss number 32, but none of these players here are hanging their heads and they want to show they weren't a one man team last year," Leaman emphasized.

What the fans saw was a new look Redman squad, certainly different from last year's board dominating, unit that featured a defense spearheaded by the presence of Erving.

What the fans saw was a team of speed, quickness, aggressiveness and a stick-the-ball-in-

They saw a team that had the finest group of class quality ballplayers ever assembled at this university, a team that features four outstanding forwards and three guards that Leaman calls "the best three guards at UMass at one time."

The Redmen went through a regular practice showing exactly what the team does prior to the regular season to put together their style on the court for the season.

They drilled and drilled and drilled and the sweat poured and poured and after an hour or so they went into a scrimmage that lasted for almost the equivalent of a half.

"We didn't play well," said Leaman, "but we did get some playing time in front of people, which is what we set out to do."

The team now resumes regular 4 p.m. practices in the Cage in preparation for a season that will feature such powers as Villanova, Harvard, Boston College, Syracuse and Fordham on the road and Providence, Holy Cross and Rhode Island at the Cage.

The season gets underway at home on the 1st of December with St. Anselm's and what you'll get to see is a Redman team "that will be exciting to watch" in the words of Leaman.

So you had better get in line early again this season.

YOU'RE OUT OF HERE: Lindo Alves and the referee exchanged a few pleasantries at the UMass-Vermont soccer game last week which the Redmen dropped 2-1. It seems that the referee was pointing in the general direction of his dressing room in Boyden. "My dressing room is across the street," the ref said. "If you go check out all my belongings, you'll see that I don't wear glasses." To which Lindo answered: "#%&!&#!" (MDC Photo by Ed Mangiaratti)

Jenkins Tabbed For Cy Young Award

CHICAGO (AP) - Towering Fergy Jenkins, after five seasons as a 20-game winner, Wednesday captured baseball's coveted Cy Young award and the certainty of becoming the Chicago Cubs' first $100,000 pitcher.

Jenkins was the first Cub honored since the top pitcher award was started in 1956.

"I was happy when the Associated Press voted me the best right-handed pitcher of 1971, and the Cy Young Award for the National League puts the frosting on the cake," Jenkins said at a news conference at Wrigley Field.

The 6-foot-5 Jenkins, who turns 28 on Dec. 13, was voted the award by the Baseball Writers Association of America by a wide margin over Tom Seaver of the New York Mets.

Jenkins, whose 24-12 record last season was tops in NL victories, hurried to Chicago from a duck-hunting expedition near his Chatham, Ont., home to review his career and future plans.

He laughed off printed reports that he would seek a $150,000 salary for 1972. "I don't remember saying that," Jenkins grinned.

"I'm leaving negotiations up to my two lawyers, but I certainly think now my salary will be over $100,000." Jenkins last spring held out for $100,000 but settled for an estimated $90,000.

He was pleased, but not overwhelmed by becoming the best pitching counterpart of Oakland's Vida Blue, recent AL winner of the honor.

"I would have liked being in a World Series, but I'm not saying I'm not glad I won the Cy Young Award. I'm glad I got it, because there were a lot of good pitchers who also could have won it."

A control specialist, Jenkins, in five Cub seasons since 1967, won 20, 20, 21, 22, and 24 games and, during that span, averaged 40 starts and 309 innings pitched per season.

In the writers' poll, Jenkins got 17 first-place votes and 97 points. Next was Seaver with six first-place ballots and 61 points, followed by Al Downing of the Los Angeles Dodgers with 40 points and one first-place vote by the 24-man BBWA selection committee.

Owners Name New Voice

NEW YORK (AP) - John Thompson was tapped by National Football League owners Wednesday to bridge the admitted communications gap with the players and said he wanted to start by correcting a misconception about the establishment attitude toward injuries.

Thompson, who becomes Executive Director of the NFL Player Relations Association after serving as assistant to conference president George Halas, said the owners' decision not to participate in an injury study undertaken by the NFL Players' Association had led to the misconception.

The subject of injuries is one of the areas that the NFL owners, in selecting Thompson, obviously feel require bridges to be built for better owner-player communications.

"It has become clear to us that we need a more continuous communications link with the players and their association than the club presidents can provide," said Wellington Mara of the New York Giants in announcing Thompson's new job.

Thompson, who began his career in pro football with the Minnesota Vikings in 1961 before moving to the National Conference Office, acknowledged that the owners and players were not as close today as they have been in the past.

"For years the players wanted to sit down face to face with the owners," Thompson said. "Now it's drifting away from that. Now the vehicle seems to be the national office of the players' association and a widening of the gap rather than a closing.

"If you don't have good communications, little annoyances become major problems. Very often that stems from not being able to sit down together and admittedly the owners at this time of year are concerned more with their own football teams.

Harriers Romp In The Orchard

By EARLE BARROLL

If you had told cross country coach Ken O'Brien before the season began that his top two men in the race prior to the New England's would both be freshman he probably would have told you to put on a pair of track shoes and take a good run for yourself.

If you ask him that same question this morning he'll tell you they were.

Yesterday on a slick course, but under ideal weather conditions for running, freshmen Bill Gillin and Randy Thomas stormed from a tightly bunched pack with just over a mile to go and charged to the finish line ahead of their upperclass teammates as the UMass cross country team buried Central Connecticut and Coast Guard, 18-48-80.

The winning time for Gillin was 26:09 over the tough Orchard Hill course and this established a new record erasing the previous mark by three seconds formerly held by Bill Rowe of Northeastern set in the first meet of the season.

And just for added emphasis Thomas also broke the record by a second.

SPORTS

While these two frosh stole the show, what was going on behind them was what mattered most to the team members who had this race to prove their worth for the New Englands on Monday.

Positions five, six and seven were up for grabs and with this at stake it was the courage of a Roger Nasatka who led by a wide margin for over two miles and the intensity of a Rick Barry and a Mike McCusker that made the human interest story for this meet.

They battled it out in the Orchard with the rest of the established New England runners and this made for the best cross country race of the season at home...As of yet the final seven have not been picked for Monday.

Following Gillin and Thomas to the line in close pursuit were Peter Crisci, Tom Derderian, and Doug O'Connell to complete the scoring. Two Central runners snuck in between these three to prevent the shutout.

The enthusiasm after this meet is now a paramount factor going into the big race on Monday and from the overall performance the Redman are ready to challenge Northeastern and Dartmouth for New England supremacy.

Booters Outplayed; But Escape With 2-2 Tie

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

A tie may be like kissing your sister, but for the Redmen the 2-2 tie at Springfield yesterday was like kissing your favorite girl.

To say that UMass was lucky to escape out of Springfield with a tie is to make the understatement of the season. Any team that can go 45 minutes without getting a shot on net, and still end up with a tie has to be considered lucky.

In this particular game the statistics tell the story. The Springfield goalie had to make only 3 saves compared to the 19 saves that UMass goalie John Kiah was forced to make, many of the spectacular nature as he was continually pressed by the Springfield offense. Strictly speaking Springfield owned the statistics and the game.

Considering the stats it was a strange game in that UMass never trailed. Tom Coburn got things rolling for UMass at 11:40 of the first quarter when he banged home his own rebound past the fallen Springfield goalie.

Dennis Lukens brought Springfield back at 4:15 of the second quarter when he stole the ball from a scramble in front of the UMass net and fired the ball into the side of the net.

The second half opened with the score tied at 1-1. The Redmen appeared in the early goings of the half as if they were going to run Springfield off the field. With only 1:10 gone in the third quarter Lindo Alves took a corner kick from Augie Calheno and scored to give UMass a 2-1 lead. At this point the Redmen looked strong and confident, but believe it or not they didn't make another shot on goal until the first overtime period, some 45 minutes later.

Springfield continued to shoot and continued to look for the big play. There were only 55 seconds remaining in the third quarter when Springfield's Mike Conte let one fire from the side of the goal over the sprawling Kiah. The score stood at 2-2 and it seemed only a matter of time before the Chiefs would break the tie.

If UMass had a lucky day, then Springfield must have had their unluckiest day of the season. With only 8:26 left in regulation playing time, Springfield was awarded a penalty kick on a disputed call. Penalty kicks are not usually missed but in this case Larry Keefe sent the ball past the UMass net. Regulation play ended with UMass and Springfield deadlocked at 2 goals apiece.

The two overtime periods were evenly played between the two teams with the Redmen getting the edge in the first period, and the Chiefs the edge in the second. There were no outstanding scoring opportunities in the overtime periods by either team as each seemed prepared to play conservative soccer.

The artificial turf did not play a major factor in the game as was first expected, probably because of the wet field. The tie did not hold any great significance for either team since it is doubtful that the Redmen or the Chiefs were still being considered for a tournament bid before the start of the game.

Varsity M Film Has Happy Ending: A UMass Win

By DAN KAMAL

Remember when movies used to have a happy ending? Well, there was a movie at the weekly Varsity M Luncheon yesterday, and it had a happy ending--in the form of a UMass win. To those who attend Varsity M meetings, surely happiness is a UMass win.

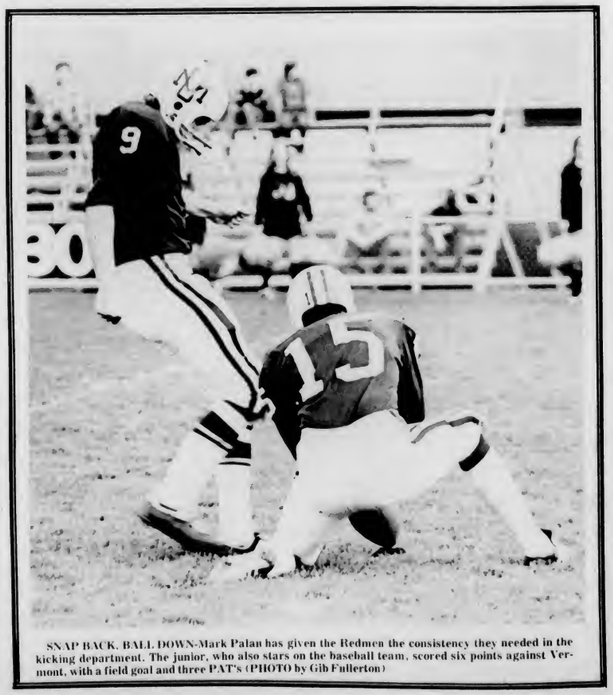
It was the first "happy ending" in five weeks. What are the chances for a repeat performance this Saturday against Holy Cross? According to Walter O'Malley and Dennis Collins, the chances are very good.

O'Malley, the split end who caught a touchdown pass from Mark Tripucka in the win over Vermont, feels that the Redman offense which "has been sputtering" is now "starting to move."

He added, "Holy Cross is not a good enough team to stop us. As evidenced by the Vermont game, some people have given up on us. However, they and Holy Cross will be in for a surprise."

Collins was the defense representative, and he claimed that, "Last week was indicative of the way we can play. We really went after Vermont. Holy Cross will be surprised if they're taking us lightly."

Coach George Flood, an assistant to Dick MacPherson, then gave a rundown of the Crusader squad. He felt that, "Holy Cross is better this year because they have been pretty fortunate as far as injuries are concerned; they have the same people together Saturday after Saturday."



The Cross, sporting a 4-2 record on the year, have what Flood called a "very sound offense and defense and not so much of what you might call finesse." He added, "People in Worcester feel they have a great team, despite what happened against Syracuse (Cross was upended by Syracuse 63-21).

The star attraction was up next. No, it wasn't Dick MacPherson; it was the "movie of the week" narrated by Sports Information Director, Dick Page.

"I hope and think that we can move the football against Holy Cross." That was the way Head Coach Dick MacPherson summed up his feelings about his team's next encounter.

Concerning the Vermont game, MacPherson had this to say: "I felt tremendously bad about what happened in the second half of the game last Saturday. We talk to the boys about pride and poise; well, in that second half, they may have shown pride, but they certainly showed no poise."

The final two quarters, which were spiced with a couple of altercations, found the Redmen suffering somewhat of a letdown after a strong first half. MacPherson had only this to say about the fighting: "When stuff like that goes on, when it becomes a circus, we want no part of it."

Dr. Howard Zinn-happy, pensive, and explosive, as he appeared to the crowd at Mahar Auditorium last night. Zinn, a professor at Boston University, spoke as a guest of the Distinguished Visitors Program on the subject of Civil Disobedience in all its forms, past and present. (MDC photos by Steve Schmidt)

Zinn On History And Protest

Appearing as a speaker of The Distinguished Visitors Program, Dr. Howard Zinn of Boston University addressed a large and receptive audience at Mahar Auditorium last night. His lecture, "Civil Disobedience in America," stressed the positive aspects of civil disobedience.

To understand civil disobedience one must first understand the law, who Zinn explained talks us into obeying the law, and who the laws are protecting. Zinn believes that these factors cannot be "put into a test tube" apart from civil disobedience.

"There is some ambiguity in liberalism. On one hand liberalism seems to imply a lot about freedom of the individual against authority. On the other hand, liberalism is tied up with government...the rule of the law."

One of Zinn's examples of ambiguity in American liberalism is: During World War I, a man had the naivete to make a film of the American Revolutionary War, The Spirit of '76. That war was against England, who was an American ally in World War I. The law provides for the freedom of speech, even during wartime. However, the producer of the film was brought to court and received a ten year sentence in jail. The name of the court case was: The United States vs. The Spirit of 76. Zinn commented, "That tells it all."

"Then there's the whole question of government. People worry about disobeying government." As Zinn pointed out, "We have been taught that American government is beneficent." He then pointed out the great American presidents--"Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, Wilson, and Roosevelt. It gets a little hazy after that," remarked Zinns.

"American government has been generally good. Because we've learned that. Because all you have to do is read American history textbooks. Sometimes we make little mistakes... like... slavery. Then there are a few things called a blemish. We have blemishes...like our treatment of the American Indians. Oh yes, they were here...and then they weren't here."

The point in repeating old history is "you cannot have a proper approach to civil disobedience until you know what you're disobedient to. If you picture government as beneficent --you must loathe to disagree with the government. But if your view of American government is different--your approach to civil disobedience is different."

Zinn believes that governments have been "feastial growths...which have acted in tyrannical ways to its own people and to other people." The American government is no exception to corruption of power and wealth which affects other governments, Zinn feels.

He suggest that if traditional history books are put aside, the history of the American government would include:

—Violence and aggression to people overseas. He cited our "crassly overbearing" foreign policy towards Latin America as an example.

—American domestic policy included one of the world's worse institutions of slavery.

—The treatment of the American Indian as one of the most barbaric in the history of mankind.

—The governments response to protest is to erect barriers to change while "creating symbols of of democratic change."

—The government is not a democratic government, especially in matters over life and death, such as the draft.

"At this point," declared Zinn, "if government no longer serves the ends, concern for members of society, it shouldn't be in power."

Zinn looks upon the law as being "mostly a set of rules by which wealth is distributed in society. Most laws are about money. Lawyers aren't Clarence Darrow. Lawyers are who,...Richard Nixon?" Zinn belives that laws are not a "monolithic thing". Some laws are interpreted by the government loosely, others strictly.

Zinn gave an example of a situation where constitutional law is enforced sometimes, rather than always. A person is at a corner distributing leaflets to passersby. A policeman approaches and remarks, "Get out of here." (At this point Zinn quipped "And we all know that's how a policeman talks.") The leaflet distributor comments, "But haven't you heard of Marsh vs. Alabama?" Here, Zinn commented, "Wonderful, you have the Bill of Rights and Constitutiional Law on your side. All he has is that club."

"Government itself which tells us to obey the law, disobeys it. Who will call the government into account? Who will investigate the FBI? The assaults of the police?

Zinn feels that the problem today is the misconception of civil disobedience. Many people think it is negative and they must work hard to justify disobedience. However, he feels the onus should be the other way around. "Obedience should have to make a case for itself. The greatest violence in our times have been brought about by obedience. Obedience has resulted in Auschwitz, Mai Lai and permitting governments to send young people into an absurd war."

"Obedience, that's our problem. It's healthy that people are realizing this." Zinn hoped that civil disobedience would combine dissent with the positive aspects of developing new institutions. When it becomes widespread enough, important things will happen: "War will not be sustained if people won't obey it." And finally, "One of these days, the Declaration of Independence may come close to fulfillment."

Youth Vote: Potent But Unwilling?

A mini survey at UMass indicates that young voters have potential for impact, but there is reservation about the young's willingness to vote. Three professors in UMass' Department of Political Science, Connolly, Reid, and Bach, were interviewed in their offices in Thompson Tower and asked to give their appraisals of youth's impact in electoral elections.

All agreed that the youth vote will play a definite role in the democratic, electoral processes, and they valued the importance that this role-playing (participation) could have. However, all hedged somewhat on guessing how strongly young voters will turn out.

Prof. Connolly took the most optimistic view in his appraisal of what the 26th Amendment may portend.

After contending that youth has always been involved in politics, even before 18-year olds received the right to vote, he said that youth's role has been "extended" with this new right. "Not only can youth raise issues (which they had done previously), but young voters can bring issues to the politicians in public and promote a redefinition of those issues," Connolly asserted.

Will youth vote in a bloc?

Prof. Connolly things that if youth organize, they will have a definite impact in the electoral results because they will "approach" a bloc voting pattern. A professor of "Modern Political Thought", Connolly said he believes that this would be the case because non-students will not register to vote in as significant numbers as students.

Consequently, the professor expects that youth will tend to be more "left". This trend could influence politicians in "giving way" to youth's demands on certain issues, e.g., relaxation of present marijuana laws.

Prof. Reid sees youth's self-expression through the voting process in an enthusiastic light. He is professor of an "American Presidency" course.

Will youth be able to run the government?

"No", Prof. Reid responded, "but they can have a definite effect. Candidates must listen to the youth. They surely won't go out of their way to alienate youth."

But is a system that permits Cambodias and Atticas to happen really worth working in?

Prof. Reid paused momentarily, drew in a deep breath, and answered: "What are the alternatives to our system--to tear it down? But tearer downs are usually not builders and their societies turn out to be more repressive than those which they replace."

Reid continued, "Youth must work within the system. They should take advantage of and take part in politics." He then qualified this statement, "It is true that blacks in the ghetto have no way out but to strike, but most young voters aren't in this position. Instead, youth should seek to concentrate their efforts on how to make the system work better."

Prof. Reid believed that young voters could do this best by registering to vote, and thereby illustrating their potential to the politicians of being a "viable group".

For Prof. Bach, it is a good idea to allow 18 year olds the vote because "the notion that if one is old enough to die, then one is old enough to vote makes good sense."

"Eighteen year olds are no less prepared than anyone else to vote. In fact, education might be higher among the young," Bach added.

What is the expected impact of these young voters?

Prof. Bach was reluctant to comment on youth's impact because of the uncertainty involved. But he does believe that youthful voters may vote less than their older counterparts, particularly in local elections because such local issues as taxes don't worry them.

Prof. Bach feels that there is a divergence of opinions among young people and that the young vote will not simulate a bloc vote. Nevertheless, Bach added, "With 11 million young voters (the number that is expected to vote in the 1972 election), the potential for impact is great--if they can be made to vote in a similar direction."

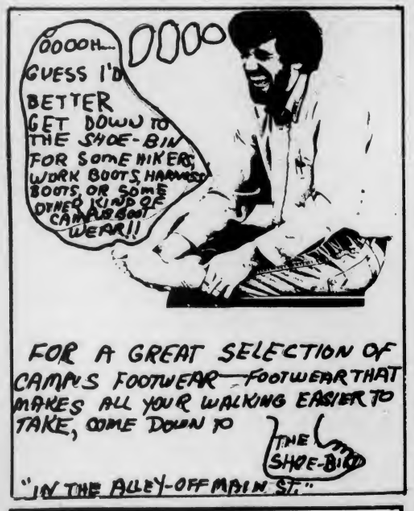
Get Academic Credit For N.E.S. Tutoring

Roberto is eleven years old, in the third grade, and cannot read even at first grade level. He has eight brothers and sisters, and no father. His home environment, therefore, is not exactly conducive to studying, for it is a very rare moment when there is quiet in the house.

Roberto gets no special attention at school either. His teacher believes that he cannot learn, that he is hopeless; therefore he does not learn. His self-image is very poor; he feels inadequate and stupid. Roberto needs some special attention--he needs to know that someone cares about what happens to him. He needs someone who will help him to learn and help him to feel that he can learn.

If you can give three hours of your time per week to a child like Roberto then please drop by the N.E.S. office, Room 105 RSO in the Campus Center, sometime and sign up to tutor in the Riverview Center in Springfield. You can tutor any one day, Monday - Thursday in the afternoon or evening. Afternoon tutors leave UMass by bus at 2:45 and return by 6:00. Evening tutors leave at 6:15 and return at 9:30. We need ninety-five tutors at the Riverview Center. In other words, ninety-five children are waiting at the Riverview Center for tutors. This section of the city shows the lower median educational attainment in the city.

If you do decide to tutor N.E.S. can arrange for you to receive modular credit through the School of Education. For tutoring twelve times you can receive 15 modules of credit, or one University credit.



Get some good ash here--Now last week we ran a picture of a graveyard, but this isn't a crematorium and those are definitely not bones over on the right. So what is it? Just take a ride out Rattlesnake Gutter Road in Leverett and you'll see a couple of the niftiest charcoal ovens in the whole Pioneer Valley. (Photo by Steve Schmidt)

Foreign Aid Impasse Ended

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Foreign Relations committee moved today to end the foreign aid impasse by approving two separate measures, one economic, the other military-slashed to $2.3 billion.

The committee overrode administration forces seeking to put together a new aid package close to the $2.9 billion measure that was rejected by the Senate last week.

It included many of the restrictive provisions in the earlier bill.

Voter Registration Returns To Campus

The Amherst Board of Registrars voted last night to bring the voter registration books to campus for a second time on November 18.

Students will be able to register to vote in the Town of Amherst on the Campus Center Concourse level, where 616 UMass students were registered the first time the Town agreed to set up registration tables on campus, October 14th.

The books come back on campus after what John Steven, Coordinator of the Amherst Voter Registration Coalition, described as "caucusing" with the members of the Board. The AVRC has been working since the beginning of this semester towards establishing on-campus registration, with the non-partisan support of several political groups at UMass.

The registration will take place between 1:00 P.M. and 6:00 P.M., November 18. Students must have identification and proof of residency in the Town of Amherst. UMass Housing office certification of residency was available at the last registration period for those students living on campus in dormitories.

Amherst Selectmen To Meet BiMonthly

The Selectmen Tuesday voted to meet on the second and fourth Monday nights of each month instead of conducting just one monthly night meeting.

The motion was made by board member Michael Sullivan, who said that his activities at the university were making it increasingly difficult for him to attend the Tuesday morning sessions. The new schedule goes into effect immediately.

The Board also discussed ways to more efficiently perform their license issuing responsibility. Although generally agreed that the task was presently too time consuming, no final decision on how to improve it was agreed upon.

It was determined, however, to make an attempt to have all the license hearings at one of the monthly meetings instead of conducting them at all the meetings. Also suggested was the possibility of penalty fees if license applications were not submitted on time.

Selectman Stephen Keedy proposed that a secretary be authorized to sign the licenses, or use a signature stamp, eliminating the necessity of the Selectmen wasting a great deal of time putting their signatures on the licenses.

The Board also announced the appointees to the Technical Advisory Committee, which will work with the town manager and engineers in the planning of the new sewage treatment plant.

Named were: Gerald Foess (Dept. of Civil Eng., UMass.), Karol Wisniewski (Amherst Board of Health), Robert Mannheim, Warren Litsky (Dept. of Environmental Sciences, UMass.), and John Foster.

The following were named jurors for the December misdemeanor term: Andrew French, Ethel E. Colt, Jane F. Drake, John Conklin and Robert A. Cooke.

The Plight of Soviet Jewry

The plight of Soviet Jewry is clearly demonstrated by the situation of Sylva Zalmonson, who is now dying in a Soviet prison camp.

Born on October 25, 1944 in Siberia, she was graduated in 1968 from the Riga Polytechnical Institute. In 1968 she tried in vain to obtain permission to leave for Israel, appealing to Soviet and foreign organizations. In 1970 she was again deprived of the possibility of leaving for Israel. She was arrested with eleven others on June 15, 1970 in connection with an "alleged" hijacking attempt in Leningrad. Her original death sentence was commuted to ten years at hard labor.

Sylva has suffered a severe loss of hearing in prison and is likely to go deaf. She has suffered in the past from an open case of tuberculosis. Doctors worked hard to save her life from this disease. She was admitted to a special sanatorium for a long period of time to recover from her illness.

It is a known fact that people who suffered from this disease have to be very careful and preserve their health. Under bad living conditions this disease can reappear. Presently, Sylva is suffering from a diseased peptic ulcer. Not only has the Soviet Government refused to allow the International Red Cross to give her medical assistance, but also has itself done nothing to improve her condition.

Ruth Alexandrovich, a former prison mate of Sylva, has just arrived in Israel and has stated that Sylva could die any moment. Her uncle, Abraham Zalmonson has joined with others in Israel, who are conducting a hunger strike by the Western Wall in Jerusalem to dramatize the urgency of the situation.

Davis Defense To Speak Tonight

Attorney Howard Moore, Chief Defense Counsel in the Angela Davis case will speak at the Student Union Ballroom at 7:30 p.m. tonight. Moore's appearance is under the auspices of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

The subject of Moore's speech is "Political Repression and the Bill of Rights-A Case in Point". After the talk, there will be a showing of a documentary film "Angela-Portrait of a Revolutionary".

Howard Moore is a Black, Atlanta based lawyer whose activities as legal representative of the Civil Rights Movement have won him an international reputation. As a Civil Rights lawyer, Attorney Moore has represented Stokely Carmichael and H. Rap Brown of the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee, as well as the Southern Christian Leadership Conference of Martin Luther King, Jr. and the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party. Attorney Moore has fashioned the legal offensive for the Black community in numerous de-segregation cases in the Deep South. He is also one of the few southern lawyers specializing in draft cases. He has recently returned from a speaking tour in Europe where the Angela Davis case has excited great interest.

Attorney Moore's visit to the campus marks the beginning of "Black Prisoners Solidarity Month" which is being organized by the Emergency Defense Committee, a coalition of organizations and individuals in the Five-College area concerned with the treatment of prisoners in American society. Other acitivities and speakers will visit the campus during this month.

On Saturday, Attorney Moore will address a rally at the Buckingham Jr. High School Auditorium in Springfield. Prior to that meeting, Attorney Moore will meet with the press to answer any questions they may have on the progress of the trial and the campaign.

Concern For Environment Misleading

NEW YORK (AP)-An independent, monprofit research group has accused some of the nation's biggest advertisers of making misleading claims about their concern for the environment in the September issue of Reader's Digest.

A report released Thursday night by the Council on Economic Priorities criticizes statements made by Ford Motor Co., American Can Co., Continental Can Co., and the Glass Container Manufacturers Institute-GCMI-among others, in the Digest's "Environment '71" advertising supplement.

The Art Directors Club of New York, comprising 600 graphic designers, has sent copies of the report to the presidents of the country's 200 top advertising agencies, club president George Lois reported.

A spokesman for Reader's Digest said the Council's report contained "inaccuracies and distortions" and questioned the council's "motivation."

The report contends that GCMI and The Can People, an industry group composed chiefly of American and Continental Can, minimized the extent of their waste contribution by stating that cans make up only 17 per cent of all solid waste and glass, 6 per cent.

An estimated 43 billion cans and bottles entered the U.S. solid waste system in 1969, the council said, adding that the cost of collecting and disposing of the container waste load was $122 million in 1966.

The council's report also took issue with an advertised claim that the can "is one of the safest, cleanest, cheapest containers ever invented."

Citing Yonkers, N.Y., comparative pricing study, the report insisted that returnable glass was cheaper for the consumer, even though cans are less costly to produce. It said further that consumer surveys indicate a preference for returnables.

The council referred to a government study which said that such low emission levels were generally achieved only in a small number of prototype automobiles.

Another council complaint was that Ford said cars account for about 39 per cent of the country's air pollution, ignoring studies that blamed autos for as much as 87.5 per cent of the pollution in such urban areas as Los Angeles and New York.

Donald A. Jensen, director of Ford's automotive emissions office, said Thursday the figure of 39 per cent cited in the ad was "a direct quotation from the Department of Health, Education and Welfare."

He said the firm was not aware of charges that the auto industry had misused figures provided by the two California professors.

Amchitka Blast To Go As Scheduled

WASHINGTON (AP)-The White House turned aside mounting protests against a planned underground nuclear test off the Alaskan coast Thursday as opponents prepared a last-ditch appeal to the Supreme Court.

The explosion is scheduled for Saturday at 5 p.m. EST on Amchitka Island to test the five-megaton hydrogen bomb warhead for the Spartan anti-ballistic missile.

Asked about White House reaction to continuing protests and petitions, press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said "careful study was given to all aspects including potential environmental risks."

It was decided to proceed with the test, he said, because of overriding interests of national defense and security.

Seven environmental groups opposing the explosion prepared their appeal to the Supreme Court, asking for an injunction against the blast.

Sen. Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield of Montana told reporters he hopes the court stops it.

Sens. George McGovern, D—S.D., and Mark O. Hatfield, R—Ore., also joined in protests.

Two members of Congress accompanied Atomic Energy Commission Chairman James R. Schlesinger on a flight to Alaska Thursday to observe effects of the explosion. They were Reps. Craig Hosmer, R—Calif., and Orval Hansen, R—Idaho, both members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. Also in the party were Mrs. Schlesinger and two young Schlesinger children and Mrs. Hosmer.

Schlesinger planned to be at the Amchitka Island Command post 37 miles from the site of the blast, code named Cannikin. The explosion is to take place almost 6,000 feet underground.

Mansfield said the test poses dangers of killing sea life, increasing radiation and creating tidal waves, as well as harming U.S. relations with Canada and Japan. Governments of those two countries have protested the explosion.

The basic controversy is over the AEC's site for the test. Amchitka Island is in the Aleutians between Canada and Russia and near an earthquake belt that runs from Japan to the California coast.

Lawyers for the environmental groups contended there is evidence the AEC violated the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 by refusing to include adverse comment on the test in its environmental impact statement.

They pointed to formerly secret documents that showed President Nixon's chief environmental adviser concluded almost a year ago that the test could trigger a large natural earthquake and release radiation into the sea.

The statement by Dr. Russell E. Train, chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, was released Wednesday at the order of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia.

Asked Thursday if Nixon had read Train's report, Ziegler said the report was one of many environmental studies included in the decision-making on the blast.

Minutes after the underground explosion of a five-megaton bomb on Amchitka Island, scientists will be checking to see if the blast has triggered a tidal wave.

The scientists operate the Palmer Seismological Observatory of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration. The observatory, nestled in the Matanuska Valley about 40 miles north of Anchorage, is able to pinpoint earthquakes or tidal waves anywhere on the globe.

Here's the way the system will work on Saturday when the bomb-250 times stronger than the one that leveled Hiroshima-is scheduled to be detonated:

The scientists at Palmer will be tied by multiple communications systems to Amchitka and to the Atomic Energy Commission's press center in Anchorage.

About one hour before the blast-now set for 5 p.m. EST—the scientists will issue a tsunami or tidal wave watch message. This message will be delivered to disaster agencies, the media and other earth-monitoring stations. Observatory officials said such a watch message is standard procedure before any nuclear test.

When the bomb is exploded, the scientists will check seismographic readings and tide gauges throughout Alaska and the Aleutian Islands to tell what sort of earthquake the blast has generated and whether the quake has triggered a tidal wave.

If the explosion causes an earthquake measuring 7.0 on the Richter scale, Howell M. Butler, director of the observatory said, a tidal wave warning message will be issued. He explained that the magnitude of 7.0 is considered potent enough to generate such a wave.

On the Richter scale, anything from the magnitude of 4.5 up is considered potentially destructive. The San Francisco earthquake of 1906 measured 8.3.

After issuance of a warning, the scientists will wait to see when the first water waves-if they occur-reach a tide gauge at Adak Island. Butler said it would take at least an hour from the time of the explosion for the waves to reach Adak.

Butler also said, however, it was unlikely that such an event would occur. He said no tidal waves have been generated from the Amchitka area since records have been kept.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., has decided to enter the New Hampshire presidential primary next March 7, sources close to his campaign said today.

"We've taken some serious looks at New Hampshire and our people up there say we should go in," the source said.

"We now consider it on the same basis as Florida, Wisconsin and some of these other states with primaries."

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)-Three space probes from earth-one American and two Russian-are nearing a rendezvous with Mars that might help answer a century-old question: is there life there?

The U.S. spacecraft, Mariner 9, arrives Nov. 13, orbiting Mars and dipping to 750 miles of the surface on each revolution. Because it will not be landing on the planet, Mariner will be able to tell scientists only whether conditions seem to favor the possibility of life.

VATICAN CITY (AP)-An unexpected row on the question of a married priesthood threw the World Bishops Synod into confusion Thursday and disrupted its voting schedule.

One briefing officer said it was the most spirited meeting in the synod's five weeks. Bishops both for and against a married priesthood sharply questioned the working of a resolution on the matter.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Where Mom failed, the youth movement has succeeded, says a California nutritionist. More kids are eating their spinach.

"The counterculture is affecting the attitudes and values of many teen-agers in regard to food," said Dr. Ruth L. Huenemann, a University of California nutrition expert. "Now there's more of shift towards vegetarianism."

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon met at length with India's Prime Minister Indira Gandhi Thursday and urged moderation on both sides of the India-Pakistan border to reduce the risks of war.

After a two-hour and five minute meeting at the White House, presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said the detailed talks with Mrs. Gandhi and the contacts the United States maintains with Pakistan President Yahya Khan "should indicate that we are involved."

BHUBANESWAR, India (AP)-Ten hours before a 16-foot tidal wave and cyclone struck eastern India last weekend, officials at the Orissa State Secretariat here received a warning from Calcutta meteorologists that the storm was coming.

Word was relayed to the coastal areas, but there was no evacuation. Only a few fishermen out to sea were called back.

Peking Moving Fast In U.N.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—Peking wants one of its citizens selected for the high U.N post formerly held by Ralph J. Bunche, an official source reported Thursday.

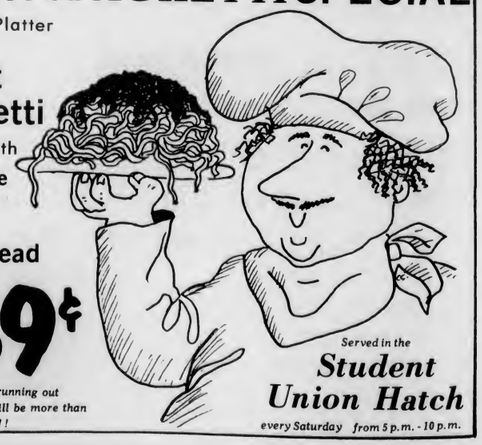
Bunche, a winner of the Nobel Peace Prize, was for 14 years undersecretary-general for special political affairs-the highest administrative post ever attained by an American. He was in effect chief trouble-shooter for the secretary-general. Bunche retired in June because of ill health and the post is vacant.

The source for the information about Peking's goal said the Communist government, as it has in the past, used a third party to communicate the information to Secretary-General U Thant. That was after the Oct. 25 vote in the General Assembly expelling Taiwan and giving China's U.N. seat to the People's Republic.

Red China, as one of the Big Five world powers, apparently feels it should occupy a top U.N. slot commensurate with its international status.

Thant is scheduled to retire Dec. 31 after 10 years as U.N. chief, and his successor will be free to reshuffle chief aides.

When Thant was appointed he named eight principal advisers, representing the five major powers and the key regional areas of Africa, Asia and Latin America. Since then other undersecretaries-general have been appointed. All have equal status as advisers.



The geographic formula is still religiously followed.

BELFAST, Northern Ireland, Nov. 2--WRITTEN IN WINDS OF VIOLENCE--A British soldier uses brick hut for shelter during rioting Tuesday in Andersonstown section of Belfast. The writing on the wall does not refer to the British army.

Tension Builds As British Invade IRA Strongholds

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP)—British troops fought a one-hour border gun battle with Irish Republican Army guerrillas Thursday after arresting 51 suspects in massive raids on Roman Catholic strongholds in Northern Ireland.

The firefight across the sensitive frontier with the Irish republic exploded as a sequel to stop-watch invasions of Belfast's Andersonstown and Londonderry's Bogside districts by 1,400 soldiers, supported by armor.

The raiders found big caches of arms and ammunition.

The passions of Northern Ireland's age-old feud between Roman Catholics and Protestants threatened in Dublin to over-throw the moderate government of Prime Minister Jack Lynch.

Des Foley, latest of a number of hard-line dissidents, resigned from the ruling Fianna Fail party after telling the party's executive why he criticized Lynch for his Northern Ireland policies.

That resignation put Lynch's government on the spot. It has 72 votes in Parliament, including the speaker, who must side with Lynch on a tie vote. The combined opposition also has 72 votes.

Patroling British troops traded hundreds of shots with IRA gunmen firing from sanctuary inside the Irish Republic at Drumbo. The army reported no casualties but witnesses said army vehicles were peppered by automatic fire.

Irish troops and police pulled up to the border after both sides withdrew.

Terrorists bombed the Regency Hotel in Belfast in midafternoon. They gave the staff 30 minutes to get out. The bomb exploded on the minute, after the building was cleared and police cordoned off the area. No one was hurt. Two other men planted another bomb in the nearby York Hotel. Army experts dealt with the explosive before it went off.

More than 1,000 British soldiers moved into the Andersonstown housing area on the Belfast outskirts and sealed the apartment complex in an armored ring-the biggest army action since the internment raids of Aug. 9. They took in 35 suspects.

"No one in, no one out," the troops' orders read. Even milkmen and bakery deliverymen were halted.

Similar raids were carried out in Londonderry's Creggan, Bogside and Shantallow districts by 400 soldiers, who hauled 16 suspects away.

Successive waves of violence in the six counties of Northern Ireland washed fear into London, already a target of suspected IRA bombers in recent days. Special security rules went into effect in London's huge subway system.

Strict Constructionism Promised By Rehnquist

WASHINGTON (AP)-William H. Rehnquist promised Thursday to be faithful to the Constitution if he is confirmed as a Supreme Court justice and "let the chips fall where they may."

"When you put on the robe," he told the Senate Judiciary Committee, "you are there not to impose your personal views but to construe as objectively as you possibly can the Constitution and the statutes."

Testifying a second day on his nomination, the assistant attorney general disputed a prominent lawyer's description of him as an "extreme conservative."

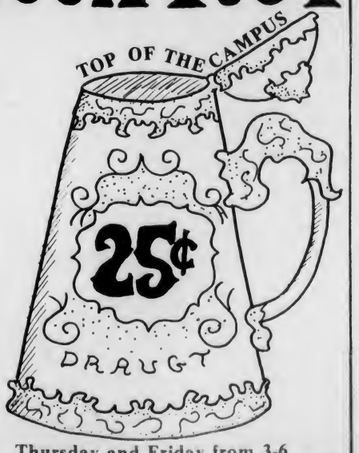
He said he disapproves of "promiscuous wiretapping" and that it is unfair to think of him as backward on civil rights, although he considers long-distance busing of school children undesirable.

Still waiting to be questioned by the committee was President Nixon's nominee for a second vacancy on the court, Lewis F. Powell Jr., Richmond, Va. attorney. Powell was introduced to the committee by Virginia's two senators, Harry F. Byrd Jr., Independent, and William B. Spong Jr., Democrat.

Seven former presidents of the American Bar Association and the current president, Leon Jaworski of Houston, were on hand to back Powell, a one-time ABA president.

While carrying various questions, Rehnquist disagreed with the assessment of John P. Frank, a Phoenix lawyer, that he is an "intellectual force for reaction" and a "supporter of police methods in the extreme."

Rehnquist, a lawyer in the Arizona city before joining the Nixon administration, said "this is not a fair characterization, even of my philosophical views."



Frank's assessment, in a letter to a Phoenix newspaper, was brought up by Sen. Hiram L. Fong, R—Hawaii, who stressed his own opposition to wiretapping.

UMass Students Tutor Spanish Children In Holyoke

Ana and Pablo and Judy and Elvira will be on television Sunday, Nov. 7, doing what they do two hours a week at the H.B. Lawrence Junior High School in Holyoke.

What they do is speak to each other in Spanish and English. Judy and Elvira are tutors from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Spanish department, and Ana and Pablo are junior high school students from Puerto Rico.

The program is more than just teaching English to the children, according to the tutors who say their Spanish has improved quite a bit since the H.B. Lawrence program began in September.

Sunday at 10 a.m., Channel 40, Miss Judy Authier and Miss Elvira Nasti will demonstrate their work with Ana Rodriguez and Pablo Diaz. The program is "Latino," hosted by Mrs. Argelia Hermenet.

At H.B. Lawrence High School, Judy and Elvira and 16 other UMass-Amherst students of Spanish spend two mornings a week trying to improve the English proficiency of about 50 Spanish-speaking children. The school has 143 Spanish-speaking children in its junior high grades and 93 such children in its elementary grades, according to Principal Edward O'Malley. Though the school has five bilingual teachers, the children need more help and Mr. O'Malley expects "great results" from the UMass tutoring program. The tutors, he says "fit in smoothly." In September about 25% of the 143 junior high Spanish-speaking children did not speak English, he says.

For the UMass students, the program provides three academic credits and a chance to use their Spanish in a practical way. Besides the twice weekly trips to Holyoke, they meet once a week for a seminar with their teacher, Asst. Prof. Nina M. Scott. Fourteen of the 18 tutors are Spanish majors.

Some of the tutors are picking up Puerto Rican accents to their Spanish, and all are learning Puerto Rican vocabulary, which differs somewhat from the Spanish taught at UMass.

One rainy morning at H.B. Lawrence Junior High, tutors and their charges sat at tables in the cafeteria. Zenaida Perez, a seventh grader, chatted with tutor Judy Ratta. Zenaida, said Judy, is "frightened to respond" in English because she is unsure of the language. So, they keep chatting, two hours a week. And the tutor has noticed improvements in her Spanish and Zenaida's English.

Ariel Negron, an eighth grader, had never had individual tutoring before tutor Linda Overgaard came from the University. A few weeks into the tutoring, Linda found Ariel "has more willingness to work."

The speech of Miguel Hernandez, also an eighth grader, who is tutored by Ann Nichols, will appear on "Latino" Sunday morning.

Sunday morning's tutors, Miss Judy Authier and Miss Elvira Nasti, are from the Springfield area--Judy from Holyoke and Elvira from West Springfield. Judy, president of Club Hispano at UMass, spent one summer in Mexico, and is a former student of H.B. Lawrence. Elvira spent her junior year in Spain.

Lip Service

November 6th has been an important day in the antiwar movement for quite a while now. With the addition of the Amchitka blast, this Saturday could well become one of the more significant afternoons in our brief lifetimes. It means more demonstrations, more controversy and most importantly, more questions than answers.

In the past, many senators and congressmen have half-heartedly endorsed the activities of the antiwar movement. A few have even given it strong support. The tendency has been for the Washington representatives, as a whole, to agree with demonstration motives, but to restrain themselves from any overt activity on their behalf. This has manifested itself most strongly, and most disappointingly, on the floors of Congress where bill after bill attempting to force an end to the Vietnam farce have gone down the drain.

In a sense, the scheduled Amchitka blast has had a similar history. If we are to believe that the legislative outrage is as extensive as advertised, then why are thousands of people still bracing themselves for Saturday's sadism. If the pluralist theory of government has any reality in America, how can an activity so deplored by such a vast number of people take place.

Perhaps the answer lies in the fact that many individuals, especially those legislators, administrators and interest group leaders most able to direct policy, simply don masks every time an issue of controversy rears its head. This includes all those who call themselves doves but have not supported legislation designed to withdraw funds from Vietnam and those who have not used the full power of their offices to make certain that operation Cannikin never takes place.

Meanwhile, antiwar demonstrations will continue and every once in a while, other issues, equally as noxious to the American public, will appear on the scene. Unless the people in power use their influence to support positions to which they presently pay lip service, they will soon discover that Halloween ends on election day.

Keep The U.N. Here

NEW YORK—There was a very angry reaction last week by some Americans to the United Nations vote on China. Sen. Barry Goldwater suggested we kick the United Nations out of New York. Sen. James Buckley called for the United States to refuse to fund it.

In purely economic terms we believe that those calling for the end of the United Nations are making a mistake. The United Nations brings in far more money to New York than it takes out.

For example, the budget for spying among the U.N. members is estimated to be over a billion dollars.

We have the word of J. Edgar Hoover himself that the United Nations has more spies in it than any international organization. And the most important thing about this fact is that spies spend money.

A recent survey revealed that U.N. spies were the biggest spenders of any group in New York City. They ate at the best restaurants, stayed at the best hotels, hired the most attractive women and were the biggest tippers.

An American economist told me that if it wasn't for the money that foreign spies spend in the United States, our balance of payments deficit would be twice what it is today.

A top restaurateur said, "We've been in a terrible slump in the past few years since legitimate businessmen have been ordered to cut out lavish spending at lunch or dinner. If it wasn't for the spies attached to U.N. delegations, we would have to close our doors."

"I don't think they counted that much," I said.

"It isn't just the spies that bring in the business," he said, "it's what they bring in with them, too. Every time a Russian spy reserves a table for dinner, we also get a reservation for a table from the FBI and one from the CIA and one from the KGB--the Soviet Secret Police.

"Why would the KGB reserve an extra table if one of their own spies were having dinner there?"

"They don't trust each other."

A hotel manager confirmed that U.N. spies were keeping his place going. "When a Cuban U.N. delegate takes a hotel room, the Secret Service takes the room next to him," he said. "Navy intelligence takes the room on top of him, the State Department security people take the room below him and we rent out the entire basement for equipment to bug his room.

"We couldn't afford to take care of New York policemen for free if it wasn't for money that U.N. spies bring in."

Another hotel manager said he had rented out an entire floor to Arab U.N. delegates directly over Israeli Foreign Minister Abba Eban's suite, when Eban last came to town.

He said, "The nice thing about spies at the United Nations is that they don't cause any trouble. They are very quiet. All they're interested in doing is getting information and they usually talk in whispers."

There is great excitement over the Red Chinese coming here to the United Nations. "They will have to assume every Chinese U.N. delegate is a spy," a Chinese restaurant owner said, "and I understand the FBI has already doubled its entertainment budget for its New York City office."

"But," I said, "suppose the Red Chinese delegates turn out not to be big spenders?"

"Who cares," he replied. "Every person in New York of Chinese descent will be suspect, and what we don't make on Red Chinese U.N. spies, we'll recoup on the FBI following Chinese people who were born in Brooklyn."

The Force That Never Fails

FACT: The Antiwar demonstrations in Washington D.C. and San Francisco on April 24th, 1971 together were the largest gathering of people for a political purpose in American History.

FACT: At the demonstrations on April 24th 1971, organized labor was in the streets for the first time in 25 years.

FACT: Labor support for this Saturday's Nov. 6th demonstrations which are slated to take place on that day in 17 cities surpasses that which was realized on last April 24th.

FACT: The Nov. 6th demonstrations, which call for the immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia, have the signature endorsements of 20 U.S. representatives and 7 U.S. senators. These representatives and senators have remained silent concerning these demonstrations throughout the entire autumn publicity and organizing campaign.

FACT: Any and all news concerning the Nov. 6th demonstrations has been blacked out by every major news paper, magazine, T.V., and Radio station in the country.

We asked a member of the Student Mobe about this collection of facts. She stated that "the absense of any media coverage of preparations and support for the demonstrations, especially in light of the size and scope of these historic events, was too wide spread to be a coincidence." She pointed to the congressional and senatorial doves, from both parties, who had endorsed the demonstrations, and who, she said "find their watered down peace efforts frustrated in Congress and yet are speechless when the opportunity to really help the antiwar movement presents itself." "Where are all those concerned newspapers now?" She asked. We then asked what she thought it all meant. "Putting it together," she said, "you find the administration, the news media, and both parties, doves included, obviously working against a large turnout for Nov. 6th." "They don't want a massive independant antiwar movement. They don't like the idea of people demonstrating in the streets independent of the Democratic and Republican parties. They would rather have people stay home on Nov. 6th, wait an entire year, and then vote for another dove. They would rather not have to deal with the demand for the immediate and total withdrawal of all U.S. forces from Southeast Asia."

We asked if she expected the Nov. 6th demonstrations to be as big as April 24th. "Bigger." We asked on what she based this prediction for success. "Well, many of the things the antiwar movement has said in the past have been proven over the past few months to be correct. The Pentagon Papers verified what we were saying about the reasons for the war and the way in which the war is being fought. The one-man election in South Vietnam said a lot for the political system which the U.S. government has been supporting over there, and the wage freeze, which is a direct result of war related inflation will move a lot of people to demonstrate. And finally, this period, before the Nov. 6th demonstrations has not rendered the antiwar movement helpless. For years, we have been saying that in order to end this war, we would have to organize, finance, publicize, and marshall the movement ourselves. We have not allowed the movement to become a lobby for any party or politician. We have maintained the principle demand of immediate withdrawal. And on Nov. 6th, in spite of the collective efforts of the administration, congress, and the mass media, the American people will be in the streets again demanding immediate and total withdrawal, in more areas of the country and in greater numbers than ever before, because they rely on the only force that has never failed them: themselves."

Symphony Time At Graduation

Air, spring: the violins and yellow flutes
Possess the natures of their owners.
The moon, frozen by the grass's piquancy,
Sits delectably silent in an orchard of light.

We move forward, tanned by smashing cymbals,
And the maze of sky entraps our eyes.
The music is soft, not bitter:
Enticing echoes spring as artifacts of joy.

We are the littoral descendants
Of those who sat by the water,
Shields in hand,
Waiting for the sun to rupture;

We are the plutocracy,
Whose treasured tongues
Produce heirlooms of sound.
We are the noblest Romans of them all.

Somewhere, in the angel cake of time,
Orpheus plays his tune, and Eurydice runs.
He is no descendant;
He measures movement by his wings.

For us and Orpheus, the stars will cluster;
It's just taken us time, that's all.
And the gelid fingers of our minds
Will milk the queasy nebulae.

The Illegality of Nixon

To the Editor:

I would like to cast some reflections on the upcoming nuclear test occurring on Saturday at Amchitka.

There have been many different stances taken on this issue. Last night, I heard a New York radio announcer saying that the blast was "the most powerful nuclear blast ever detonated by the United States". This is untrue. In 1954 the United States exploded a 24-megaton device, an air-burst bomb, in the Eniwetok Group in the Pacific. Very little was mentioned of it at the time; those of us that are perhaps most vociferous in their dismay over the Amchitka explosion were probably watching Howdy Doody at the time, and didn't know the meaning of the word "ecology".

Times have indeed changes. Not only are air-burst nuclear weapons banned by edict of the 1963 test-ban treaty, but the American public is much more aware of the deleterious aspects of nuclear devices. Last Friday one of us wrote that Amchitka was a 500 megaton bomb, mentioning that it was 250 times more powerful than the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima. If it were indeed a 500 megaton device, then a good deal of Alaska would go up in a mushroom cloud. According to units of destructiveness, the Amchitka bomb is a 5-megaton, not a 500- megaton device. It is 10 times less powerful than the Russian test exploded in 1961 at Novaya Zemlya island in the Arctic, and about 5 times less powerful than the 1954 device which was air-dropped in the Pacific.

I do have one or two fundamental questions, aside from the ecologically illegal act of exploding this bomb in the first place. Perhaps someone can enlighten me further. Why is this bomb to be exploded in a geologically unstable zone, and not down some prairie dog hole in Yucca Flats, where most A-tests usually take place? If the Atomic Energy Commission admist that it is not the bomb that needs to be tested, but the deployment system, why are they exploding the bomb (ref.: the New York Times, 11-3-71, ppg. 29) at all? Furthermore, why is this test of such a large magnitude? I cannot see why an ABM must have a 5-megaton warhead if it is to detonate an incoming missile with perhaps a greater destructive payload in its own armament. And given these considerations, why has President Nixon refused to outlaw the test, in the face of severe domestic and international opposition?

Amchitka may not be the most powerful nuclear test ever detonated by this country. It is certainly much less powerful than the largest nuclear test ever detonated in the world. But there seems to be little justification, in the pragmatic sense, for its detonation at all. If President Nixon accepts the illegality of Amchitka, then we may ask ourselves whether or not we should accept the illegality of President Nixon.

No Santa Clause

To the Editor:

Recently the Student Senate was confronted by four organizations that were seeking funds. Of the four groups involved, I believe that three of them were of a non-controversial nature, being mainly oriented toward social and charitable work. However, even some of the most socially-conscious senators were forced to draw a line, since the appropriations for the four groups would have totalled almost $6,000, while the entire yearly figure in the category that the appropriations would come from is only $5,000. As a result, only one of the three social-work groups were funded.

As for myself, I see this as indicative of a problem of a broader nature. I concede that each of the three groups performs worthwhile services. However, I do not necessarily believe that this should mean that they should be funded by student tax money. The very fact that the senate funded only one out of three implies some sort of a value judgment on the part of the senate towards charity. Should not the individual student have the same right to his own personal value judgment, i.e. contribute to charity as an individual?

Some may argue that precedents have been set: if you fund one group you have to fund all similar groups. To me this is utter nonsense. Precedents can be broken faster than they are made, and any existing budget can be struck at any time.

To some this may sound like extreme financial conservatism. I do not shrink from that label, although I prefer to call it political and fiscal realism. Put in its simplest sense, the line must be held somewhere, or else face a skyrocketing student activities tax. Charity begins at home, not with a corporate Santa Claus.

Peace Of Land

To the Editor:

As an uninformed listener, I am glad to hear (again) that Senator McGovern's peace policy is to sell jets to Israel. As an uninformed listener, I thought the British, also, sent arms to the state of Israel in 1948, to preserve peace. It has been my misunderstanding that the British and French sent troops to the Middle East in 1956 to secure peace. I have also been under the impression that the French sold their jet fighters to Israel in 1967 to preserve the balance of power. Somehow, I equated all this with our country's sale of jets to protect Israel from the imperialistic Arab nations. I guess it takes an informed listener to realize that the state of Israel depends on the sale of arms every now and then to obtain peace--a "peace of Arab land.

I am appreciative of being informed that almost every leading presidential candidate shares McGovern's policy. More seriously though, I hope it is understood that it is this policy, not the candidate, that I oppose. I would hope that students, while they still have their pens in their hands from writing letters opposing Viet Nam, Amchitka, etc., might also tell their representatives in Congress that they oppose any policy which might involve American arms, jets, or men in Israel's wars.

Beautiful Hope?

To the Editor:

Thanks to the questionable priorities of our Student Senate, we will now have representation at the NSA Convention (something President Lee Sandwen has termed a "waste of time"--and he should know), as well as lots of posters and pamphlets ($785 worth) telling us what homosexuality is all about and when and where the next SHL dance will be held. These priorities also determined that transportation funds for the Belchertown Volunteers, as well as budgets for the Juvenile Opportunity Extension and the Orchard Hill tutorial service will not be forthcoming. Incredible!

Dick Gregory claimed, the other day, that our (college's) generation represents a "beautiful hope" to the world in terms of sincerity, honesty, and involvement. In Gregory's own words, "surely you're putting me on!" This apathetic, uninformed, disinterested bunch here at UMass can't even generate enough interest to elect a full complement of student senators to represent itself. For example, Wheeler House (where I live)-- despite all its other favorable aspects--has no student senator because of what appears to be a total lack of interest in our own campus-wide affairs. Does Gregory expect that graduation will produce some sort of silent explosion of "Consciousness III", such that Umies--upon hitting the 'reality' which faces them outside these hallowed halls--will charge forth and remake our society from bottom to top? That's wishful (and naive)thinking par excellance.

Everyone has his own values. If the majority of the campus wants to have their money spent on student "junkets" and progaganda from homosexuals--so be it. But I doubt if that's the case. The trouble is (and this is hardly news to anyone) that our world-saving student body just won't take the time to let us know if it agrees or not, (referendum anyone?); and worse--Wheeler, and other dorms and groups on campus, don't even want the opportunity to be heard. It's your money.

Maybe if the School of Ed would give modular credits for being in the Student Senate . . .?

Editorial Points

It's not often that an Amherst Police car drives by you and an officer tosses a lighted cigarette out of the window into the street which just happened to be covered with dry leaves. We guess we were just lucky.

Imagine what would happen if the Student Senate could really abolish varsity football here at UMass just in time for the Holy Cross game when quite a few State legislators will be honored by a before game luncheon.

Perhaps a good reason to name the library after the former Chancellor is that people are afraid that it will Tippo-ver.

Sweet Innocent Girls

To the Editor:

To begin with, I am sorry to include all of Gorman House in this response, but I understand many residents have the same opinions as Laurel Louraine and John Sullivan. Being a Kappa Sigma pledge and knowing something about the fraternity, I would like to make a few things clear.

You must realize this. is a fraternity next door and not an Old Folks Home. Fraternities by nature are loud and quite often obscene. It so happens in this case that Gorman House was constructed practically on top of the private land of Kappa Sigma. Kappa Sigma has been here since 1904 while Gorman is a relatively new addition. The other fraternities on campus do not have this situation and I feel this, to a great extent, has created the bad feelings and rumors about Kappa Sigma.

I would also like to point out that Gorman residents should not be so quick to throw stones. Numerous indecent phone calls can be traced to Gorman. Many times the sweet innocent girls of Gorman get a little fired up and start the obscenity yelling. Recently Gorman people have been getting their kicks by running up and down the stairs of Kappa Sigma. Gormanites have stolen articles from the premises and have completely insulted Kappa Sigma traditions and values.

So I ask Gorman House to open their eyes to some facts they probably did not realize and perhaps take some of these things into consideration in the future.

Open Letter

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE CHANCELLOR
SEARCH COMMITTEE:

Sirs,

On Wednesday, Nov. 3, upon hearing there would be a meeting of the Chancellor Search Committe. I thought it would be wise to attend this meeting, as I was concerned with the type and quality of Chancellor this University might be receiving. As a student, I thought it was my right to be able to attend this meeting, since I am concerned that the Chancellorship (a post which was brought to the function of serving both the University and the Student by Chancellor Tippo) would continue in the tradition of free student representation in these meetings.

It was not my intention to disrupt the meeting in any way whatsoever. I merely wanted to listen to and make personal (silent) observations about what the Committee was discussing. Within one minute of entering the room, I was told that there was a meeting going on the basic assumption being that I should leave. When I replied that I thought it was an open meeting, I was greeted by a short silence and somewhat confused attitude (they were baffled). In any case, I did leave, not wanting to cause any further disruption.

I can appreciate the Committee's need for a well-organized meeting; however, I can also state that a "closed meeting" is the antithesis of free student participation in the decision-making processes of the university. It is the student's right to attend (even if that attendance is non-participatory), meetings that will give him information on things that will affect his future as a student of the University (and the new Chancellor undoubtedly will).

I hereby respectfully submit that these meetings be made open to the general student body, faculty, and administration. The attendance, as I have stated before will be non-participatory, and open to all interested members of the University.

Please consider this, oh marvelous CSC: There is no greater right than the right to know.

Irritated and annoyed that I have to write out what is obvious and basic to student rights, I remain.

Gary Gomes

Take Two/Happenings

On Friday, November 12 the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies and New Africa House are sponsoring a Symposium and Workshop conducted by three outstanding young scholars of the Pan-African world. The Symposium topic will be; "Prospects for Unity and Change in Africa, America, and the Caribbean."

Participants are: Brother AHMED MOUHIDDIN, Brother WILLIAM STRICKLAND, and Brother ROBERT HILL.

Brother Mouhiddin, a Tanzanian national, is currently visiting professor at the Africana Studies Center at Cornell University. He was formerly senior lecturer at the University of Dar es Salaam and Makerere University in Uganda in the Department of Political Science. He was also Secretary-General of the TANU Youth League. He has published works on the Politics of West Africa, Ujamaa socialism in Tanzania, the role of education in the socialist transformation of Tanzania, and other subjects.

Brother Strickland, from Atlanta, Georgia, is currently a Senior Research Fellow and Director of Policy Studies at the Institute of the Black World. He is a writer, historian, and activist who has taught at Harvard College and Columbia University. He was director of the Northern Student Movement, chairman of the New York State Committee to Support the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party Challenge, and Deputy Director of the 1967 Newark Black Power Conference. He has written on Black politics, economic development, history and other subjects. He also has recently co-authored a book, Federal Power in the Suppression of the Black Movement.

Brother Hill, from Kingston, Jamaica, is currently a Senior Research Fellow at the Institute of the Black World and Visiting Professor of History at Dartmouth College. He is probably the foremost young scholar now working on Marcus Garvey and on the ideological development of Pan-Africanism in the western hemisphere. Brother Hill has travelled, studied, and lectured extensively throughout the Caribbean and Central and South America. He formerly was editor of Abeng, a radical Black community newspaper in Kingston and has written on the history, politics, and economics of the Caribbean and Pan-African world. He recently completed, for publication, A Marcus Garvey Reader.

The Symposium will take place at New Africa House, University of Massachusetts, starting at 2 p.m. All Brothers and Sisters in the Five Colleges area are urged to attend this important session.

Help Needed

From time to time Black people come to our campus for various reasons--speaking dates, performances, etc. As you can well imagine, there is a lot of work to be done to make sure that their visit is a successful one. Help of all sorts is needed to do such things as hang posters, design leaflets, etc.

Would all those willing to help out please come to the Black Cultural Center (New Africa House) Saturday, November 6th at 10 a.m. to begin working on a project and to register your name and phone number for future projects. We will meet in room 325.

Cooperative work effort is a part of our African heritage.

Art Exhibit

On Friday, November 12th, 1971, the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies will present an art exhibit of the works of Professor Ed Love of Howard University, Washington D.C. The exhibition will formally open at 5:00 p.m. and will extend until Sunday, November 14, 1971 at 6:00 p.m.

Professor Love has been teaching sculpture at Howard University since 1967. He was born in Los Angeles, California and he studied at Cal. State, Los Angeles and U.C.L.A. where he received his professional degrees. He was also awarded a fellowship to study at the University of Upsala.

Professor Love has been very active in the Black Community of Washington, both teaching and providing street exhibitions. He has also exhibited at the major galleries in Washington, D.C.

On Saturday, November 13, at 11:00 p.m. Professor Love will present a Sound and Light Show at the New Africa House and on Sunday, November 14, at 2:00 p.m. he will hold a workshop. The entire weekend program promises to be very exciting. All of the publics are invited to participate actively.

Hamlin Site Of Vacation Housing

All residential students who plan to remain on campus over the Thanksgiving vacation will be required to reside in Hamlin House located in the Northeast area. Further, they will be expected to abide by the procedures listed below.

1. Telephone the Accommodation Office's main desk at 9-549-6000 and secure a reservation in Hamlin House. Reservations will be made by phone or in person up to and including Friday, November 19.
2. Confirmation of phone reservations must be done in person on Monday, November 22. The hotel lobby desk is located on the third floor of the Campus Center. Failure to appear in person on the 22nd will negate the remaining telephone reservations.
3. All residential students who remain on campus in Hamlin House will be required to pay $2.50 per night for their accommodations. These charges will be collected in Hamlin House by the clerk on duty before a room key is issued.
4. Sheets, pillows and blankets will be available for a cost of $1.75 if so desired or you may bring your own.
5. Residence halls on campus will reopen at 1:00 p.m. on Sunday, November 28, 1971.

No residential students will be permitted to remain in their own dorms over the vacation period.

Vandalism In Library Causing Work Delays

By KERRY MELLO

Vandalism is an increasing problem in the United States today. Seemingly no place is exempt from its destructive forces. A prime example of this is the vandalism that has been occurring at the site of the new library.

Dating back to the initial ground breaking of the library, is a history of vandalism. At the outset, attempts were made to burn down a trailer, belonging to the construction company, which was on the construction site. Recently, there have been numerous other acts which, although not as extreme, have been equally as destructive.

As stated by superintendent Paul St. Martin, the building is broken into almost every weekend. These antics result in damage to the building and also missing materials, thus slowing down the progress of the workers. Several times, workers' toolboxes have been broken into, necessitating a replacement of the tools and thus time missed from work.

One of the most common incidents lately has been breaking into the building, climbing to the top of the crane, and stealing the red airplane warning lights. Another frequent prank has been the writing of obscenities all over the walls inside the building. The huge "Nov. 6" slogan, draped on the side of the building was placed there by vandals and two large double-plate glass windows, costing $500.00 apiece, were recently broken.

In addition to the damage done to the building, St. Paul worries about the risks that the vandals take. Since power is shut off at night, there is no lighting and someone who doesn't know the building can easily fall into one of the many open pits and shafts.

The vandalism, although it did occur last year, is happening in increasing amounts, and more damage is being done. When asked for his opinion on the matter St. Paul stated "I wish it would stop. We're trying to give the school and state the best building we can and this only delays it longer and costs more money."

Bless The Children

Many controversial things have been heard about the Greek system on campus. Fraternities especially have gotten a bad name in the past years at UMass.

Delta Chi, along with Chi Delphia, their auxiliary, have tried to change this image with their service projects.

One such project was a Halloween party given at the Belchertown State School, Saturday, October 30, from 2:00-4:00 p.m. This party was given for the seven and eight-year olds, most of them retarded at the age of three.

According to Bill Sawyer, vice president of Delta Chi, and Mark Farver, Service chairman, twenty-five people, including brothers, pledges, and friends, were at hand to entertain about fifty children.

The youngsters were first given pink balls and hats, cookies, brownies, punch and ice cream. Later games were played.

Delta Chi and Belchertown State School would like to encourage anyone who is interested to go to the school and take a child out for a day, or any amount of time you can spare. These children need and crave love and attention.

Although the staff at Belchertown does give a Christmas party, any group is welcome any other time to come in. It may just help more than the children.

AlphaPhiAids Library Funds

Alpha Phi Omega donated $55.00 to the library fund. Here Frank Evans from Alpha Phi presents the gift to Sigfield Feller, Chief bibliographer. Funds came from last semesters S.C.R.E.W. project.

Other projects of the frat include Las Vegas night, the semi-annual Blood Drive, Handicapped Aids and the Amherst Fair.

Peace Talks Center About Restricted Prisoner Mail

PARIS (AP)-The United States challenged North Vietnam Thursday to explain why only one of every seven American prisoners of war has been allowed to write home during the last six months and why the total number of letters this year has been cut by 85 per cent.

The questions raised by U.S. negotiator William J. Porter at the 135th weekly session of the Vietnam peace talks led to a long and acrimonious exchange with the second-string officials leading the Hanoi and Viet Cong delegations.

But there was no reply from the Communist side. Porter told newsmen after the five-hour session-one of the longest in months-that the Communist delegations were "absolutely adamant in their refusal to give any answer."

"They don't seem to have any authority to negotiate," Porter added, repeating a charge which has particularly irritated the stand-ins who have replaced the chief Communist negotiators the last eight meetings.

Porter said the curtailment of letters from U.S. POWs to their families violated the Geneva prisoner of war convention and the North Vietnamese authorities' own undertakings.

Hanoi has consistently refused to accept the Geneva convention's jurisdiction over U.S. POWs, claiming they were captured while bombing civilian targets and therefore are war criminals, not ordinary prisoners.

Porter said families of the 339 prisoners Hanoi has officially acknowledged have received only 170 letters in the six months from May through October.

Job Market Getting Tighter

The UMass-Amherst placement service, like others around the country, faces another difficult year finding jobs for graduating seniors.

Robert J. Morrissey, director of the Career Planning and Placement Services says, "The job market is down again this year. There are a lot fewer jobs open and fewer employers coming onto campus for interviews."

Morrissey expects about 350 employers to visit campus this year to interview students, a figure up just slightly from last year when 337 employers conducted 380 interviews. That, however, was down considerably from two years ago when 426 employers conducted nearly 4800 interviews, he notes. While the number of job interviews has dropped, the number of graduates has increased each year, compounding the problem.

International Business Machine Corporation (IBM), which in the past has been a major recruiter, has notified the placement service that it is doing no college interviewing this year. Other companies which have recently cancelled interviews include Gulf Oil and U.S. Steel.

According to Morrissey, "This doesn't mean that there aren't any jobs available--it just means the individual is going to have to work harder to find one."

The placement service, which in the past dealt mainly with seniors, is this year gearing itself more to underclassmen and their early career planning, Morrissey says. He and his staff of counselors are trying to reach students early to help them plan careers which are both interesting and likely to have jobs open when the students graduate.

Morrissey reports that the placement service has also been working more with alumni recently. In the affluent market of the past decade, alumni had no trouble moving from job to job. Now that the market is tight, Morrissey says, many are using the services of the placement office.

University Roundup

University of Massachusetts artist Hui-Ming Wang has published a book of T'ang poems from the ninth century China. The volume is "The Boat Untied and Other Poems," by Barre Publishers. According to the publishers: "Twelve T'ang poems of the ninth century in English translations have been cut on cherry blocks and vividly illustrated in the most brilliant colors. They appear on facing pages with the poems rendered in brush drawn Chinese calligraphy. He has succeeded remarkably in relating the ancient poems to the most contemporary art and philosophy, fostering a happy marriage between the visual and the poetic. Students of the Oriental arts will recognize them as the forerunners of the Japanese haiku."

Wang is an accomplished printmaker and painter who is an associate professor of art at the University. Wang's one-man show include exhibition at the Minneapolis Institute of Art, the New Britain Museum of American Art and the University of Maine. Much of his work has appeared in books and literary magazines and he is represented in the permanent graphics collection of the Library of Congress.

SW Assembly Report

By ANNE COLLINGTON

The weekly meeting of the Southwest Assembly was held on Tuesday night in MacKimmie Faculty Apartment. Although several bills were introduced, most were either defeated or tabled, to be discussed at later dates.

Some of the issues discussed included the announcement that the tunnel will be painted and tulip bulbs planted on Saturday. Anyone interested in helping out is welcome. This is the first in a series of "Great Saturdays" to be held on campus.

It was also proposed that the salary for a part-time supervisor who will work in the new Southwest Women's Center be provided by the Assembly. To be referred to the Services Committee was a bill involving the re-opening of Fantasia, a student-run snack var in Washington Tower which was closed last year because of increasing damages.

Passed was a bill involving a Southwest Study Center that will include a pilot video workshop for the residents of Southwest.

Proposed was a Southwest Tenants Association, which would serve all residents of Southwest in that a group of interested students would be able to voice the general opinions of the residents regarding board, student-operated food services, etc. However, a motion was passed to send the bill back for revision, to be considered again at a later date.

Also passed was a bill concerning better lighting in Southwest dorms, because those lights presently in use are claimed to be poor and detrimental to students' eyesight.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

The late Pulitzer Prize winning science editor, John J. O'Neill, declared that astromoners who consistently attack astrology show definite symptoms of "professional paranoia."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You make up with relatives, neighbors. Differences can be settled. Your twin allies now are humor and versatility. Avoid obstinacy. Those in positions of authority are willing to listen.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You can successfully complete important transaction. Efforts show a profit. Key is willingness to invest in your own ideas, abilities. Collect what you need. Be observant, alert!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Take initiative. Make new starts. Stress greater independence. Personal magnetism soars. Opposite sex is attracted. You can get almost anything you request. Be selective. Choose quality.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use imagination in constructive manner. Avoid brooding. Stop thinking about what might have been. Look to future. It is brighter than might be imagined. Follow through on pet project.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Social activity is emphasized. Turn on charm. Business, personal proposals deserve to be evaluated. Don't pass up opportunity. Sagittarius individual could play prominent role. Be receptive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be thorough in checking details. What appears minor could be important for you. Some apparent restrictions will ultimately prove beneficial. Get rid of outmoded concepts. Build on solid base.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Accent on journeys, higher education, future travel, vacation plans. Be in touch with relatives at a distance. Define terms. Be consistent. Be ready for change of scenery. Welcome challenge.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Discuss inventory, financial plans with mate, business associate. Harmonize efforts. Make conciliatory gesture to family member. Domestic adjustment is due. Beautify surroundings.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Defer final judgment. Wait and see. Emphasis is on public relations, how you meet opposition. Mate or partner plays prominent role. Some puzzle pieces remain out of place. Take your time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Avoid extremes. Moderate approach now brings best results. Act accordingly. Accent on health, work, ability to complete basic chores. Aid forthcoming from one you helped in past. Show gratitude.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Creative efforts succeed. Do things your own way. Adhere to individual style. Dealing with children accented. Young ideas dominate. Recognition comes from surprise source. Aries is involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Practical issues dominate. You are able to put across views. Be original rather than attempting to follow crowd. Co-operate with Leo individual. Fine for entertaining at home. Show off hobby.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are dynamic, vital, capable of creating original concepts. Members of opposite sex find you attractive. You are recovering from recent setback. And you will come back stronger than ever. Before the end of November, you will be rid of emotional burden.

Gagnon "Kicks" Cause He's Not Kicking

By MARK VOGLER

When conditions get tough, the together team must stick together. And although rookie football Coach Dick MacPherson does his best to instill harmony in the group, there are some who are not at all content. One of those is senior Denis Gagnon, UMass' No. 1 place kicker the past two years. He sits on the bench with his records.

If the name rings a bell to some Redman followers, they're probably scratching their heads and saying to themselves: "Oh yeah, Denis Gagnon--he kicked some beauties last season. I thought he had one more year left. Doesn't he kick field goals anymore?"

Well, the point is that there have been various rumors of one sort or another this fall pertaining to Gagnon's whereabouts in the football picture. Such rumors open alleys for possible controversy on the Massachusetts sports front.

Some of the uninformed critics claim that Gagnon has lost his stuff, that he just doesn't have what it takes anymore. Others, apparently sumpathizers, go so far as to pin blame on the coaching staff, insisting that they have not been fair to the kicker since his summer ending operation.

Operation? Yes. Gagnon underwent medical treatment for the uncovering of muscle sheath in his kicking leg during late August. As a result he was forced to miss all of pre-season and was relieved of active duty by Mark Palau, a junior. Hence he's been used for just the long field goal attempts, and they haven't come up that often.

How does Gagnon feel about the situation? Considering that he holds virtually all Massachusetts placement kicking records--including the longest field goals(46,45,42) and had high aspirations of going into the pros if he had an impressive senior season, it's no surprise that he's an unhappy man. Frustrated, mainly at the fact that he finds his working load has depreciated greatly--Gagnon frets at the idea of having attempted only three field goals this fall--After all, he attempted 26 in his first two years.

"I had very strong intentions of striving for professional ball until this year," says Gagnon, "but now it doesn't look too promising. When I graduate I'll be getting a job with some accounting firm, but in the back of my mind I would much rather have gone on to some pro team with a good senior year.

"I'm not ready to hang up the spikes at this point, though. I had plans of trying out with the Patriots anyway. But then again, I don't know if I'll do that if things don't change. I really loved the game of football up till this year.

"I just don't like the idea of taking a back seat in a job that I've led the Yankee Conference in for two years. My leg feels fine and it is as strong as it will ever be. But the only time they send me in is for the home run kick."

Has Gagnon had a fair opportunity thus far? If you miss three kicks in as many tries that's usually a good enough indication for a coach to hunt elsewhere for talent. But being a victim of misfortune, he had a 30-yarder called back, and then from five yards farther his holder muffed the snap--all this under inclement weather conditions. His other two tests were from 45 and 49 yards out--not exactly duck shots.

Dick MacPherson, the target of much skepticism on the part of those who feel Gagnon should be booting regular has acknowledged the three-year veteran's gripes: "I can understand that Denis is disturbed over the situation. As a matter of fact, we've talked about it several times. It's natural for an athlete to feel that way. He should think that he's better than the man in there.

"But it's the obvious opinion of the coaching staff that Mark Palau is our regular place kicker, obvious, because we're not using Denis at the moment. I have no personal animosity towards him at all. Mark Palau is there now and if we ever feel any different about it, then Denis Gagnon will get the nod. He's got one of the best legs I've ever seen; his problem is getting it through the uprights."

MacPherson doesn't take the statistic sheet too lightly. He refers to it quite frequently. Gagnon as noted earlier, is a threat from way out. But in 26 official attempts prior to this year, he has converted only five field goals--three from beyond the 40. Most observers equate Gagnon with both accuracy and power, while just the latter quality applies.

As MacPherson sees it: "Because Mark Palau has demonstrated much more accuracy and consistency than Denis Gagnon in practice and under game situations, he's in the regular spot. Gagnon has the stronger leg, he can kick 'em long. There's no doubt about that. But Palau is the more accurate of the two. That is the evaluation of the coaching staff."

The coach pointed out that Palau has been successful on three of five opportunities, with one failure being the result of a bad exchange.

The fact that Gagnon will be gone next year and Palau would need some breaking in could be an influencing factor on why the kickers are getting equal time.

It is kind of rare to see two men occupy a chore that on other teams one man would ordinarily fill. But upon his appointment to the staff last spring, Mac made it clear that he would concentrate on a strong kicking game. Maybe in his eyes having a man for long and one for short kicks is most adequate, especially if each is a specialist at his assignment.

Gagnon, a product of Springfield Cathedral High, has an exceptional athletic background. As a schoolboy he finished third in the state in wrestling, and he was quite a track enthusiast, being able to sprint with the best in Western Mass. As a senior he finished second only to Paul Metallo in the 100 and 220. Little did he know that Matallo would soon become a team mate at UMass.

Ironically, Gagnon chose to play football for the first time during his last year of high school. He kicked 7 of 10 field goal efforts--one said to be as long as 50 yards. His golden toe must have impressed a lot of folks because the year after he wound up shoeing the pigskin for the Massachusetts frosh.

He had five goals to his credit--including a 52-yarder. Of the club's five victories, he figured in three with timely kicks. The UMass first year men shaded Army 12-10, B.C. 10-9, and UNH 24-21.

As a junior and sophomore Gagnon notched All-New England third team honors as a kicking specialist. He leads UMass kickers for one-point conversions in his career, hitting on 58 of 62 deliveries. With three games to go, however, he has apparently little time to improve upon these credentials-Palau kicks the points.

At 21, Gagnon's married to the former Nancy Bassett. When the season winds up he must set himself afresh to family affairs.

Meantime, there is no ill feeling between the player and coach MacPherson labels Gagnon "one of the strongest and most fundamentally sound kickers in collegiate football. At the present time he has lost his confidence and it offsets his accuracy at times.

"Denis is an excellent student (3.5 cum as an accountant major). I think he's good for the squad, by the same token I think football has been good for Denis Gagnon."

Kathy Lawson: Munich Or Bust

By TOM DERDERIAN

Earle, The Daily Collegian sports editor, asked me to do an interview with Kathy Lawson because she and I are both runners, and I should be able to do a better job because of that. It's true that we both run, but that's where it ends: you see, she's faster than me. I might run 26 seconds for 220 yards downhill with a tail wind; Kathy can run 23.2 on the flat in a dead calm. So I went to see Kathy Lawson, a freshman, to learn what I could about sprinting.

I learned first off that she didn't have any wings on her feet. That she only trains an hour a day, less than most UMass students put in "people watching' in the Hatch. She has also been all over this country and Europe. I asked her to brag a bit about what she's accomplished, I had to ask her a second time before she would answer me.

Early last summer she didn't make the Pan American team. She ran 24.2 and tied for fourth, only three women were chosen. She explained she felt let down. In the trials for the Russian meet in Illinois she ran second in 23.8 to Ester Story who was clocked at the same time.

In the Russian meet in Berkeley, California she beat the Russians but finished second to Raylene Boyle of Australia. Kathy ran 23.7 for 200 meters. In Bakersfield, California in the national meet Kathy ran a life time best of 23.1 in the trials but lost again to the Australian in the finals with a slower time. Kathy was awarded the medal for national champion. In North Carolina Kathy ran 200 meters in 23.7 for third against the Pan African team and the World all-Stars.

This summer in Europe Kathy was undefeated running in Italy, Denmark, Norway and Sweden. Those meets were covered by CBS television.

I was impressed so I asked her how she trains. She said, "My Coach Jeff Johnson of the Liberty A.C. mails me my workouts from Boston. Every day is different. I'll do things like jogging a half mile to a mile for a warmup then do series of 3/4 speed repetitions of 330's, 220's and 100's and lots of straights and some more jogging and exercises to warm down."

I asked her more about coaches. "I had a coach in high school who was out to make a name for himself; I don't like that; he trained me harder than he trained the boys. I need a coach that is happy, a guy who is an inspiration not a taskmaster," said Miss Lawson.

I asked her about her aims and goals expecting a long complicated answer. She said one word, "MUNICH". The 1972 Olympics will be in Munich Germany. Kathy said it will take a 23.1 to 23.5 to make the team. I asked about Wyomia Tyus' national record of 22.9 and Chi Cheng's world record of 22.6. "I'd like to go after the American record but I can't say yet."

How did you get started I asked her. "Back in the first two years of high school I played softball. About the time of the girls state meet the high school girls track coach asked me if I wanted to try the 100 yard dash. I broke the state record. I then forgot about softball...I wouldn't give up running for anything now."

I asked her about bulging muscles. She said what about bulging muscles? "You can run and run and run and still you won't get bulging muscles." Most girls are afraid of ugly muscles, I think muscles are a lot prettier than fat and flab, a lot of girls are afraid of falling, afraid of pain. Most of this isn't true. You see those Russian women who throw the shot put and they are big women, but they were big before they came near a track. Some of the prettiest women I know are runners."

Kathy doesn't think she will compete for UMass before the Olympics because of the dispute between the AAU and the NCAA. "It's too risky," she says.

Redmen Host Holy Cross

By EARLE BARROLL

Yesterday at football practice coach Dick MacPherson took his customary position in the middle of the calisthenic circle.

The feverish pitch amongst the players was at a high as co-captain Dennis Keating readied the troops for cal.

Mac readied himself, the players tensed and Keating yelled, "ready" and the troops broke into "Happy Birthday to you..." Yes it was coach MacPherson's birthday and he took it like the modest person he is. He walked humbly around the circle, blushed a bit here or there...but there was no present.

Tomorrow at Alumni Field the UMass football team has the chance to give Mac a belated birthday present when they host the upstart Holy Cross Crusaders beginning at 1 p.m.

Anyone who's followed College football over the past couple of years knows that to say that Holy Cross deserves the comeback team of the year award would be an incredible understatement.

The Cross' case with hepatitis wiped out the last eight games two years ago on the Crusader slate and last year in a healthy state they didn't win a game.

But this is a different year and thanks to first year coach Ed Doherty, a new enthusiasm and belief in Holy Cross football has emerged in Worcester and a 4-2 record has resulted, including the big upset opener against Harvard that ignited the revival of Holy Cross football.

MacPherson himself calls this "a natural. The teams are 50 miles down the road, they're a prestigious school, they have prestigious football and so do we."

In the late 50's and early 60's Holy Cross and UMass football were in two different worlds, the Crusaders playing a superior brand of ball. But now this has changed and MacPherson says, "we are now competitive with Holy Cross and we want to maintain it."

For these and many other reasons ranging from the competitive level all the way to the personal level this is the game that both squads have been aiming at all season.

Holy Cross is an offensively powerful and a fundamentally sound football team.

It features the finest running tandem in New England in Joe Wilson and Dan Jenkins. Wilson has been over 100 yards rushing in the last three games and with these two in the backfield the big concern for UMass will be to keep either one, especially Wilson from breaking a big gainer which has been the case throughout the season.

DEFENSE...DEFENSE-Redmen Jack O'Neil (45), Ray Bouchard (40), Bill DeFlavio (76) and Dennis Collins (43) will need the same pursuit they show here against Holy Cross tomorrow at Alumni Stadium (MDC photo by Barbara Brecher)

"They pound you constantly with Wilson and Jenkins," emphasized MacPherson," and we have to keep them from breaking a big one. Wilson has done it each game and has four runs of over 50 yards this season."

To compliment this running attack is the bread and butter combination of Connolly to Orlin, both just recently reinstated into the lineup.

You'll see a very fundamental defense employed by the Cross. "They try to play one defense real well," said MacPherson, "which minimizes mistakes and utilizes talent."

Dan Harper is the man to watch on defense. His coach calls him the best middle linebacker in New England and so far this year he has proven his coach to be right in his judgment.

MacPherson feels his team needs a balanced attack to go against the Cross's balanced defense...they have to establish a good running attack which makes the importance of another big day out of Paul Metallo paramount.

As for the team itself, now coming off its two finest performances of the season back to back against UConn and Vermont Mac said, "they feel they're on the right track and this is a good test to see if they are.

"Last week was the first time the home people saw only a half of football and tomorrow we want to give them the opportunity to see a good two half football team."

Booters Share Of YanCon Crown At Stake At UNH

By STEVE FERBER

Chances are New Hampshire will score two goals against the Redmen tomorrow afternoon. The question is, how many will UMass score, as the booters enter their final contest of the '71 season Durham, New Hampshire, where they hope to gain a share of the Yankee Conference Crown.

UNH will also be playing their season finale, as their ten games preceding the Redmen-Wildcat clash find them holding a 5-3 record, with results of two other games unknown. Of those eight games the Wildcats have scored two goals in seven of them. Against Bowdoin, their very first game, they lost 2-1, but since then have scored exactly two goals in every single game, winning twice by 2-1, losing twice by 3-2, with a 2-0 win thrown in besides.

In their last five games the Redmen have yielded exactly two goals. Through their first five the Redmen were not scored upon, chalking up five zeros, and following those five zeros have been five two's, the latest having been recorded against Springfield.

So chances are that UNH will score two, but the Redmen scoring is the big question. A win is needed for a share of the YanCon title, as Vermont has ended their conference play with a 4-1-0 mark. Both UMass and URI are 3-1-0 in the conference, and with wins over UNH and UConn, respectively, the conference will have tri-champions.

Heading the Wildcat attack will be Joe Murdock who plays center halfback and leads his team in scoring with seven goals. On the front lines, producing more of that two-goal a game offense, are Ron Emery and Chuck Miller, both of whom scored against UConn, in a game scouted by soccer coach Berryman.

In their last conference game, UNH lost their chance for a possible share of the crown when they dropped a 3-2 decision to URI. In that game Murdock knocked in both goals, both coming in the first quarter, but on the back of forward Joe Hooks, URI came back, and now have put themselves in a tie-for-the-title position.

For the first week in over a month UMass placed no one on the YanCon weekly team, as Chris Chappell for Vermont received the defensive award for his play against the Redmen last Saturday.

Again, for the umpteeith week in a row, Lindo Alves got votes for lineman of the week, and it's a wonder that Alves, with nine goals and six assists (respectively fourth and second in those conference stats) has yet to receive the weekly lineman award. Bob Grom, a defenisve selection of some weeks back, also received votes in this week's polling.

Rating wise the Redmen tumbled down, all the way into 9th position. The 2-2 tie with WPI, combined with the 2-1 loss to Vermont shot Vermont ahead of the Redmen into 8th place in New England, while Springfield, yesterday's foe, held down 7th place.

Atop New England is Harvard, who fell from the unbeaten ranks but is still far and away New England's best. Tufts, the soccer surprise of the year, moved into second place, as of three weeks ago Tufts wasn't even rated in the top 10. But they moved up to 9th, then beat UMass to move into 4th, and then dropped Wesleyan, then the number two team in New England, 5-3. Tufts though also saw its record marred as Amherst beat them 1-0 in overtime. Despite the loss Tufts held down the second slot.

Brown third, Wesleyan in fourth, and the only undefeated team in fifth--that being Williams, round out the top half of the rankings.

A four game skein, in which the Redmen had tied two and lost two, must be stopped tomorrow if a share of the crown is to be gained. It surely would be a nice way to end the season, and would make looking back on the '71 campaign a much more pleasant experience of reminiscing.

Metawampe's Picks

Laugh all you mortals, laugh as hard as you may, but I Metawampe have the last say...and as of last week the perfect slate speaks for itself. So what I only picked four, instead of ten or more. Doesn't a mortal have to crawl before he walks? The big guy who stands six feet eight and has no brains knew my worth as a prognosticator ...he sent me a pair of dice and a two-headed coin. But with all the follies and fanfare that surround these weekly transactions of my great brain the underlying thought of picking in the true American way has always stood as first and foremost in the eyes of my people...You know American like the cigar store Indian. Matter of fact while I light one up, I shall ponder into the weekend to come...

Frosh At UConn

The UMass freshman football team, coming off a big 44-7 win over Rhode Island and sporting a record of two wins and one defeat, travel to Storrs tonight to take on the undefeated UConn frosh team.

The Redmen are in good physical shape for this one, and they had better be, for UConn boasts a big team that has shown a remarkable penchant for coming from behind. The only major change for UMass shows Paul Lovejoy filling in for Ed Wagner, who after being injured most of the season reinjured himself in the URI game. On the positive side of the ledger Jim Shea makes his return to the squad after a month layoff caused by a bout with appendicitis.

UConn has a big team, physically speaking, but there is no way they can be bigger than Coach Bill Maxwell's charges. Maxwell thinks that the two teams are "very evenly matched" and points out that the toe of Dan Busa, UConn's stellar place-kicker, has been the deciding factor in almost all of the Huskies' wins and almost single-footedly beat Rhode Island. Busa has been able to hit on several field goals of 40 yards or more, but the Redmen kicking duo of John Ames and Dennis Lombardo have both shown they are able to put points on the board from long-range.

On paper this game shapes up as a real barn-burner. The Redmen would insure themselves of a winning season by winning and would like to show that their performance against Boston College was a fluke. UConn, on the other hand, would hate to have their undefeated string snapped at home in front of what should be a large crowd. Only time will tell what's in Storrs for the Redmen.

Smilin' George hits the campaign trail, UMass style.

Getting Off On George

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

George McGovern, candidate for the Presidency of the United States, came to UMass last weekend.

Though I had known he was due, the when of his coming didn't penetrate until I walked into the Collegian offices Sunday night and saw two of our editors in coat and tie.

"Working in style?" someone commented, "No," the answer was, "We're going to McGovern's news conference at seven."

Ah, I thought, what the hell, I might as well go along too. See what a senator looked like close up and after all, I had never been to a real news conference.

It was supposed to be open to invited guests only, security being what it is, so I ran around for a while and procured an official Collegian I.D. (It even has a place for your picture and a 'right thumb print!) After filling it out and having it signed by the editor I went on downstairs to meet some Power, in the Suffolk room of the Union.

The Suffolk room must have been especially built for this sort of thing. It opens right on to the Ballroom, the door being no more than a 30 second walk from the podium. It is a small room, filled for the occasion with 15 colonial style chairs facing one table and a chair in front of the door which opens into the Ballroom. The other Collegian people had arrived already. I opened the door and stood facing...well, shall we say part of the buerocracy that power both makes and gathers about itself. A Student stood there, long hair, in a coat and tie, asking quietly (the new buercracy, quiet and polite), "Do you have some identification?" I went for my wallet to pull out my brand new Collegian I.D. when a voice from inside exclaimed, "What! More Collegian people!" on which note I entered on. That was Lee Sandwen, President of the Student Senate (A fact you should all know by now.)

The room was no larger than those in most dorms. Filled with chairs though, and empty of everything else, it gave the impression of size. It was early yet 15 minutes before the Senator was due to arrive, so we all took a walk into the Ballroom.

Two students were putting up a banner reading 'Welcome Senator

Skin Flick

The other day we were looking through our favorite trade journal Footlights when we came across an interesting little tidbit that was so intriguing that we decided to follow it up. It read: "guys" Gals! Are you young and attractive? Can you perform in front of a camer? If you can answer both of these questions 'yes' then we're looking for you. We need people for a new show with no-holds-barred. Call Skin Productions."

We called Skin Productions and asked about the ad. Yes, it was legitimate, yes, they really were looking for people, and yes, they really were called Skin Productions. The lady gave us an address and told us to be there at 8.

We were there at 8, outside of an old warehouse at the West Side end of 42nd St. We hadn't been standing around long when a door opened and a suave Arab stuck his head out and invited us in. His name was Kareem and he was the assistant director. He led us through the warehouse and up a few flights of stairs to the studio. It was wide and plush. It looked to us like Skin Productions had a little bit of money behind it. Over in one corner was a dolly-mounted 35mm camera. There were spotlights and reflectors and cables all over the place. There was also an expensive looking video-tape unit sitting along the wall. Kareem noticed our inquisitive look and explained that they taped as well as filmed the action and brought the tapes downtown to a bar that was backed by Skin Productions. That way they didn't have to wait until the film was processed to show it at the bar. They had a new show every day and really packed them into the bar.

They had as fine a set-up as we had ever seen for making their particular brand of movie. Karem asked if we would care to sit in, as it were, on the day's filming. We replied that we couldn't think of anything too pressing to do back at the office so we stripped down and got ready to roll 'em. (Film talk, you understand.) The regular director was taking a night off so Kareem was taking over for him. He began to shout orders out and the place came alive. The spotlights began to warm up, the camera got into position in front of a large red curtain. Kareem directed us to go and stand in front of the curtain with our back to the camera. We did. The orchestra began the theme and the curtain slowly began to rise up, revealing an enormous water-bed on wheels. On it reclined a nude girl. As the music swelled to a crescendo the water-bed slowly rolled out towards us. Kareem stopped the action and came over and gave us our instructions. We were to climb up onto the bed with the girl and perform. When we were through, we would go back and stand still, the bed would slowly roll back, and the music would subside. This was one scene from the company's new movie, One Thousand Beds. We would be scene number 786. Kareem went back to his chair, gave the order and the action began again.

We hardly think that anyone would be interested in what followed. But we can assure you that it was an interesting film debut. It's now playing in the city if anyone cares to take it in.

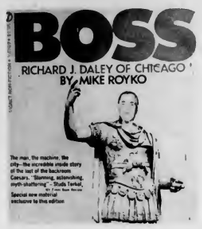
The Complete Bootleg Discography



Last week we began to take a look at the bastard brother of the record industry, bootlegs. Steve Feld did a little bit of backtracking and brought us up to date on the technology and morality of bootlegging. This week he continues his series on the world of the bootlegged and presents what we believe to be the most comprehensive look on the records themselves ever published anywhere. From the Band to the Youngbloods, the Beatles to Paul Simon, it's all there.

The Machiavellian Ideal

Richard J. Daley, Mayor of the City of Chicago, is the subject of a new book by Mike Royko. And Royko's book is the subject of an in-depth review by Frank Baglione. Daley has been called a pig by everyone to the left of Bill Buckley. Royko lets Daley's record stand for itself and Daley comes out oinking. Frank analyzes why Daley is fit to be mayor of a city know for its corruption, patronage armies, and slaughterhouses.

Growing Your Own

OK, folks! Hit Zayre's for a muffin tin, get some good-looking dirt, pick up your trowel, and let's go! The indoor season is fast approaching and what better way to spend it than by watching some familiar-looking green plants grow. Yes indeed. And what better way to celebrate spring or whatever sixteen weeks from now than by smoking your own dope? So save up your seeds. We'll give you all the instructions (along with a little help from the Cultivator's Handbook of Marijuana by William Drake, which we review in this issue). Part one starts today, so don't be late, let's germinate, germinate, germinate!

And A Cornucopia of Delights Besides

For an authoritative analysis of a tape deck and how it works see page eight where Frank Johnson continues his Rasic Audio series with a dissection of that essential component. In addition to our complete and annotated bootleg album series, POOR RICHARD'S album reviewers take on The Congress Of Wonder's debut album, the Modern Jazz Quartet, and Jouka, a African festival taped by Brain Jones (before his death obviously). All these on page 10. Alice In Wonderland is coming and the Manhattan Project will bring her this Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday night at Grinell Arena (a converted silo in Stockbridge). The group has been hailed by every leading critic as being one of the best improvisational theater groups in the country and this production is a wonderfully unique experience. For more details and some sampling of critical comments from other journals, see page 11A. Poor Richard's sent a reporter down to New York and his review of the new film Fiddler On The Roof appears on page 8A. It would appear from the review that this new extravaganza was hardly worth the trip. And, on the back is the most complete guide to the Arts in the Amherst area under the Weekend banner. This is number five and it looks like the best one yet.

McGovern! (was this a campaign or a football rally, or perhaps a combination of both; the homecoming of the Woodstock generation). There were about 10 students in the Ballroom already, making ready for the Arrival. WMUA was setting up its gear for a live broadcast, and various student dignitarys were running around all duded up, doing whatever they felt needed to be done, even if it didn't have to be.

Dan Quinlan, came over to talk. He is an interesting person. Last year he was sweeping floors in the Hatch, along with yours truly, and this year he is night manager of the Student Union and Campus Center. He gave the impression he thought the whole thing was vaguely ridiculous, and soon left to take care of a request for a ladder to hang the McGovern banner.

Slowly, the conference room began to fill. The Globe correspondent, Peter Pascarelli arrived, came to tape the Interview, along with the man from Slowly, the conference room began to fill. The Globe correspondent Peter Pascarelli arrived, WMUA came to tape the Interview, along with the man from WFCR.

Two reporters from Amherst Collegsshowed up, someone from Newsweek, and various other media people, and their girl friends. They filled the room till there were 20 odd people in there, filling the chairs and over flowing onto the floor and the radiator, all waiting for the Senator, who was by now five minutes late.

A Candidate for the presidency coming to UMass. The last time anything close to this happened was when Humphrey came in '69 and was hooted off the stage by students and faculty. Everyone was wondering what would happen this time. There had been rumors that the socialist workers were planning some sort of demonstration, but it was still rumor. The reporters talked about the possibilities half jolkingly. On one hand they probably preferred to see nothing happen, yet on the other hand, if something did it would mean a story and a byline and...all of a sudden two law officers walked in.

There was a knock on the door and we all turned around, expecting McGovern, and instead getting two tall, big men: One white, one black, in conservative suits and close cropped hair. They said something to the student at the door, one turned his lapel back give a glimpse of a badge. They wore shiny black shoes, and no one could say for sure if they were local police or the secret service. Whatever they were, or wherever they came from, they looked professional, not like your Amherst town cop.

They talked to the students running the show, asking where and how McGovern would enter, how long he planned to talk, how many people the hall could hold. They turned and stopped outside the door, positions they would hold most of the night.

The reporters settled down to quiet waiting. Brief jokes were cracked and various pieces of literature pertaining to the evening were passed around. The professional people there were calm and, it seemed, a bit bored. The lady from Newsweek must have been pretty tired of chasing McGovern from campus to city to town following his campaign. She would have to wait longer for the real luxuries of a Presidential campaign.

Finally, there was a slight noise at the door, we all turned, and in walked George McGovern.

His aides were remarkably young, perhaps not even out of their twenties. (Does he have two sets of aides, one for the campuses and one for Middle America?) They were self-confident and assured. They knew they had power, but had the look not of one who posesses power, but of one who is given it.

McGovern walked to the front of the room, smiling slightly. He was dressed in a blue striped suit with wide lapels and a two-colored shirt. His shoes were executive-freak black with side buckles...and shiny.

He sat down, smiled at us and the questions started.

Smilin' George

Peter Pascarelli asked about a YSA pamphlet accusing McGovern of not being consistent in his opposition against the war.

The answer came quick and smooth. It was a question he had answered before. "I have voted for reductions in military spending every year I have been in the Senate...There is no way to separate Vietnam spending from the entire Defense spending for the past...." He was asked about the Alaskan atomic test, his chances of actually being nominated, student voters, etc. He answered all the questions smoothly, with the air of a man who knows what is wanted, and has given it many times before.

He looked tired, tall and gaunt. His face wrinkled, with exactly the proper length of hair to give one the impression that he was a man of his own. He looked like he always had had sideburns and hair over his collar. He was cool.

The press conference was interesting, not from the point of what was being said, but who was saying it. A United States Senator. Here was power. Here was a man who could talk rationally and calmly about influencing the direction of a country and possibly a world.

McGovern could play the lead in a TV situation comedy. The strong wise silent father figure, to give us guidance and the assurance that we would be taken care of in all eventualities.

Perhaps it is a symptom of that television culture, that one no longer can believe in such a creation. One might like to. It would be very easy to forget your troubles, the worries of a country and hand them off to someone so willing to take the burden. But somehow, somehow, you just no longer have the faith.

The conference ended and we filed out into the Ballroom, packed wall to wall with people. It was sort of a surprise. When I heard that McGovern was coming I had wondered whether the Ballroom would be filled. My question was answered.

I left after the first five minutes of his speech, feeling he wouldn't say anything I hadn't already heard or couldn't guess.

I walked out in the Lobby. People were crowded six and seven deep at the entrance to the Ballroom, trying to catch a glimpse. The speech was blaring out over the loud speakers in the lobby, partially filled with people sitting and listening to McGovern. An old man and his wife burst out into applause over a statement about Nixon.

McGovern's speech went off well. Everyone came away more or less having heard and seen what they expected, satiated to one degree or another. The '72 Sweepstakes come to UMass.

Johnny Shines And His Slide Guitar

By MIKE McCORMICK

"Here's Johnny Shines". With this simple introduction one of the few slide guitarists still playing in the country blues style appeared before a fine crowd of blues enthusiasts on Oct. 31 at the Harvard Freshman Union. Johnny's physical appearance was enough to commend attention. A rather heavy, well-dressed man, Johnny is the picture of dignity. His soft, polite voice is in marked contrast to his commanding appearance.

Although "Shoe Shine Johnny" (as he was once called) displayed some showmanship (mostly in the form of stories comments, and jokes about getting the blues) his live performance consisted of mainly one thing--fine music. After an introduction in which he described his music Johnny performed "Sweet Home Chicago" on his amplified acoustic Gibson. Johnny is known primarily for his slide guitar work, but on this and subsequent numbers he proved to be an exceptional finger-style guitarist. On the one slide number of the set, Johnny literally made his strings sing. Throughout the set, Shines employed the clean, delicate, and fluent technique which has earned him the reputation of being one of the best country blues performers ever.

As great a guitarist as Johnny is, his vocals are every bit as exciting and impressive as his playing. Johnny has a rich, potent, voice which sometimes slips into an unmistakable falsetto. Very few bluesmen's vocal intensity exceeds that of Johnny Shines. Anyone who witnesses one of Johnny's performances can't help but be in awe of the power and range of his singing.

Johnny's first set, though excellent, was exceeded by his second. He opened it by doing an instrumental which displayed the various "boogie" guitar styles of the South. On the third number of the set Johnny (much to the delight of his fans) picked up his National Steel Guitar. After playing "Red River" fingerstyle, Johnny thrilled the audience with his slide work on "Rollin' and Tumblin." John was in top form the rest of the way as he whipped through "Evil Hearted Woman", "Crossroads", and "Ramblin'". Johnny's final number, a short instrumental, came all too soon.

Seeing Johnny Shines in concert proved to be an extremely gratifying experience. If you'd like to hear him on record his Testament albums are your best bet. However, only on his Standing at the Crossroads album does he perform entirely in the traditional country blues style. Johnny performs Chicago clubs with a band that includes Big Walter Horton (one of the best harp players living today) on two Testament albums: Masters of Modern Blues Volumes 1 and Johnny Shines with Big Walter Horton. Chicago Blues: The Beginning, an album consisting of 12 of the earliest examples of Chicago blues, has 4 cuts done by Johnny. Johnny is accompanied by Big Walter on two dynamic cuts on the Muskudine album entitled On the Road Again. His first two recordings "So Glad That I Found You" and "Joliet Blues" are available on the highly regarded Chess anthology entitled Drop Down Mama. His "Ramblin'" is found on an excellent Blues Classic anthology. His poorest recordings are on Vanguard in the series entitled Chicago/The Blues/Today. Only a few of these cuts rise above mediocrity. Johnny currently has a single on the market "Skull and Crossbone Blues", which is well worth picking up.

News: The Boston Blues Society's next attraction will tentatively be Hound Dog Taylor. Taylor, who is currently working out of Chicago, is a fantastic slide guitarist who must be seen live to be believed and appreciated. A date for Hound Dog's appearance has not been arrived at.

Dick Waterman, noted blues manager, recently announced that his lawyer is very close to making an agreement which would secure bluesman Arthur Cruddup due royalties for his songwriting efforts. Cruddup's songs have been recorded by such artists as Canned Heat, Creedance Clearwater, Al Kooper and Mike Bloomfield, Elvis Presley, and most recently Rod Stewart. ("That's Alright Mama")

Growing Your Own

Marijuana is probably not the prima dona of the plant world that most people think it is. The ignorant and uneducated who insist that grass grows best in a bathroom with a hot shower running onctinuously (because it makes it hot and humid, like a jungle) display a total disregard for the plant's feelings about its climate. Likewise for those who water their plants to death, or choke them with nitrogen. What we're going to try and do is present a basic step-by-step procedure for getting some plants started, as well as some general information about marijuana. After all, so many people around here have such an intimate relationship with the end product of Cannabis, why not get a little bit more familiar with the plant itself. Together we can destroy the economy.

This history of Cannabis goes back some 5,000 years. The Chinese grew hemp as far back as 2800 B.C. In this country the plant was widely grown during colonial times for use in rope-making. Legend has it that George Washington was familiar with the effects of smoking hemp, and while this may be debatable, books of the time did suggest that adding a pinch of hemp to a pipeful of tobacco enhanced the taste.

Tales from the Mid-East about Cannabis and its products are a dime a dozen. India, Egypt, Morocco, Lebanon and the like have been trying to stamp out drug use for years, apparently with little success. But the dope over in the Mid-East is something way beyond our experience. Kif, bhang (actually a drink), ganja, charas, hashish, most of these are so strong they'd wipe out most UMass users on a couple of hits. Even the hashish sold around here is of doubtful quality. But there's been some reasonably good smoke going around this fall, most of it probably domestic grown in the hills of Vermont or someplace. This just goes to prove one thing, it is very easy to grow your own dope. All you need is patience and a little bit of luck. You need practically no skill at all, for given a fighting chance, marijuana will grow anywhere. Since the outdoor growing season is over, we'll assume that most of you who are going to pick up the trowel in the quest for financial freedom from the friendly pusher will be growing your dope indoors.

Step No. I

Get yourself some seeds, because that's what the plants grow from. A good seed will not be wrinkled up and will be bright gray, gray-green, or gray-brown in color. It will be heavy enough to sink in a pan of water and if you rub it between you palms it will appear to be very glossy. Take several seeds at random and break them open. If they are black inside, they are no good. If they are oily and musty, pale and dusty, they are also no good. Seeds can be an important clue as to the quality of a lid. The optimum time for harvesting the female plant is when she flowers. Most of the seeds will be immature in such a plant, though potency-wise she will be at her peak. So if your lids have lots of immature white seeds, rejoice, for it's as potent as it could be. However, if your lids have lots of mature seeds, chances are that the plant had blossomed and had possibly been pollenated. The potency of a pollenated plant is way below that of an un-pollenated plant. If there are few seeds in the lid then you're probably buying leaves from a male marijuana plant, and getting screwed in the bargain.

Now that you've made sure that your seeds are at least healthy, the next thing to do is to prepare them for germination. Soak the seeds overnight in a bath of distilled water. If you can't find distilled water then truck on down to Louis' or someplace and buy a bottle of Poland Springs spring water or Vichy water or something like it. Avoid using tap water if you can because the chemicals may harm the embryo. The strictly organic route seems to be the best one to follow when getting the seeds started. You can never be sure how old they are or where they come from and adding growth stimulants before the plants have had a chance to develop might be fatal.

The third step in this section is to plant the seeds, but first we must cover the dirt into which they will be placed.

Step No. II

Contrary to the rumors you've all heard, soil quality has little to do with the potency of the plants which grow in it. Rather the potency is effected mostly by heredity. But it sure doesn't hurt to keep your plants healthy and good soil will help do just that. Indoor growers have two choices. They can find quantities of good loam and take it to wherever their indoor nursery is, or they can go to a hardware store and buy a couple of bags of dirt. If you don't move soon the ground will be frozen and you'll have to lay out a couple of bills for a bag of dirt. Find any construction site and root around. Topsoil, good rich loam with a low clay content will be suitable. If the dirt balls up when you squeeze a handful, there is probably too much clay. The roots of the Cannabis plant will not be able to poke their way through this type of soil. Cannabis can't stand to have its roots constantly covered with water, so check the soil for drainage. Poke a hole a few inches deep into soil which been freshly watered. If there's water standing in the hole, the soil won't do.

You'll need a pot at least 12" deep for growing indoors. If you use chemical potash and nitrogen fertilizers it's very important that water drain all the way to the bottom of the pot because a buildup of salts around the roots will kill the plant. Keep at least 15" between pots if you're growing more than one. The closer together you grown Cannabis, the better it is for the fiber. But we're concerned with the leaves, not the fiber so space them out. Adequate spacing will insure that the plants will have a chance to branch out. If you can find a few earthworms, add them to the soil. They will keep the soil from getting too compacted, which will happen when you water the plants, and will react by dying if anything goes drastically wrong inside the flower pot.

We're not going to get into fertilizers because it is an extremely complex subject. Cannabis needs a very balanced environment to grow well and will react in subtle but significant ways if the balance is thrown off. For example, nitrogen deficiency will turn the lower leaves yellow-eventually they will fall off. Let it suffice to say that Cannabis needs nitrogen, phosphorus, calcium, magnesium, iron, potassium, sulphur, boron, chlorine, zinc, and molybdenum, among others. Our suggestion is that you go out and buy a book to work from. We'll also give a list of helpful books at the end of the series.

In case you can't swing the price of a book, a few shovels full of dirt from near (but not too near) the horse barns on Commonwealth Avenue near the intramural fields will do quite nicely.

Step No. III

Now that you've got some dirt, some seeds, and, did we forget?, a bread tin or even paper cups, put the dirt into the pans or whatever and get ready to germinate. Keep the soil almost dry on top and very slightly moist underneath.

Put the seeds into the dirt about 1/2" to 3/4" deep. They have to go in pointed end up because the tap root comes out of that end and curves downward. When the embryo gains strength, in about five days, the stem straightens out and the next thing you know there are little green stems with seeds on the ends poking up through the soil. The seed falls off soon and there it stands–a seedling with identifiable serrated leaves, although they are small and dwarfed by the fat oval embryo leaves which function as food storage and photosynthetic organs. The embryo leaves fall off after a few weeks, leaving a skinny stalk with two familiar serrated leaves.

We're going to stop here this week. Next week we'll cover lighting, transplanting, and what to expect from your little green and yellow buddies.

More Books To Read

We've been working from a book called The Cultivator's Handbook of Marijuana by Bill Drake. It's a Straight Arrow book from the people who brought you Rolling Stone and costs two-fifty. Drake has also written a companion book called The Connoisseur's Handbook of Marijuana which costs ten bucks in hardback.

The Cultivator's Handbook is an essential if you're planning to grow a lot of grass. It has many charts, graphs, and the like and has an extensive bibliography. It's easy to follow and goes step by step in great detail. We're presenting just a basic outline of Drake's suggestions for growing your own.

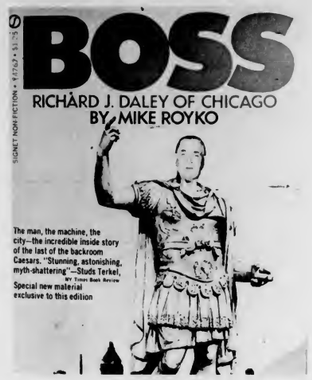
The Machiavellian Ideal (circa 1971)

By FRANK M. BAGLIONE

Boss: Richard J. Daley of Chicago by Mike Royko (Signet Books)

If Mike Royko set out to write an excellent book on the city theme, if he hoped to perform a devastating dissection of a municipal fief, then he succeeded brilliantly. But if he wished his work to also discredit the reputation of the mayor of that city, to relentlessly bite and tear at the man who makes it all run, then he has succeeded only in a very limited circle. For the portrait he has painted of Richard J. Daley, Mayor of Chicago, is one of the silent majority of America, residing somewhere out there in the real world, will take to their hearts and cherish. Only if you come to Royko's book with a well developed bias against Daley will you see the Mayor as anything but a great and powerful man.

First of all, Daley is personally honest. He may look the other way when someone is taking a payoff or receiving favors, but he has never taken a nickel himself. Royko admits this almost grudgingly. And the mayor is a man of strict Catholic morality. "If one of his aides or handpicked officeholders is shacking up with a woman, he will know it. And if that man is married and a Catholic, his political career will wither and die." Early in his career when Daley was a legislator in Springfield he shied away from the many pleasures offered. The women, a virtual harem of state employees, were known as the "monkey girls" because they held onto their jobs with their tails. But Daley contented himself with long walks, worked hard and called his wife, whom he calls Sis, every night.



Of course Royko is not interested in Daley's personal affairs. It would be helpful if his villain were a lecherous hypocrite, but Royko believes that he has enough on Daley in the realm of politics to get his man. The one man rule of Chicago, the huge patronage army loyal to him, the efficient party machine he controls, is sufficient for Royko's indictment of Daley.

In 1931, when Daley was still working his way up in the party machinery, Anton (Tony) Cermak put together a coalition of the city's Italian, Jewish, Polish and German minorities and successfully challenged the traditional South Side Irish domination of the Democratic party. "Most South Side Irish leaders thought of Cermak as the worst thing since the potato famine. They didn't realize that he was doing them a favor while cuffing them about...By creating the ethnically balanced ticket, something new, he put together the most powerful political machine in Chicago history. It is the direct ancestor of the organization Daley inherited."

Chicago is made up of neighborhood towns, and these make up the larger ethnic states. They get along just about as pleasantly as do the nations of Europe–as long as each gets its share from the party machine. Chicago is a neighborhood Common Market.

The city is divided into fifty wards, each with its ward boss. The precincts within the wards are controlled by "captains." Each ward has its share of civil service jobs and city appointments. In addition, there are services and favors they provide. These may be no more than making sure the ordinary municipal functions the citizen is paying for are actually performed. In the poorer parts of the city the ward boss has the added power of threat. "Dont' vote, and you might lose your public housing apartment. Don't vote, and you might be cut off welfare." The payoff is on election day. If the ward boss and precinct captain have delivered the votes, they are safe. If they didn't, they're through.

At the top of the party machinery is the chairman–Daley. He controls the treasury and he spends it lavishly. Even when running against a listless nobody, Daley may spend a million dollars. "The amount used for 'precinct money', which is handed out to the precinct captains and used in any way that helps bring out the Democratic vote, can exceed the entire Republican campaign outlay. This can mean paying out a few dollars, or a couple of chickens to voters in the poorer neighborhoods, or bottles of cheap wine in Skid Row areas."

The money comes from countless sources; dues from the patronage army, $25-a-head golf days, dinners and picnics. The ticket books are thrust at the patronage workers and they either sell them or "eat them", bearing the cost themselves. There are "ward books" with page after page of advertising sold to local businesses by precinct workers. Favorseekers, contractors, even Republican businessmen contribute money to the machine. Daley can do something for them, the Republicans can't.

But if the Machine operates so efficiently that Republicans can't get a foothold in the city, Independents can't even get on the ballot. To get on the ballot an independent needs the signatures of five percent of the vote cast in the previous contest. And not just anybody's signature–only legally defined independents. Even if this were possible, an Independent candidate would need an additional thirty thousand or so signatures to get by the Democratic-controlled Election Board which is ready to rule names invalid for anything short of failing to dot an "i". The board used to be run by a frank old rogue, Sidney Holzman, who summed up the boards' attitude toward the aspirations of Independents, Republicans and other foreigners: "We throw their petitions up to the ceiling, and those that stick are good."

When telling of the Machine's control of the city, Daley's tampering with civil service exams so as to control the jobs, and the spending to insure getting votes, Royko's tone is plainly condemning, yet restrained. But the people in Chicago, the working man, the neighborhood family see only one thing. It works. In most cases everyone is getting his share. Some pieces of the pie are smaller than others, but everyone gets something; as long as you remain loyal to the party, there is someone who is going to speak for you when you need help, some service or a favor. And to the working class, the people who don't have the time to engage in nice little debates about ethics, and houesty in politics, the little man who cannot sit back in his secure split level home and do mental gymnastics trying to conceive of some "best possible world," to that man, this is enough. The Machine works, and it works for him. That is democracy.

And that is why Daley has won his last four out of five terms as mayor with over 70% of the city's vote and pluralities of 500,000 votes. In 1959 and again in 1963, he carried 49 of the city's fifty wards with 71% of the vote; in 1967 he carried all fifty wards with 73% of the vote; and in 1971 he carried forty-eight wards with 71% of the vote.

Royko's book is a history of Chicago, the Democratic Machine and Richard J. Daley, all nicely interwoven. Aside from the detailed workings of the city machine, the highpoints of the book deal with Martin Luther King, Jr.'s crusade into the North of Chicago in 1966, and the Democratic Convention in 1968. These incidents illustrate the character of the city. For example, King's southern tactics, like the peaceful march and the soul-stirring speech, "could blow the minds of the Southern white rustics, but they were old stuff to Chicagoans. Even Daley's Bridgeport neighbors had become accustomed to them. They city's attitude was: let King march around the Loop (Downtown Chicago); we don't live in the Loop. Let him make his speeches and we'll switch T.V. channels."

But then, when negotiations broke down between King and the city, the blacks decided to bring their marches into the neighborhoods. "King had finally found the city's soft underbelly." White Chicago could ignore the downtown marches and the ghetto riots, but if the hated blacks with their liberal white preachers and nun allies showed up in the neighborhoods the whites would attack them. Daley was trapped. He could not arrest peaceful marchers led by King, so he would have to bust white heads to protect them. And elections were only ten weeks away.

With the white neighborhoods becoming more and more furious at Daley, he finally found a way out of the trap. Because of the trouble with rioting whites, he got an emergency injunction against the marches. Then he got King back to the bargaining table. Daley sat at the table and quietly listened to the demands of the civil rights people. Even when some of the militants became insulting Daley was calm and placating. "At one point, Tom Keene (a Daley aid) leaned over and stage-whispered to Daley: 'Fuck 'em, Dick, we don't have to stay here and listen to this." But Daley remained friendly and controlled. Ultimately an agreement was drafted and both sides signed it, saying what a significant program it was. It was an impressive document full of noble vows and promises. But it was also without legal standing and not worth the paper it was printed on. Only three months after it was signed, Alderman Keane said at a City Council meeting that, "There is no Summit Agreement." The crisis had passed and faded in people's memories, King was back in the South, the snow had fallen. So Daley had not rejected Keane's original advice to "fuck 'em." He had just done it slowly.

A year later, 1967, Chicago would suffer its black riot. It was then that Daley ordered the famous "shoot to kill or maim" directive to his police. The reaction of the white people to his edict shows just how effective King's work had been, or rather how ineffective. By a margin of 15 to 1 the people of Chicago were in favor of police shooting to kill.

So why should Daley's stance at the 1968 Democratic Convention have been any different than it was–tough. For one thing, it frightened off most of the hippie-types and straight liberal types. The city was described by the anti-Daley forces as an armed camp, while the mayor's partisans called it Daley country. The mayor was enjoying himself tremendously. All the candidates came to the caucus of Daley's Illinois delegation. They all made their pitch–McCarthy, McGovern, Humphrey, and finally Lester Maddox of Georgia. "Maddox was in the middle of a long rambling speech about the paving of roads when Daley leaned over, tugged his coat, and said, 'Say, Gov, can you wind it up? The wives are waiting and we have a party scheduled.' There would be no delegation vote at that time. Daley saw Humphrey as a loser and was waiting in hopes that Edward Kennedy could be convinced to pick up the fallen banner of his brother and try for the nomination. So all the candidates began courting Daley more intensely. The city, the convention, the candidates, they were all his.

Then came the decision that altered the course of the convention. The Chicago police decided to enforce the city ordinance against staying in Lincoln Park overnight. The police had the law on their side, but not logic. The protestors in Lincoln Park were isolated from the city, you couldn't even see them in the dark. If they had been left alone they would have been ignored by the whole world. The police charge changed the whole scene. The world came in to watch through television and the convention went berserk. The people who had earlier courted Daley now castigated him, and for once, in his own city, the mayor was being shouted down.

The Chicago battle hurt the Democrats and, according to Royko, was the reason Nixon carried Illinois in the election. But all it cost Daley was a small percentage of the black vote in city elections. For "in attacking the young, the liberal and the black, Daley was in the mainstream of America's prejudices...Daley came out of the convention even more popular than before because "Bust their heads" was the mood of the land and Daley had swung the biggest club...Regardless of what the Walker Report, the liberals, the critics of his methods might say, Daley knew what most people were saying: he was right." Chicago backed up its mayor.

April, 1971 was the final test. All the trouble and all the criticism was in. Daley was running for his fifth term as mayor against Richard Friedman, a liberal Democrat who tried to form a coalition of liberals, Independents, disgruntled blacks, and ran under the Republican label. The Machine rose to the challenge. Daley won the election with slightly over seventy percent of the vote and carried forty-eight of the city's fifty wards despite Friedman's having waged "the most spirited, imaginative campaign of any of Daley's five previous opponents." He also maintained control of the City Council. The day after the election someone cynically remarked, "This proves that if you put together a coalition of Independents, blacks, liberals and Republicans, there is no way Daley can keep you from getting twenty-nine percent of the vote."

At a press conference following the election Daley was asked if he had heard from any of the Democratic Presidential hopefuls. The reporters rattled off the names Edward Kennedy, George McGovern, Hubert Humphrey, Edmund Muskie.

"Have any of them telephoned you with congratulations?" Daley was asked.

Daley smiled. "All of them did."

The Complete Annotated Bootleg Discography

By Steve Feld

This is in no way a discography of every bootleg record ever made. Rather, it is an accurate sampling of some of the more easy to get, or some of the more interesting ones. It is, to my knowledge, the most complete listing of bootlegs ever compiled.

Included here are the records (by alphabetical order of the artist), the label (if any), the quality of the record, any outstanding songs, and some general comments. Use this to guide your purchases.

THE BAND

THE BAND LIVE AT THE HOLLYWOOD BOWL 7-10-70 (Rubber Dubber Records)--This is a 2-record set. Quality is fair, voices are a little fuzzy, drums are under-recorded, but it is an extremely listenable record. Contains material off their first 3 records, plus one new one called, "Don't Do It." Garth Hudson plays some good organ improvisation as an introduction to "Chest Fever". This is also sold as "Live in California". The Band also has another out, only available, I believe, on the West Coast. The quality of it is supposed to be shitty.

THE BEATLES

ALIVE AT LAST (Walrus Records)--This is also known as "Live Concert at Whiskey Flats". It consists of a Beatle concert, recorded on their second tour, right after they completed "A Hard Day's Night". This record is one of my favorite--bootleg or otherwise. There's 12 good Beatle sons, uninterrupted. It successfully captures the excitement of a Beatles' concert as much as a record can. The quality is fine, surprisingly. A good record for any occasion. Recommended for anyone who was alive in 1965.

BEATLEGGED LIVE (Crabapple Records)--This sounds like it was recorded off TV. There's only 10 songs ("She Loves You" twice). The quality is poor, but it is an easy record to get attached to. Probably from their first American tour.

LAST LIVE SHOW (Live Records)--This was taped directly off the TV, from an ABC show about 5 years ago called "The Beatles Live At Shea Stadium". The quality is shitty, most TV recordings are. The material is newer compared to the others, includes "Ticket to Ride" and "Help". Ed Sullivan introduces them in the beginning.

BATTLE (Side Two) (Battle Records)--This is right off the Ed Sullivan Show, the quality is poor. It only has 6 short songs on the side. Side One is the Rolling Stones. Includes "Yesterday" with strings.

KUM BACK--When the Beatles were recording their "Let It Be" album, they intended it to be simple and spontaneous. Complications arose along the way, resulting in, among other things, the demise of the Beatles. Some of the old tapes were obtained, and this is it, the originals. The songs are mostly the same as "Let It Be", although some are different takes. Included is the Beatles' version of McCartney's "Teddy Boy" and an old Jimmy McCracken song "The Walk". Interesting are the versions of "Don't Let Me Down" and "Let It Be". Quality is good. This album is also sold under a number of different titles.

RENAISSANCE MINSTRELS--(Renaissance Records)--This includes some more of the same songs as "Kum Back" and some forgotten Beatles' songs, such as "I'm Down" and "The Inner Light". These were on the B-sides of 45's and never released on albums. They should have been included on "Hey Jude" album, but Allen Klein screwed that up. There is also "Across the Universe", only this time without strings, and with a wah-wah and backup voices. Plus "Instant Karma" by the Plastic Ono Band. Quality is fine.

GET BACK TO TORONTO (I.P.F. Records)--Again, another "Kum Back". In addition, however, is a New Year's Peace Message by John & Yoko. This was distributed to certain radio stations in late December, 1969. There is also one of the rare Beatles' Fan Club Christmas Records. These are specially-made records, only for members of "The Official Beatles Fan Club". I have heard several, but never this one. Worth the price of the album, for Beatles' fans.

Leon Russell

Bob Dylan

INTRODUCING THE BEATLES--This one is tricky. Remember in the beginning, there were two Beatles' albums released. One was "Meet the Beatles" on Capital, and the other was "Introducing the Beatles" on Vee Jay. It was released in England under the title, "Please, Please Me". Well, anyway, after a couple of years, Capital bought up the rights for this album from Vee Jay and released it, in an altered form called "The Early Beatles". And "Introducing The Beatles" was never to be heard of again, except for those fortunate enough to have bought it. So, some enterprising individual took the liberty to bootleg it, cover and all. So, here it is. Copies of the original are said to go for a good price, in good condition. So hold on to yours.

THE BYRDS

THE BYRDS LIVE AT BUDDY'S IN ENGLAND (Fly Records)--Good record, this one. Includes some old songs plus some of the "Untitled" stuff. Quality is good. For those who were bored with the side-long "Eight Miles High". Also recorded was an early Byrds bootleg, while Crosby was still with the group. It's not around, though.

CAT STEVENS

CAT STEVENS LIVE (Catnip Records)--12 good songs with good sound. An official live album couldn't be much better. Includes a free poster--a first for bootlegs.

CAT STEVENS, CHAPTER FOUR--The sound here is sloppy and there is a lot of repetition with the other. Get the first.

CSN&Y LIVE AT THE LOS ANGELES FORUM 6-28-70 (Rubber Dubber Records)--This one is just about obviated by their official live albums. Everything on this album is either on "4-Way Street' or the two "Woodstock" albums, with the exception of two songs. "Tell Me Why" is done with multiple harmonies, and it sounds nice. And "Woodstock" sounds better than the one on "Deja Vu". The sound is just about average.

WOODEN NICKEL--One side of this is acoustic, the other electric. The former is of good quality, the latter sucks. Includes Stills "Bluebird Revisited" and Young's "Sea of Madness". Hardly worth the walk downtown.

OHIO--This is, again, more of the same. For devout fans and groupies only.

DONOVAL

LIVE AT THE REEDY RIVER JUNCTION (Van Records) Donovan in concert singing lots of songs. The sound is good, overlooking the hiss that dominates many bootlegs. The general rule is the more the instruments, the worse the sound. This is just Donovan and his guitar, so it is safe. Check out his anti-dope rap.

BOB DYLAND

GREAT WHITE WONDER--The one and only, father to the whole phenomenon. It consists of old Dylan tapes, right out of Columbia's vaults. Added are the Basement tapes, the Johnny Cash Show, and some talk. Quality ranges from good to bad. Part of the essential Bob Dylan.

MOTORCYCLE--This is just aforementioned basement tapes featuring Dylan and the Band. A few early ones are also added and they are not repetitious of GWW. It's a good record of fair quality.

JOHN BIRCH (GWW records)--Early Dylan, once again. It's worth getting for the title song alone--it's a monster. 12 songs in all, quality is fair. Once again, there is some repetition involved with others.

STEALIN' (Steel Records)--This has some new stuff and some different versions of already recorded stuff. Like the others, the quality is fair, probably because there have been so many reproductions.

ISLE OF WIGHT--This has 14 songs in all, from "It Ain't Me, Babe" all the way up to "Lay, Lady, Lay". A musical trip through history with Bob Dylan. He's got the Band backing him. It's a very listenable record. Get it.

LOOKING BACK (Zerocks Records)--Side 2 of this album is worth the money alone. It is Dylan live at the Royal Albert Hall in London. This is when he switched his style from acoustic to electric, and the audience screams their disapproval. At one point, someone yells out "Judas" and receives cheers from the rest. It's Dylan against the world. He sings bitterly ("Ballad of a Thin Man", and "Like A Rolling Stone"). It is an unbelievable record. Thanks to "Zerocks" whoever he is. Included is another side at London, and a record of acoustic stuff in Berkeley. A note on Dylan bootlegs: Being the performer that he is, he has a lot of material floating around, all of which would be virtually impossible to report on. I recommend issue #47 of "Rolling Stone" where there is as complete a discography of Bob Dylan as there ever is going to be.

ELTON JOHN

GULLIVER'S GONE (John Records)--Excellent quality mono. This includes material from his "Empty Sky" album, which is released only in England and some demo tapes, from early in his career. Like many bootlegs, this says "compatible for stereo"--which doesn't mean stereo. It means that it can be played safely on a stereo.

EMERSON, LAKE & PALMER

21ST CENTURY SCHIZOID ROCK--A very good quality album, featuring material all off their first album. Included is "Barbarian" and "Take a Pebble". It is from a concert given in England, probably at the time of their first album's release. Somehow two songs by the Free, an English group got tagged on at the end of Side One. With this one, you got to take the bad along with the good.

GRATEFUL DEAD

GRATEFUL DEAD (Mother Records, a product of Mammary Presentations)--The quality for this one is only fair. But it is the way you can get live versions of "Casey Jones" and "Uncle John's Band", so the choice is yours. Also included is a 13-minute cover of the Young Rascal's "Good Lovin'", featuring Pigpen on vocals.

AIN'T IT CRAZY (Apocalypse Records)--This one has excellent quality. There is little hiss, and the instruments are all quite easy to hear. There is some repetition with the other, though.

JIMI HENDRIX

JIMI HENDRIX AT THE LOS ANGELES FORUM 4-25-70 (Rubber Dubber Records)--A 2 record set of only fair quality. Hendrix can be heard, but the bass and drums are buried. One side is his Woodstock stuff (first album). Same songs also are on Woodstock II. A whole side is devoted to "Room Full of Mirrors", the most interesting piece of music on the record. Also some "oldie but moldies", as Hendrix puts it.

GOODBYE, JIMI (Goodbye Records)--This is sort of a potpourri of songs done in England. It consists of cuts from TV, radio and concerts. The two concert songs are best in quality, while the rest are awful. It's an impressive collection, though. Included is Hendrix's versions of "Hound Dog" and "Sunshine of Your Love".

INCIDENT AT RAINBOW BRIDGE, MAUI, HAWAII--This is a visual as well. It's pressed on yellow vinyl that's a welcome change. On the labels are weird mythological paintings of monsters. It is an outdoor concert, so things like wind and outside noises can easily screw up the recording. The quality shows signs of the conditions--bass and drums are hardly detectable. Most of it is jamming, there are a few songs.

JEFFERSON AIRPLANE

UP AGAINST THE WALL M...--This was recorded off an NET special called "Go Ride The Wind". It was shown here in two parts last winter. Most of the stuff is off the "Volunteers" album. There is some old stuff, plus "Mexico", which was only released on a 45. Also included is the last song Marty Balin ever wrote for the group, called "Emergency". It's all recorded from a California concert. Quality is fair, as it was recorded off a television.

JETHRO TULL

FLUTE CAKE--This is recorded in low quality stereo, but low quality is better than no quality. It's all live with some good songs. Included is extended version of "My God" plus some old songs. The audience sounds like they are having a good time.

MY GOD (Athapascan Records)--This is half live, half studio. The studio cuts were originally released in England, on 45's, never in America until now. Soon, however, will be the legitimate album including this same material, so this side will be obviated. The live side includes songs on the previous album, except for "Reasons for Waiting" which is on this one. It is of very good quality. In between cuts 2 and 3 on Side Two there are some sound effects spliced in unlike I have ever heard before.

JANIS JOPLIN

GET IT WHILE YOU CAN--This has 2 records, with 2 songs on each side. It's Janis at her drunken best. Except for some occasional microphone failure, this is a good album. In between songs she gives some cogent raps on Rock. And at the end of the record the audience almost riots, and manages to tear apart some seats. Janis offers to pay the tab, too. It's all here on record!

WICKED WOMAN--This is supposedly recorded in Boston, one of her first gigs with her new band. Quality is fair, get the other if you got a choice, it was recorded indoors, while this is an outdoor recording.

CAROLE KING

FIT FOR A KING (Sound Underground Records)--This was recorded in a small club, so the quality is excellent. The material is almost all from the "Tapestry" album, a few from her first. There are some clever liner notes on the back cover.

LED ZEPPELIN

LED ZEPPELIN LIVE ON BLUEBERRY HILL (Led Records)--Although this is a hard album to listen to, quality-wise, I still like it. It is two records, containing material from all three of their albums. The sides are long--at least 26 minutes per side. All in all, it is an extended look at heavy rock, as played by Led Zeppelin. It will do fine until Atlantic sees fit to release an official one. Robert Plant is the best female vocalist I've heard in a long time.

One-half of D,S,N, & Y

PROCOL HARUM

THE ELUSIVE PROCOL HARUM (Hamburg Records)--Recorded in a small hall, this is of very good quality. Includes stuff off almost all their albums.

THE ROLLING STONES

LIVER THAN YOU'LL EVER BE (Slick, Lurch, and other Records)--One of the first and most popular of the bootlegs. It is the Stones live in Oakland, the second stop of their last U.S. tour. The songs are almost identical to "Ya Ya", though "Gimme Shelter" is in this one. The quality of this one is only fair, in no way comparable to the official. If you are lucky to get the right copy, the first thing you'll hear on Side One is Mick Jagger saying "shit" over the faulty sound. Some have it, some don't. There are other Rolling Stones' live bootlegs, also. Whenever they tour, it's a bootlegger's holiday.

THE ROLLING STONES (Good Time Records)--Old, old Stones. These songs are from albums only available in Germany. They were probably taken off a radio station, the quality is pretty bad. Included are some greats, though, "Poison Ivy" here is called "Scratchin'", and their version of "I Wanna Be Your Man" is interesting and historical.

BATTLE (Side One)--Some more old Rolling Stones, very bluesy. Quality is good. The other side is the Beatles' live.

LEON RUSSELL

LEON RUSSELL, THE MASTER OF TIME AND SPACE (Zerocks Records)--This was from a TV broadcast which was shown in conjunction with a local FM radio station, so the quality is as good as a bootleg is gonna get. It's in stereo. Fourteen songs in all.

LIVE AT ANAHEIM, CALIFORNIA (Fargone Records)--This has a lot of repetition with the other and the quality sucks. But it has the spontaneity of a live concert, which the other is badly lacking. The choice is yours.

PAUL SIMON

PAUL SIMON SONGBOOK--This is composed of songs of his sung without Garfunkel. They were released in England, never here. Includes "I Am a Rock" and other old songs. Quality is pretty good.

JAMES TAYLOR

TAILOR MADE (Rubber Dubber Records) Three sides of this are acoustic, but the sound still leaves something to be desired, it is very under-recorded. Side Four is electric, and is barely tolerable. And then there is some recorded off a Johnny Cash Show which is also bad. The record has 23 songs--if that is any consolation. It was recorded live in California, late in February, 1971.

THE WHO

THE WHO-LIVE (Collector's Item Records)--This one is great, and really recent. Side One has all songs from "Who's Next", including "Won't Get Fooled Again". Townshend gives a potent rap before the song and introduces it amazingly. Side Two includes "Pinball Wizard". It was recorded recently, on their last Eastern tour, possibly Boston. The quality is a bit better than average mono. There are some great photos on the cover, too. A good buy.

INSTANT PARTY (Instant Party Records)--This is largely composed of old Who songs, released only in England. Included is "Substitute" and Under My Thumb". More recent stuff is "Waltz for a Pig" and "Dogs". These are from B-sides of 45's. It is of good quality and has 15 songs in all.

NEIL YOUNG

NEIL YOUNG AND CRAZY HORSE (Collector's Item Records)--As soon as this came out it was selling like crazy.

Films

Fiddler Plunges Through Roof

By BOB NESTI

Fiddler On The Roof screenplay by Joseph Stein; music by Jerry Bock; lyrics by Sheldon Harnick; adapted from their stage musical. Produced and Directed by Norman Jewison. Starring Topol, Norma Crane, Molly Picon, and Leonard Frye. Released through United Artists.

There is something extremely vulgar about large scale film musicals, of which Fiddler On The Roof is the most recent example. This extravaganza is yet another example of how film companies take something modest and tasteful on the stage and render it unbearable on the screen. These films usually emerge with the weight and feel of Beatles songs being performed by the Hollyridge Strings; that is to say there is some substance, but it is now so completely engulfed in layers of sugar frosting that it is hardly worth searching for. They become unintended caricatures of themselves and succeed in being only stylishly inept. It seems almost inhuman to put them down.

Yet they go out of their way asking for it. The entire manner of presentation of a super--musical pushes taste to unbelievable lengths. Films are never meant to mimic theater either in form or presentation; yet with the super--musicals of recent years movie going takes on all the attributes of theater going. They are presented in huge, cavernous theaters, admission prices are ridiculously high, their length runs well over three hours (complete with the obligatory intermission in which everyone stands about drinking bland orange drink and looking just a bit absurd), and the resulting film is hardly worth all the bother.

Fiddler has been made into a very embarrassing film by making it into a roadshow presentation. As a musical play Fiddler is immensely satisfying; the book is warmly human, the score beautifully enhances the stage action, and the production moves with an authoritative zeal, thanks mainly to the folk--derived choreography of Jerome Robbins. It is an amazingly sustained theatrical experience and one of the finest works of the American Musical Theater.

Yet the film's relationship to the play seems almost incidental. It is very much like meeting an old friend who has become paunchy and shallow with his newfound wealth. Fiddler is not the sort of entertainment that fits well on a super widescreen and it seems that certain of its inherent strongpoints have been sacrificed in putting it there. The filmmakers seem more interested in having a full orchestra and mezzanine of matron ladies laughing at the corny jokes and seeing a homogonized entertainment that masquerades as the legitimate thing. Where the play was made to fit into certain theatrical artistic standards which generally preclude success, the film has chosen to operate on a different set of standards--plainly commercial--that are oppressive to the play's merits.

Where the play has a human warmth, the film has a commercialized sentimentality, and its characters have become caricatures of the American--Jewish existance somewhere between Harry Golden and Philip Roth. The film is more geared to the sentiments of the American Middle Class, more a kosher Sound Of Music that comes across as healthy, wholesome "schtick" and is closer to 44th Street West of Broadway than to 1905 Czarist Russia and the stories of Sholom Alechem of which this is all based.

The story is adapted from the folk tales of that Russian author in which the life and times of Tevye the Milkman, his wife, five daughters, and the town-speople of Anatevks are chronicled. They are a poor yet fiercely strong, proud, and happy people who struggle with the religious bigotry of the Tsarist government and the changing social and political mores of the flexing revolutionary Russia on 1905. The handling of the larger themes helped to make the play such a rewarding experience. In the film, though, they are overblown to the point of becoming cliches. For instance at the point when Tevye becomes inscensed at his first born's demand for independence, an elderly matron sitting nearby turned to her companion and said "Eh, To Each His Own." The scene occured a little more than halfway through and even by then the repetitiveness of the material wore itself thin.

The major problem of the movie is the direction of Norman Jewison. His films have always been for me overrated exercises in splashy technique and in this film he goes at it with unusual fervor.

He has never been much for either finesse or understatement, both of which would seem essential to this musical's success in any form. His approach is to cover his Super Panavision screen with a barrage of splashy images and cliche widescreen techniques that are both banal and tedious. His handling of the material is oddly remiscent of Richard Lester's musical A Funny Thing Happened On The Way To The Forum, which, co-incidently enough starred the original stage Tevye, Zero Mostel. In both films the leading character's presence is always in the forefront of the screen image; in both films the audience is assaulted with a barrage of showy, quick editing during the cusical numbers that supposedly represents cinematic choreography. In both cases this doesn't work and it is hoped that this style of filming ends with this film.

Jewison also infuses his film with a sort of Jewish Chauvinism that's in quite bad taste. He assualts the viewer during the badly done opening number "Tradition" which quick images of the interior of synagogue that seemed like a bad television commercial. Then, later, when Tevye sings "If I Were A Rich Man" Jewison places the camera somewhere below his knees looking up making him appear like the bearded Charlton Heston as Moses, that is to say one step closer to God in appearance than most of us. The abject poverty of Tevye is also somewhat hard to take, especially when his wife Golde appears in the Sabbath sequence in a dress that looked out of Bergdorf-Goodman's.

He also handles the musical numbers with little style or finesse. He often reduces them to sung background music done with the imagination of the Norman Luboff Choir, as he goes on his merry way showing some fancy, unnecessary photography. Even during the opening credits the film is doomed to needless excess, this time aural. Here a fiddler sits perched on a roof playing some horrible improvisational music with the virtuosity of an Isaac Stern. It turns out it is Isaac Stern and I imagine his name was used to add a bit of real class to the package. Unfortunately it only leads time to wonder what this guy is doing on the roof and not playing in Moscow or St. Petersburg. The lowpoint of the musical numbers, though, is the "Matchmaker, Matchmaker" sequence. It is done by Tevye's three older daughters as they put their laundry out on the line and bears an uncanny resemblance to the singing laundry soap commercials of some years back.

The score is generally arranged in the slick, studio manner that's big on technique and lacking in substance. The familiar Bock--Harnick score is pleasant, but very unimpressive and the razzle--dazzle eight track stereo bombards the listener with useless bambast. The stereo effect is really quite funny in an unintended way as characters' voices sound as if they are coming from the parking lot outside the theater.

The musical never has the movement which distinguished the original stage production. Only once or twice do the dancers move and the screen comes alive with some dazzling choreography. Most of the time the dancing is inhibited by Jewison fancy camerawork which seems to strangely stagnate any movement. It is only during the "To Life" dance sequence that there is a real sense of style sustained through some brilliant dancing based upon the original Robbins staging. It is, in fact, those moments in the film which most resemble the play--in staging and filming--which are the most successful. In these moments, such as Tevye's Dream Sequence and the Wedding Sequence, the film approaches the professional level the play so consistantly achieves.

The performances are little more than adequate. Topol makes a wonderful Tevye, especially when he is able to cut through the "schtick" Jewison et all has burdened his part with. He is a fine musical actor with a rich, strong voice, and a grnuinely winning film personality. It's really too bad he is so over--extended in this film. Norma Crane plays Golde as if she were the Quint-essential Jewish Mother and is so reverent to that image that its quite laughable. Where Tevye has strength, Golde is cloying. She is, though, called upon to bitch quite a bit and she does this with shrewish glory.

The supporting roles do little to enhance the film. Molly Picon is Everyone's Aunt as Yente the Matchmaker. Her performance was probably the most annoying of all. Leonard Frye as Motel the Tailor did his best to dispell his image as being the unhappy Harold of Boys In The Band. Unfortunately here he just seemed mindless, Harold with his oft--quoted lobotomy.

Fiddler On The Roof is a long film, some three and one half hours in its present form. It could stand some cutting, but most of all it demands the impossible: a new director who was less concerned with his own technique and felt more for the inherent beauty of what he is filming. Fiddler is a glorious stage musical that has been bent and wrenched into a corny, bland, and shamelessly empty musical film.

Weekend

by perhaps American finest director. In wide-screen and four-track stereo.

The Unholy Three (Friday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College 8 and 10)

Tod Browning, the director of Dracula and Freaks, directed this strange and unusual silent horror film. The Unholy Three, a ventriloquist, a strongman, and a midget move from pickpockets to selling parrots and the fun begins. It is a highly effective silent film done to shock

What's The Matter With Helen? (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton)

The camp film of the year. A "What Ever Happened To..." horror flick that gets sidetracked into becoming a parody of life in early Thirties Hollywood. Shelly Winters and Debbie Reynolds play a pair of dancing school teachers who are harrassed by psychopathic killer. The film has its share of thrills as well as being high camp with a wonderful tap number featuring Debbie Reynolds hoofing to "Goodie, Goodie."

Tape Recorders-Part I

By FRANK JOHNSON

We are now going to move to perhaps the most dynamic area in the hi-fi world, for this is where hi-fi leaves the auditory womb of the home living room and emits its first cry in the form of portability. Magnetic tape is the medium of this portability, for unlike record players, tape players are not restricted to a level plane and a delicate tracking force. A tape player may be operated vertically, horizontally, and upside down. It may also be subjected to vibrations, jolts, and other movements which would render a record player useless, yet it still may operate quite satisfactorily.

First of all, I must beg forgiveness for keeping to a theoretical consideration in this week's column, for reasons of space. Though today we'll discuss different types of tape players and their intended application, we must reserve detailed discussions of their operation for a later issue.

Getting underway, we must distinguish three various types of tape players. A player that merely moves the tape at the required speed and does not amplify the signal on the tape in any way is known as a tape transport. If some preamplifiers are added to this transport (which raise the level of the taped signal), it is called a tape deck. Finally, if some power amplifiers and speakers come with it, and the unit functions as a self-contained music system, it is known as a tape recorder. This conception applies to recorders with facilities for imprinting information on magnetic tape, although the term "tape recorder" has applied sometimes to any instrument using magnetic tape, with resultant confusion.

Next, there are essentially two types of formats for tape players on the market today: the open-reel type (also known as "reel-to-reel"), which contains devices on the recorder that receive the tape, and the closed-reel or cartridge type, which keeps the tape and these receiving devices enclosed in a cartridge. The cartridge medium for tape players includes the cassette and the 4- and 8-track cartridges, and it is these types which frequently leave the home to be used in the car or on the beach, due to their simplicity and ease of operation.

In both the reel-to-reel and cartridge systems, the format of tape (metallic oxide impregnated on a spool of plastic backing) and the speed(s) (fractions of 30, measured in distance travelled/sec.) are essentially the same. The width of the tape may be different, however. Open-reel recorders and 8-track cartridges use a tape of 1/4" width.

Despite this difference, all tape recorders create sound with the same principles of electromagnetism and inductional current generation. We can all recall playing with magnets at some previous time, noting that iron particles could often assume different symmetrical forms when exposed to varying magnetic fields. This is what happens to the metallic oxide particles on magnetic tape. There are two active units affecting this change-- the tape itself, and the tape heads. The heads contain small coils whose wire windings lie very close to each other, but do not meet, leaving a small gap. The gap is where the magnetic forces meet, affecting the oxide on the tape. This operation takes place on a recorder in 3 different heads: erase, record, and playback. The first head meeting the tape as it revolves from reel to reel is the erase head. Its function is to apply a strong alternating current with no signal, so that the metallic oxide particles all lie in essentially the same direction or configuration. The tape is said to be erased, and it is now ready for recording and playback.

Sony model 580 with ESP continuous automatic tape reverse, three-speed servocontrol motor, scrape flutter mechanism, electro bi-lateral six head function with central capstan drive, relay and solenoid operation, and a host of other features. Definitely not for anyone who wants it installed in his car which he keeps in F Lot.

When the erased tape travels further and a signal is being recorded, this signal is fed into the record head. The signal is mixed with another alternating current, known as bias, so that distortion can be reduced. This distortion is a result of certain deficiencies in inductional generation, and proper bias is necessary to most good-quality tape recorders if they are to be functioning well. The amount of this bias is determined by what kind of tape is being used. We'll take this subject up in detail later on.

In the process of recording, the metallic oxide particles are rearranged by the record head in accordance with the variations in the signal, much in the same manner that record grooves are affected by the incoming signals. (In a tape recorder, however, the only mechanical coupling takes form in tape-to-head contact, to be distinguished from stylus pressure). After the tape is recorded, it is immediately ready for playback, which takes place in the playback head. This head is really the part of a recorder referred to properly as a transducer, for it is here that electric current is generated from the magnetic properties of the tape, in very similar ways that current is generated by a phono cartridge. The tape meets the playback head after it has been slightly magnetized by the record head. This magnetism passes over the playback head, which contains coils whose windings give off a current when exposed to magnetic forces. After passing over the playback head, the tape is returned to a storage or take-up reel, for future use.

It should be pointed out that in many tape recorders, the record head and the playback head are combined into one, thereby affording a sort of economy and simplicity. Theoretically, this results in some degradation of quality. In this case, no "monitoring" can take place: listening to the tape being played back just after it is recorded (possible on a machine with separate record and playback heads, and obviously impossible on a machine that combines these functions with one head). Monitoring can tell us a lot about the quality of the signal that we will hear played back at a future time. Also, because the two functions of record and playback are being combined, very often the signal will not be as clean when 2 heads act as one. These two deficiencies of monitoring and loss of quality manifest themselves particularly in cartridge-type recorders, which cannot accept separate record and playback heads because of limitations in design interchangeability.

After the tape is recorded and the supply reel or spool is used up, it may be played on its reverse side if only half the width of the tape has been recorded. We call this a "2-track" tape, and it will give us either 2 sides in mono or else one side in stereo. For economy in stereo, we can multiply the tracks so that there are two in each direction, the so-called "4-track" system. Because a cartridge-type recorder contains only a limited amount of tape, we want to further economize for extended playback, and we can do this by once again multiplying the tracks, creating eight of them. All this can be done by stacking the erase, record, and playback coils within the respective heads, so that they are aligned with respect to one another.

Multiplying the track does however cause a few desirable things to be sacrificed. Because the new tracks must be smaller and closer to one another, we have to lose some magnetic properties on the tape and therefore some quality as well. And, because the tracks lie fairly close to each other, the tracks going in the opposite direction will sometimes surreptitiously creep through to the other channel. This is known as crosstalk. It will invariably get worse as we multiply tracks, so this is why many recordists forego some economy and either use the entire width of the tape ("full track") for mono recording or one-half the tape width for each channel in stereo.

There still remains much to be discussed, so we'll continue with tape recorders next week.

Complete Annotated Bootleg Discography

and it still is. It has fifteen songs on two records and is in stereo, though poor quality stereo. It was recorded in early 1970. It has songs from all three of his solo albums and some from Buffalo Springfield and CSN&Y. It has two acoustic sides and two electric. All are of good quality. He sings off-key sometimes, and his raps are a stone bore, but it still is a fantastic album.

LIVE ON SUGAR MOUNTAIN--This is all acoustic and recorded much later than the other. Ten songs in all, eight of which are new. The quality isn't as good as the other. It will do until his new album comes out, which should be soon. Get this if you can't wait.

THE YOUNGBLOODS

TURNING ON THE SUNSHINE (Crazy Jon Records)--This is from a live broadcast over a California radio station, so the quality is very good. There is also no audience interference, which has its good points and its bad points. But do the Youngbloods really rate the status of having a bootleg?

Poor Richard's

Poor Richard's is finally coming into its own. This is week number five and the dear boy is alive and well, but he won't be for very long if he doesn't get a little help from his friends. We are looking for writers for longer magazine type pieces and short works of fiction. If you are interested in submitting an article or hacking out an idea come see either David Williams or Bob Nesti in the little cubicle in the rear of the MDC Newsroom. We spend most of our lives there so the chances of catching us are more than good. Drop by, we need you.

A Surreal Trip With Alice

There is no drug quite so powerful as the human imagination—and Lewis Carroll took quite a heady draught before he followed Alice down the rabbit hole. A group of off-Broadway players under the direction of Andre Gregory have now dramatized Alice in Wonderland, and the trip that results is an exciting, absorbing, vertiginous descent into a laughing hell.

The familiar and beloved Alice is here, looking like a slightly tattered Tenniel illustration, and the Mad Hatter, and the Queen of Hearts, and the Cheshire Cat—all the fond friends of generations of children. But in this Alice, the prattling antic chums from childhood cast shadows that are dark, deep and unsettling. The shadows invade the characters and dye them in the colors of Freud, and Jung, and Kafka, and Dali, and Antonin Artaud, who conceived the Theater of Cruelty. Innocence has been lost, assuredly, but a revelation has been gained as the audience is taken on a journey through the murky, quirky labyrinth of the human psyche. Alice is an exemplary instance of how a classic can be made "new," and one of the extremely rare instances of a book's being turned into a wholly satisfactory theatrical experience.

States of Being. The acting company, known as the Manhattan Project, uses techniques somewhat similar to those of the Open Theater (The Serpent, Terminal) though with a far more liberal use of language. The techniques involve sounds, mimicry, a constant awareness of the body in action (without nudity) and an accordion-like expansion or contraction of an episode or scene in order to isolate moving centers of psychological truth. It is selective rather than narrative drama. It does not chronicle an action; it creates states of being and feeling. In Alice, the playgoer encounters states of dread, of sexuality, of absurdity, of bewilderment, of wonder, of fear, of giddiness, of giggliness, of madness, of contraction, of elevation, of "growing pains," of terror, of playfulness, of ecstasy. Simply to turn this catalogue of seeming abstractions into something palpable and concrete and real is a measure of the extraordinary achievement of the play.

Words are at the childlike core of Alice in Wonderland, and it is heartening that they have been honored in this production. Words are a child's grandest toy. They are also his first mystery. Even before he understands them, he puts them together and takes them apart. He pops pieces of them into his mouth, and spits them out in odd shapes. It is a profound form of play, for it is the only tool a child is given with which to comprehend a world in which he coexists without really belonging—the world of adults.

All of this is conveyed in Alice, plus something more. Through puns and transpositions of literal and metaphorical imagery, Carroll transformed English into a kind of hallucinatory jabber-wocky. Language goes berserk; it refuses to associate with reality. There are moments in Alice when all words seem to have dropped, like leaves off the tree of meaning, and to be swirling around in gusts of gibberish. This provides one of the closest approximations of going insane that has ever been rendered on a public stage.

The Manhattan Project brings 'Alice in Wonderland' to the campus next week. Hopefully after they're through people will realize that Alice has a little bit more to her depth-wise than Grace Slick would have you believe. Right on, WMUA.

Alice Here Nov. 8-10

The Manhattan Project will present three performances of "Alice in Wonderland" at UMass Monday through Wednesday, Nov. 8 through 10.

Performances based on the Lewis Carroll classic will be directed by Andre Gregory and will begin at 8 each evening in Grinnell Arena near parking lot five. Informal dress is recommended for the audience.

During its three-day residency, The Manhattan Project will also give two informal workshops Nov. 9 and 10 at 3:30 p.m. in Grinnell Arena.

Members of the Project are graduates of the New York University's School of Arts. Their original theater work is funded by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

"Alice" was first performed by the company at the Loft Theatre Workshop, Harvard's Loeb Center, and the Berkshire Theatre Festival. Last fall, Mr. Gregory's "Alice" ran at the off-Broadway Extension Theatre, and in March went on tour.

The production is faithful to Lewis Carroll in plot and dialogue, but is intertwined with the director's and the actors' imaginations.

Tickets for the evening performances are available in the Fine Arts Council Ticket Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available one hour before the performances at Grinnell Arena. Ticket Office hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Gregory's 'Alice In Wonderland' Tunnels To Daylight

By MEL GUSSOW

The tale of Andre Gregory gets curiouser and curiouser.

For almost two years, with the Manhattan Project, a small company of graduates of the New York University's School of the Arts, he has been working quietly on an experimental stage version of "Alice in Wonderland."

Critics have not yet been invited to review it. Only occasionally does it peep into public view — at the Loft Theater workshop, Harvard's Loeb Center, the Berkshire Theater Festival—but it has gathered an enormous underground reputation.

This fall Lyn Austin is producing Mr. Gregory's "Alice" overground, off Broadway at the Extension Theater. Profits will go to the company. Public performances begin Oct. 1. It will play only four shows a week to an audience of 150 until March, when it will tour. This will give the company time to start a new project, possibly Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus."

A Singular 'Alice'

Although one producer wanted to buy it in 40 duplicate companies to send around the world, this "Alice" is singular. It is faithful to Lewis Carroll in plot and dialogue, but it is extraordinarily intertwined with the director's and the actors' imagination. As with Grotowski and the Open Theater, it is impossible to separate company from play.

For one of the first times in his artistic life, Mr. Gregory may be forced to face a happy ending. Before "Alice", he stormed his way through America's regional theaters.

"I got the reputation as an enfant terrible," he says. "I used to get the greatest pleasure driving people out of the theater."

In succession, he was dismissed as head of Philadelphia's Theater of the Living Arts and Los Angeles's Inner City Repertory Company. On the coast, he had staged a controversial "Tartuffe" with an Uncle Tom Tartuffe.

"Curiouser and curiouser..."

"I caused 22,000 parents to picket. The Catholic Church gave us an official seal of condemnation. But the kids flipped out."

Back in New York he was asked to direct a group of students graduating from N.Y.U. After months of intensive training they began searching for a project. They stumbled on "Alice in Wonderland."

"As a child, I started it," says Mr. Gregory. "It really terrified me. It still does."

With the text as text, the cast, led and liberated by the director improvised. But, he said, "at the basis of every improvisation is a Carroll line. The temptation is to distort it, which I've sometimes done with a classical text, such as 'Tartuffe.' I wanted to see if I could set restrictions on myself. No sets, no effects, no easy trick devices. The idea was to find our freedom in the text."

The improvisations transported the six actors—who played all the characters—into wild flights of fancy. Time allowed for digressions and second thoughts. They spent months devising a three-man caterpillar, then threw it out. The descent into the rabbit hole took nine months.

Because of the highly physically improvisation, the production is full of danger for the actors.

"They're like Algerian acrobats," says Mr. Gregory. "They trust each other." But there were many injuries. "I kept sending the actors to my doctor. He had never seen a performance and couldn't imagine what we were doing. Then I twisted seven ligaments. He said, 'That'll teach you, sado-masochist!'"

Finally the play faced an audience at Brecht West, a tiny theater in Brunswick, N.J. "The actors were sure we had a mean, brutal, obsessive kind of tragedy. I said, it's painful but it's funny. The audience started to laugh. Like a great bullfight. What a performance! A state of ecstasy!"

Since then Mr. Gregory has been slowly "editing, refining, and chiselling the work, an experience painters and sculptors have—but usually not theater people."

Where "Alice" takes place is most important. "We need proximity," he says. "It's a dream event, not a performing event." Ideally he would like to stage it for "25 people in the woods." Short of that he will turn a theater into a rabbit hole.

The audience "will fall into an enclosed room and like Alice they will get bigger and bigger. Finally a tiny door will open and suck them in. Everyone is forced to become Alice." Does he feel like Alice? "I am Alice. I think Lewis Carroll was Alice."

In his past work, Mr. Gregory had "a tendency to hit people over the head with a message." For "Alice," he says, "I decided to let the audience reach its own conclusions. Some find it a Freudian descent into the subconscious. Others, a drug trip. Or a parable of Jerry Rubin's court experience."

How does he see it? "It's a kind of stage circus."

Jou Jouka Mysterious And Enduring

By KENNETH SULIN

I believe it's true in saying many people thought the Rolling Stones replaced Brian Jones solely due to his death but this was not the case. One week before he died Brian quit the Stones because his musical interests had begun to wander; wander to such lengths that he was no longer content with either his own performance or those of Jagger and company. He was at a lull, an ebb, finding hardly any pleasure at all in his existence. In 1969 Brian Jones was found dead at the bottom of his swimming pool, the results of an asthma attack in combination with his obvious drug problems.

Brian had spent large amounts of his time away from the Stones visiting the peoples of Northern Africa and Morocco and proceeded to do some experiemental recording on his own; not himself performing, but just listening and appreciating the tribal or festival music of the Moroccans.

Here, after a few years of anticipation, we have the Brian Jones tapes on record, something Jagger himself was determined to see produced on the black vinyl. Again, this has nothing to do with Mr. Jones the musician, rather it deals only with him as a producer and spectator of the enjoyment concerning Jou Jouka. Jou Jouka, being the location of a weeklong festival involving the mysterious and enduring music of its inhabitants, had attracted thousands of foreigners among those was Brian.

The record itself contains only excerpts from the prevailing sounds that exhausted a good many on-lookers, including the people responsible for this recording. We are offered no individual selections here for each side of the album is continuous no pausing, no intermissions, just a lasting example of the happenings at Jou Jouka. Side one involves the "Pipes of Pan" or more easily described as twenty-five minute of uninterupted flute playing, displaying evident variations of tone. The pipes are backed only be a constant drum beat, a feat the natives could perfrom almost endlessly. Side two breaks from the pipes in its beginning only to be substituted by a prolonged tribal chant, again the drum beat carries on throughout the session--finally the album closes with the continuation of Pan's pipes.

Since this had all been taken from tapes, as mentioned earlier, the sound quality isn't as good as a studio production however; this could never have been studio music to begin with. Brian Jones had excellent intentions and, possibly, if this album were released in thr four years the public would accept it more readily. I suggest you hear the record before making a purchase; unless, of course, you happen to be one of those people who must have one of everything in connection with the Rolling Stones, otherwise give it a listen, then decide.

Jou Jouka, the weeklong festival taped by Brian Jones of the Stones.

Jou Jouka was simply an African festival, the album cannot really do justice to such an event. It seems this was something you'd certainly have to witness for yourself to capture its full meaning and gaiety.

The Congress of Wonders

By SAM ROTHMAN

THE CONGRESS OF WONDERS—"Revolting"-Fantasy Records

Reminiscent of the Firesign Theatre is the Congress of Wonders. Unfortunately, they try too hard to be just like them -- but they've got problems. Their material varies from poor to very good. Side one starts with "Radio Phil", which seems like they were sitting around watching television, picked up on a few ads and strained for ideas. Unlike Firesign, though, they lack thought. Instead of stretching their imaginations (there are only two), they twisted a few words and came up with around a dozen new ads to make a 5-1/2 minute cut.

We next take a journey with "star trip". The routines within it are not bad, but again strained. Phrases like "the ship's apse" and "it's her sect" are used for gags, but they don't come off. The telephone operator within the starship Intercourse who asks for "10 cents more please" is also annoying.

The Congress of Wonders

The whole album is a lot easier to follow than anything done by Firesign -- likely due to its triteness -- which means it will not last as Don't Crush That Dwarf or Bozos will. Richard Rollins and Howard Kerr (The Congress) were obviously inspired by Firesign, as evident in "Pigeon Park", another post-legalization skit. It brings "Returned for Re-Grooving" back from Waiting for the Electrician, but this one involves Jerry Garcia and Phil Lesh 40 years from now. I'm glad to say, though, that it is very good, as is the closing "Flipping-on-the-Hod". The side ends on a good note with this "soap-opera-flick-from-19th-century-"hope"-novel" type cut. It is definitely their finest minute.

Side two includes "The Stoned Ranger" a 13-minute cut which I had heard previously on WHCN a few times. I guess it's unfortunate that I did, since I'm already bored by it. But my favorite line in the cut is "Come into my tou-pee and keep your wig wam", also the best on the side.

I must admit it's a good effort by The Congress of Wonders on their first album. I would greatly appreciate the album if I were told they were not ready with their material, but the album being the type it is, I doubt it. They have undoubtedly taken what they felt were good lines (while stoned and/or engrossed in something like TV) and tried to make an album of them. Where Firesign Theatre's material is all original, the Congress of Wonders relies on a rehashing of old standards. I must rate the album as poor, but give it a "nice try".

Plastic Dreams

By DAVID GREEN

Ladies, beware of men owning the Modern Jazz Quartet's newest release, PLASTIC DREAMS. The MJQ has given the male element a weapon of secution and a tool for inducing sin.

PLASTIC DREAMS is a mood and atmosphere album. Now in their 18th year together, John Lewis, Milt Jackson, Percy Heath and Connie Kay continue to turn out consistently refreshing music. They blend rhythm with improvisation to present traditional, somewhat low-keyed jazz. It is not the modern jazz of Miles Davis or Weather Report, who explore new and yet to be fully accepted realms of jazz music, but rather a more down to earth sound to which there is a definite tempo.

Particularly interesting compositions on this album are the re-arranged Christmas carols. For example "The Twelve Days of Christmas" becomes the amin theme of the MJQ's "Variations On a Christmas Theme", and "God Bless Ye Merry Gentlemen" is the repeating bars of "England's Carol". The spirit of these pieces is bright and cheerful. They convey, perhaps, Christmas in 1971. A much faster paced Christmas than of years past but a time that despite commercialism is still the most loving.

The lead in these selections are taken by John Lewis on the harpsichord and Milt Jackson on vibes. While the musicians are playing tag with the rhythm, listerners can sense the enjoyment of their game. Christmas arrives early and in a new package in PLASTIC DREAMS.

The other jazz movements on the album lend themselves to the title. Such relaxing sounds as those offered by the MJQ can release the subconscious. It is very simple to fade into a daydream as the record revolves at 33 1/3 rpm. "Walkin' Stomp" and "Trav'lin'" clam the nerves releasing tensions. "Plastic Dreams", the title piece, creates the feeling of moving tranquilly through a prairie. It massages the mind, sending thoughts down a corridor of freedom and easiness. The musical expression of Lewis, Heath, Jackson and Key is subtle. Their music takes listerners over by whispers, not shouts.

The MJQ's style is conservative, in contrast to the new breed of jazz performers, such as Joe Zawinul or Wayne Shorter, who experiment with incongruent rhythms to find a third and different one. The Modern Jazz Quartet does stay true to its name for its jazz evolves with the musical environment. The group does not, however, reach beyond its surroundings.

PLASTIC DREAMS would serve as a good introduction to jazz. As a first jazz experience, the MJQ could be a stepping stone to a greater range of jazz improvisation. This is not to say the MJQ is the bottom rung of the jazz ladder. It is to point out that their style is the best of traditional jazz ensembles. PLASTIC CREAMS is the jazz of now presented with the conservatism of master craftsmen.

The premiere performance of the new avant-garde ensemble group featuring members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The group will give the world premiere of "Nocturnes" by Boston based composer and conductor Pusztai, and have scheduled works by Mario Davidovsky, Jackob Druckman, George Crumb, Ernest Krenck, and Lukas Foss. The concertis tonight in Bowker at 8. ($).

Theater

Alice In Wonderland

Clive Barnes called this off-Broadway ensemble group "fantastic!" (amongst other superlatives) and this group received rave notices from all the other leading NY Critics during their run last Fall. The group will perform their acclaimed interpretation of Lewis Carroll's childrens classic next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday in Grinnel Arena (an innocuous little hall down in the barn area of Stockbridge). Seating is limited for this impressive group. For more details see page 10A01. ($).

The Cave Dwellers

UMass Theater's second play of the season is William Saroyan's gentle comedy about a group of people, down on their luck, who have taken up residence in an abandoned theatre. They've seen better days, but their warmth with each other helps them to renew their lives. Opens next Thursday at 8:30 in Bartlett Auditorium. ($).

The Iceman Cometh

The Amherst Masquers' first play of the year is Eugene O'Neill's drama. It will be peformed this Friday, Saturday, and Sunday evening at 7:30 in Kirby Theater, Amherst College. ($).

The Jew Of Malta

Christopher Marlowe's popular Elizabethean play will be performed tonight and tomorrow night in the cozy Studio Theater at South College. Basically a farce, somewhat black in nature with Anti-Sematic overtones, this production will be done with shades of Peter Brook's wild and inventive "Midsummer's Night Dream". At 8 P.M., seating is limited. ($).

Films

Death In Venice (The Talkie, Northampton; Amherst Cinema, Amherst)

Luchino Visconti's beautiful and lush interpretation of Thomas Mann's 1911 novella is a painfully slow and strangely fascinating film. The story concerns an aging composer who discovers an image of perfect beauty in the form of a fourteen yesr old boy while vacationing in cholera-ridden Venice. Mann's Achenbach is meant to seem like German composer Gustav Mahler and the platonic relationship between the man and boy is made to look explicitly carnal. The film does possess a brilliant sense of style, capturing an image of 1911 Venice to near perfection. Dirk Bogarde is humbly moving and the choice of decor and music (Mahler) gives the film an eerie and haunting reality.

Desperate Characters (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

The horrors of city life, which can indeed be horrible beyond belief, are catalogued with a honest, if not a bit overwhelming, zeal by playwright turned-filmmaker Frank Gilroy. Everything bad seems to happen to a young New York couple, played by Shirley MacLaine and Kenneth Mars, as they fall victim to forms of sundry mishaps including cat bites, rocks through windows, intimidation from total strangers, and the usual doses of extortion, adultery and pollution. The grimness of each vignette has a reality, but when taken as a whole it's a bit hard to take. It's best point is the bitchy, sophisticated dialogue and the performance of Shitley MacLaine, who has finally been given an intelligent role in an interesting film.

Doctor Zhivago (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield

A classy and trashy adaptation of Boris Pasternack's novel about a man's struggle against tyranny before and during the Russian Revolution that comes across as an audience's struggle against tedium. Robert Bolt's screenplay meanders through the book like a hasty tour of a large museum, rendering the original to intelligent pulp. David Lean's ponderous and pretentious direction slackens the pace of the film to that of a tired snail. The film is a daytime serial--Cassack Style employing all the razzmatazz of the Class Hollywood Product. The only effective aspect is the photography, the rest comes off as vacuous as the blatantly romantic music score of Maurice Jarre. Out of a huge and stifling cast the only performance which speaks with any dignity is that of Rod Steiger who shines in a supporting role.

The Informer (Sunday, Orchard Hill Films Series)

John Ford's best film and a film masterwork. Adapted from the novel by Liam O'Flaherty, his story concerns a half-witted brute who turns in the name of political criminals to the police and becomes despised by both the police and the underground. The stark, murky studio look gives the film a tragic feel almost unintended. The performance of Victor McLaglen as the man who betrays his friend for a handful of silver is one of the more notable of the Thirties and the film won Oscars in direction and script.

I Love You, Alice B. Toklas (Friday, Mahar, 6:30 and 9:30)

An occasionally diverting satire about the absurdities of the counter-culture. The film is aided by a funny script which somewhat broadly parodies the Eastern cult, hippies, and drug use. Peter Sellers stars.

Kotch (Palace Cinema, West Springfield)

Jack Lemmon makes his directorial debut with this tight, neat, and highly entertaining gilm farce. Walter Matthau stars and is excellent as the 72 year old widower who believes in living life to its fullest and does so by sharing his cottage with an unwed teenage girl.

Lawman (Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton)

Burt Lancaster stars in this generally routine western about a strong and proud lawman who comes to a crime-ridden town determined to bring law and order with justice. A good cast featuring Lee J. Cobb, Robert Ryan, and Sheree North handle the material adequately but the western morality tale becomes little more than cliched.

Let's Scare Jessica To Death (Calvin Theater, Northampton)

A mentally-deranged wife encounters the supernatural in rural Connecticut-or at least thinks she does in this interesting yet ultimately unsatisfying horror film of clashing genres. It can't quite make up its mind whether it's a psychological thriller along the lines of a Shirley Jackson story or straightforward horror film. It was made on a shoestring by director John Hancock who obviously aimed a bit higher than his mens allowed. His cast, mostly assembled from television, features Zohra Lampert as Jessica, and Kevin O'Connor, Barton Heyman, and a beautiful old house where the eerie tale takes place.

Mission To Moscow (Sunday, Thompson 104, 7 and 9)

A remarkable semi-documentary made in 1943 as much appreciated addition to Warner's fine biographical series. The film was adapted from the book by former ambassador to Moscow Joseph E. Davies and deals with his accounts with the Russians between 1936 and 1941. It was notable for its impersonations of living politicians (Churchill, Stalin, Roosevelt) as well as making potshots at the Chamberlain government and pre-war U.S. Isolationists. Somewhat lengthy, with a near ideal performance by Walter Huston as Davies.

Myra Breckenridge (Thursday, SU Ballroom, 6:30 and 9)

Undoubtedly one of the dumpiest films of recent years. An oddball mixture of camp, satire, and perversion that comes off like a very, very embarrassing experience for all involved. Gore Vidal's novel, a funny and biting satire, about Hollywood, transexualism, and the Ameican value system, was butchered into a lewd and raunchy film entertainment. What went on behind-the-scenes is probably more interesting than the end result, as stars Mae West and Raquel Welch feuded, Rex Reed bitched (he proved he couldn't act,)and John Huston benignly flew in and out of Hollywood from his Irish retreat and merely observed the happenings (it can't be called acting, either.). The film was disowned by nearly everyone involved, except for the Studio (Twentieth Century) who thought they could cash in on the then chic Sex and Perversion Craze which hit films like a good kick in the groin, and Raquel Welch who babbled about how good the figm was a a memorable Cavett show (the last one with Janis Joplin). Both failed miserably.

Desperate Characters

Patton (Saturday, Cage Hall, Smith College, 7 and 10)

George C. Scott is superb as General George Patton, one of the Second World War's finest and most controversial generals. The film is an excellent biography; rich in adventure, deep in characterization, and long on action. It managed to cop all the leading Oscars last year in the categories of actor, picture, script, and direction,and is a film wellworth seeing no matter what your political persuasion.

Petrulia (Friday, Campus Center Auditorium, 7 and 9)

Richard Lester's hate letter to Ameican sexual mores is dazzling in technique yet a bit empty in content. The film is visually stunning and Lester's direction has a sort of chic consistency to tit that always manages to hold the eye. The problem comes with the script, which amounts to a bleak and depressing story about a middle-aged man who has an affair with a young, strange kook in San Francisco. The performances by George C. Scott and Julie Christie are very fine indeed and the use of music and locale give the film a very contemporary and sophisticated sense of style.

The Phantom Of The Opera (Saturday, Merrill Science Center, Amherst College, 8 and 10)

The original and most interesting version of the meldrama about an embittered, disfigured composer who haunts the sewers beneath the Paris Opera House and takes a pretty young singer as his protegee. The film stars Lon Chaney in perhaps his most famous role and features Mary Philbin as the young lady who removes his mask in what must be called one of the most frightening moments in film history.

See No Evil (Campus Cinemas, Hadley; Academy Of Music, Northampton)

Mia Farrow as a blind girl terrorized by a psychopath who has already made mincemeat of her family. Gory mystery-thriller which resembles Wait Until Dark in both theme and content. It seems a bit-contrived and the emphasis on fore is nauseating.

Summer of '42 (Campus Cinema, Hadley)

This is unquestionably the honest remembered film of this current year. Director Richard Richard Mulligan has styled a wonderfully sustained film which evokes a sense of mostalgia as no other similar voguish film has done. The story, adapted from the best selling novel (which came out after the film's release) concerns the coming to manhood of a gawky young boy. He blooms with Jennifer O'Neill, a young war widow and fine new actress in a good portrayal. Despite some excellent points though, the film was a bit sugary and cloying. It also had an air of falseness to it which was as prevasively romantic as the overtly contemporary Michel LeGrand score. It's not as it was, but rather as we wish to remember it.

Together (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

A somewhat ludicrous notion; a horn flick done with taste and style, a "X" rated film to take the family to see. The only people I've known who have wasted their time and money on this one are probably people who deserve to see this type of tacky, pruient exploitation.

Topaz (Sunday, Student Union Ballroom, 7 and 9:30)

Alfred Hitchcock's most recent film and a smooth, streamline thriller adapted from the Leon Uris best-seller about the Cuban Missle Crisis. It is a bit cold, but is filled with some interesting Hitchcock touches which automatically place it one step above most thrillers. Featuring a huge cast of usually second name players, led by John Forsythe.

The Touch (Campus Cinemas, Hadley)

The first English-language film of Swedish director Igmar Bergman concerns a three way affair between a married Swedish couple and their American visitor. It is an oddly disturbing film which doesn't quite come up to what one expects from Bergman. It is filmed with a great deal of skill and has a surface warmth that is quite likeable, but one comes away oddly unmoved and a bit bored. There are two superlative performances by Bergman regulars Bibi Anderson and Max von Sydow as the married couple. The only obvious dissonance in the film is the performance of Elliot Gould who should have stayed in Hollywood where at least his excuse was that the movies he was in were bad.

T.R. Baskin (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Fannie Hurst–come lately. The kind of film which Joan Crawford would grind her way through during the late Thirties. If it were serious, and not so godawful unbelievable, than Woman's Lib would have a neat target; instead what we get is high camp-Lana Turner style. A young girl leaves Mommy and Daddy in Indiana and makes her way to the wild and wooly Windy City where she ends up in bed with Joe Boyle. Candice Bergen again shows she can mimic sophistication with the best of them. A serious "My Sister Eileen."

2001: A Space Oddyssey (Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield)

Unquestionably one of the finest films of recent years and the best space epic ever. Stanley Kubrick's twelve million dollar Modern Odyssey is the surrealistic journey of Man's evolution, from Monkey to Man to Superman. The film is visually the most complex in recent years, a cosmic Marienbad, and the special effects are stunning beyond belief. It is loosely structure in three parts with more along thematic lines than a linear plot, yet is never boring, containing perhaps the most interesting pop philosophy ever filmed. The music score, ranging from Richard Strauss to Ligeti to Johann Strauss, is one of positive brilliant; the script is downbeat black humor, and the direction is impeccable Kubrick, visually complete and beautifully done

5000 Protest In Boston

By BOB CALLAHAN

BOSTON — Demanding immediate withdrawal from Southeast Asia, approximately 5,000 demonstrators gathered at Boston Common Saturday afternoon to hear a host of speakers, including former Alaska Senator Ernest Gruening and Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, denounce the war in Southeast Asia and the nuclear test at Amchitka Island.

Gruening, the first speaker of the afternoon, lashed out at President Nixon and the Congress for their part in continuing the war.

He said, "This is a revelation of how indifferent the Chief Executive is against public opinion. The only way to stop the war is to get Nixon out of office."

Speaking about attempts by Congress to end the war, Gruening said, "There is no hope in the Congress until we can elect a new Congress."

Gruening had the highest praise for the men who have refused induction into the armed services. "I respect and admire the boys who refuse to go. They are performing a partriotic service," the ex-senator from Alaska said.

Concerning the Amchitka Island nuclear blast, Gruening told the crowd that it was a waste of 200 billion dollars. Noting the 4-3 vote taken by the Supreme Court, he said, "The two strict constructionists appointed by Nixon failed to go against the blast." He praised the three members of the Supreme Court who voted against it.

The appearance of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg brought the crowd to it's feet. Ellsberg, whose appearance was unexpected, drew a warm reception from the crowd.

Ellsberg called for impeachment proceedings to be taken against President Nixon for his lies and violence. He also asked for impeachment of the next President if the war isn't over in 3 months after his entering office.

Concerning the war, Ellsberg said, "If the message of the Pentagon Papers is ignored, the United States will again have exploded one megaton of explosives on the people of Indo China."

In closing, Ellsberg made mention of the upcoming elections. "Make the candidates tell you precisely how they will end the war," he said.

Besides speeches by Gruening and Ellsberg, the crowd of 5,000 heard representatives from Women's Liberation, the United Auto Workers, Gay Liberation, the Greater Boston Peace Action Coalition and Puerto Ricans.

Playwright Myrna Lamb in speaking about the opposition of women to the war, said, "We are manipulated constantly by the establishment to stay in our place. It is absolutely relevant that women march against the war." She also listed her support to the Presidential campaign of Socialist Linda Jenness.

The spokesman from the United Auto Workers said that President Nixon is trying to stop the ability of working people to keep pace with inflation, which is a direct result of the Viet Nam War. Speaking about troop withdrawal,he said, "There is a way to wind down the war, bring them home as fast as you sent them."

Ed Patone of the Greater Boston Peace Action Coalition, said that the whole war has been built upon lies. "It is up to the aniti-war movement to tell the truth about the war," he said.

The demonstration started shortly after the arrival of 2,000 persons representing various peace and minority groups, including a delegation from UMass. Carrying signs and chanting, "U.S. out of SoutheastAsia," the crowd descended onto Boston Common after a 3-mile march from Cambridge Common.

A spokesman from the Greater Boston Peace Action Coalition cited the smaller than expected turnout as being caused by the fact that the press has buried the war.

The parade route and the rally were policed by student marshalls while a bus load of Boston Police remained across the street.

Two incidents of arrests were reported and both involved self-styled Polish Freedom Fighter, John Marutz. Carrying a sign saying, "Communism is Jewish," he picketed the rally. He was taken away in a Boston Police van by police only to return again to be arrested for a second time.

The crowd was entertained before and after the rally by several local rock groups.

Boston was one of 12 cities across the country in which demonstrations against the war took place on Saturday.

Drug Reform Bill Passed

The Massachusetts Legislature voted final approval yesterday to a comprehensive bill to reform the state's drug laws.

The House acted in the early afternoon after turning down an attempt to send the 51-page measure back to a study commission and the Senate beat back an attempt to restore the crime of being present where marijuana is found and then took final action just before 6 p.m.

One of the bill's sponsors, Rep. Michael F. Flaherty (D-South Boston), told the House yesterday: "Mike Flaherty wouldn't take you on a phony trip. This is good legislation."

And in the Senate, Jack H. Backman (D-Brookline), chairman of the Drug Abuse Study Commission, which drafted the bill said: "This (6:11) is acceptable to all groups, and yet it will be effective."

The bill which, for the first time in the state, legalizes narcotic research on human beings and also reduces penalties for drug possession has been under fire from both law enforcement officials and medical researchers. But firm controls under which research would be performed and some innovative police procedures were incorporated to satisfy many critics.

The final version of the bill — the fourth since mid-September had been printed just before midnight Thursday , touching off the major attack on the bill in the House.

Rep. John J. Desmond (D-Lowell), an opponent of the bill, moved to refer it back to the study commission.

"I'd be misleading you," he said, "if I said this was a bad bill. There are many good elements. But there are many elements I do not understand."

But Flaherty told how he and Backman — "a liberal's liberal," he called him — had resolved their ideological differences over drug reform.

"We knew that if we couldn't agree, there would be kids who would be hurt, so each of us agreed to yield some to the other," he said.

Flaherty also told the House how various interest groups — law enforcement officials, researchers and other — had been involved in drafting the bill.

"It brings into reality what is going on in the commonwealth today," Flaherty said.

Rep. Martin A. Linsky (R-Brookline) said, "It is a bill that everyone of us should oppose because of specific provision. But as a whole it is a major breakthrough."

Flaherty and Linsky offered a series of amendments (accepted by voice vote) that eliminated provisions of the bill particularly unpleasant to researchers — 10-year, $30,000 fines for researchers who fail to file protocols (preliminary memos) or fail to obtain informed consent from persons under study.

Another provision attacked by researchers, their absence from a list of persons allowed to possess a syringe, had been corrected by the Third Reading Committee which prepared the final draft voted on yesterday.

On a 118-87 roll call, that version of the bill was accepted, the vote precluding action on Desmond's restudy motion. Final approval came without further debate on a 141-73 vote.

The bill did not reach the Senate until late in the afternoon and Sen. David H. Locke (R-Wellesley) wanted the matter postponed until the next session. Kevin B. Harrington, Senate president, obliged by adjourning the day's session and by starting a second legislative day.

Locke then urged reinstatement of the crime of being present where marijuana and other drugs are found. As the bill stands it is a crime to be present only where heroin is found.

"I want it to be a crime for my children to be present where drugs are found," he said.

See related editorial on page eight.

There will be an analysis of the new drug laws in an upcoming issue of the Collegian.

Japan Quake Unrelated To Amchitka

SAPPORO, Japan (AP) — A mild earthquake of Hokkaido, Japan's northernmost main island, and northern parts of Honshu Sunday, the Sapporo weather bureau reported.

The bureau said the quake was not connected with the U.S. nuclear test 10 hours earlier on Amchitka Island.

The center of the tremor was in the Pacific 73 miles off Urakawa, Hokkaido.

Officials said its strongest intensity at Urakawa, was three on a Japanese scale of seven.

The weather bureau said it had determined the earthquake was not triggered by the Amchitka test because of the quake wave pattern, the elapsed time between the test and the quake and the fact that the quake was much deeper in the earth than the nuclear blast.

UMass Student Sentenced For Drug Violations

A former UMass student who was arrested in a May 14 drug raid was sentenced Wednesday in Hampshire County Superior Court after being found guilty of several drug violations.

Thomas K. Atwater, 21, of Williamsburg Road, Ashfield, was found guilty by a jury on three counts of unlawful sale of LSD, three counts of unlawful possession of LSD with intent to sell, and three counts of unlawful possession of LSD.

For the unlawful possession charge, Judge Andrew R. Linscott sentenced Atwater to an indeterminate term at Concord State Reformatory.

For the sale conviction, Judge Linscott ordered Atwater to serve a term of 5 to 7 years at Walpole State Prison.

The prison term Linscott allowed to be suspended, and further ordered that Atwater serve two years of it on probation on and after his term at Concord.

Atwater wasconvictedon the testimony of state police undercover agent Ronald Ford, who said in court that he had purchased $150 worth of LSD from him.

Four Killed In Calif.

GRASS VALLEY, Calif. (AP) — A woman and her four children were shot to death and her parents critically wounded in their bedrooms before dawn Sunday, Sheriff Wayne Brown said.

Brown said police were searching for the woman's estranged husband.

All seven victims were shot several times each with a .22-caliber pistol, Brown said. The five bodies were found in a two bedroom home in a rural area of the Sierra foothills about 50 miles northeast of Sacramento.

Brown said the woman and children were visiting her parents, the Russell Faylors. Charlotte Faylor, wounded, crawled to a neighbor's home and police were notified.

The dead were identified as Charlene Vichi, 32, and her children Teena Vichi, 2; David Vichi, 4; Steven Sheriff, 10, and Michelle Sheriff, 13. The Faylors were in critical condition in a hospital with gunshot wounds.

An all-points bulletin was issued for Alexander "John" Vichi, 41, of Ft. Bragg, Calif., Brown said.

Brown said there were no signs of struggle at the Faylor home, but "a number of cartridges were found."

Rent Increase Likely?

Empty Rooms Cause Concern

By SUE LOBAO

The decrease in occupancy of the dormitories and an abrupt shortage in housing funds have been causing much tension within the University Housing Committee and the Student Affairs Staff this semester.

Not a new concern, the problem of providing the residence halls with a necessary 95% occupancy level has been unsuccessful and it seems that as the University increases its housing production, student willingness to live in dorms seems to be falling off.

The obvious reason for this residency decline is the high rate of college withdrawal due to personal and financial problems or the lack of federal allotments.

Also, because the dorms are often unkept or too expensive, many eligible students are moving off-campus. Only last year, a great number of resident exemptions were made with little value judgments or investigations.

According to Bruce Cochran of Student Affairs, the areas of greatest concern are the Sylvan suites, with an 80% occupancy and the traditional dorms of 88.3% occupancy. Here, recreational facilities and housing conditions seem somewhat unattractive.

The debt service for the residence halls has been set for approximately the next 25 years. During this time, the Building Authority has to be reimbursed and once this payment is made, there will be no more problem-rents will be lowered and an open exemption policy possibly created.

Now though, "there is a debt of about $60,000," explains Bob Chiller, Chairman of the Student Senate Committee on Rents and Fees. This has to be met, either by attaining a 95% level of occupancy next semester or by raising the rents.

In regards to the rent freeze, Chiller states that the University is exempt and no effect will influence dormitory finance policies.

An Exemption Committee 'is being drafted by the Housing Office and a group of administrative authorities. Consisting of 3 members, this committee will decide on exemption petitions.

The main desire is to abolish exemptions, allowing students to live where they want.

To do this, resident decline and an increase in the rents of those students still living in the dorms must be avoided. Residence areas must be upgraded to compete with off-campus facilities and according to Bruce Cochrane, "a visible linear experience must be developed."

He says that this is going to be a difficult procedure which will involve more money and possibly not produce the desired results.

The Student Affairs Office is optimistic about the coming semester; with the addition of swing-shifters and an increase in enrollment of 850 students, the 95% occupancy level may be attained. Also, there will be no increase in bed space.

If this anticipation does not work out, students can expect cuts in dorm facilities, recreation and services, as well as probable rent increases.

Angela's Lawyer Calls Trial Biased

Howard Moore, defense attorney for Angela Davis, has sharply criticized the "political repression" which has prejudiced his client and has made the likelihood of a fair and impartial trial improbable.

"The desire to see her restrained, obscures any impartiality," stated Moore whose Friday night appearance at the Student Union Ballroom came under the auspices of the Distinguished Visitors Program.

He noted that much of this prejudice has been generated both as a result of widespread media interest in the case and because of Angela's political position and the nature of her alleged crime.

"The ruling class uses symbols to convince that it has control," said Moore. "Angela is an 'ideal' symbol. She is black, she is a communist and she abdicates capitalistic, racist oppression."

In support of his statements, Moore cited Marin County, where Angela had been scheduled to stand trial, as an example.

He noted that the bias against a person of Angela's nature can be evidenced by the fact that a large percentage of those surveyed in Marin County had stated that they would be opposed to allowing black militants and professed communists to teach in their school system.

Moore also pointed out that the Marin County residents have no contact with the 1% black population.

"They reflect the racial polarization which is characteristic to present-day American life," said Moore.

In expounding on the specifics of this prejudice, Moore used the circumstances prevalent in Marin County to a greater degree.

Focusing his attention on the August 7 shoot out at the Marin County Hall of Justice, Moore noted that there is deep resentment toward Angela for her alleged part in supplying the guns used in that incident.

"Angela symbolizes everything that the residents of Marin County resent," declared Moore. "They hold her responsible for the events of August 7. They blame her for the death of Judge Harold Haley, who reflected the life style of their community."

Although the scene of the trial has since been shifted to Santa Clara County, Moore was quick to point out that, if anything, Angela's chances of an impartial trial have been diminished.

"Again, there is this same opposition tothe black militant and communist and a generally low opinion of Angela as well," said Moore.

He also indicated that much of the prejudice against Angela can be attributed to President Nixon's own congratulatory remarks to the FBI on her capture, thus implying her guilt.

Moore could not stress strongly enough that the bias against his client exists and has been revealed.

"As long as these conditions exist," said Moore, "Angela and other prisoners of American society cannot expect a fair trial anywhere in the country."

In response to the question of what role students could play in this conflict between the "forces of reaction and the forces of change," Moore urged the channeling of student effort through the Emergency Defense Committee.

Cement City Gets Whitewashed

By JOANNE RESTGHINI

Those who walked through the tunnel in Southwest Saturday were the first to view the "human touch" being added to "Cement City" by the students of the Environmental Design course.

Some fifty students worked all day on putting a first coat of paint of the tunnel while others were busy digging holes to plant some 4100 flower bulbs all over Southwest.

Throughout the day, cider and donuts were served and equipment was provided for all those interested im making music.

As soon as the basic painting is done on the tunnel, the students plan on painting a super graphic design on the inside. The students also plan on putting graphic designs on the walls, stairs and buildings in Southwest to add some color to the surroundings.

When all 4100 bulbs are planted there will be a continual blooming of tulips, daffodils and other various flowers all over the area.

Saturday was titled "the First of the Great Saturdays" since, according to Charlene Lydiard, Environmental Design teacher, the painting of the tunnel and the planting of the bulbs is "the first in a series of exciting things which will be happening."

All projects are being organized by the students themselves. They will be working primarily in Southwest and their goal is to change the environment of that area.

"We're trying to add a human touch to Southwest since so many students feel it's such a cold place to live, with its large cement buildings," commented Paul Carchidi, a student in the course.

Other "exciting things" which the students will be working on include an outdoor skating rink, craft centers which will be set up in the dorms and new seating for the area.

The students in the course are hoping that those students living in Southwest will want to get involved in improving the surroundings.

Anyone who has any suggestions or questions should see Ray Werbe, Director of Environmental Concerns, or come to the Environmental Design class which meets Thursdays at 6:00p.m. in the 19th floor lounge of John Adams.

In The Nation And The World

U.S. Role In Viet Combat May Be Ending

SAIGON (AP) - President Nixon is expected to announce next week that the U.S. ground combat role in Vietnam will be coming to an early end, informed sources said Sunday. In the air war, the U.S. Command said four U.S. fighter-bombers attacked an antiaircraft site near North Vietnam's Dong Noi air base 40 miles north of the demilitarized zone. The Sunday attack, the 71st this year inside North Vietnam, was launched after the antiaircraft installation opened fire on a reconnaissance plane the jet fighter-bombers were escorting, a spokesman said. The American aircraft were not damaged and the results of the strike were not known, he added.

U.S. planners here have been told that the 101st Airborne Division, the last remaining American division in Indochina, will be phased out of the war zone early in the year.

At the same time the 24th Corps, the last remaining U.S. tactical headquarters in Vietnam, is to be deactivated and replaced by an advisory command.

It is anticipated that Nixon also will announce a reduction of U.S. troops to about 40,000 men. This force would include fighter-bomber squadrons, helicopter, artillery and logistics units plus advisers and security forces.

The security forces would be in the form of ready reaction brigades, such as the 3rd Brigade of the 1st Air Cavalry Division operating in the Saigon region and the 196th Brigade in the Da Nang area.

The 24th Corps at Da Nang is a tactical headquarters controlling all U.S. combat units in the 1st Military Region, which includes the five northernmost provinces of South Vietnam and covers an area of 10,000 square miles. The 101st Division, based north of Da Nang, is under direct control of the 24th corps.

At height of the war during the Tet offensive of 1968, there were nine full U.S. Army and Marine divisions operating in Vietnam plus separate brigades equivalent to two other divisions.

On the battlefronts this weekend:

Enemy forces blew up spans of two bridges on Highway 12 in the Mekong Delta 117 miles southwest of Saigon. South Vietnamese spokesmen said traffic was suspended. There were no casualties reported in the attacks.

The South Vietnamese command said its troops killed 39 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong soldiers in four clashes scattered across the country. The only South Vietnamese casualties reported were two men wounded.

As many as 25 U.S. B52 bombers kept up attacks on North Vietnamese supply routes leading through Laos anc Cambodia. The raids are aimed at stopping preparations by Hanoi for its annual dry season push for war materials southward.

Scores of smaller U.S. tactical fighter-bombers from Air Force Bases in Thailand, and two 7th Fleet carriers in the Tonkin Gulf joined in attacks on the Ho Chi Minh supply network in Laos.

A major Australian base in Vietnam was turned over to the South Vietnamese army Sunday. About 3,700 troops remain at an Australian base in the port through which Australian troops and equipment are being withdrawn from Vietnam.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP) - Concerned over an expected weakening of the National Guard and Reserve, the Army plans to release draftees six months early provided they agree to join the backup forces for one year.

Army officials see the program was not only helping to beef up the Reserves but also as a means of getting more blacks to join.

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - Lt. Col. Anthony Herbert, a highly decorated veteran who earlier accused superior officers of concealing Vietnam atrocities, announced Sunday he will submit his retirement from the Army on Monday.

WASHINGTON (AP) - House Democratic leaders must decide in the next two weeks whether to commit their heavy artillery to a drive for a major congressional role in shaping the next phase in control of the economy.

Their decision involves both risks and possible rewards.

Their hand is being forced by the House Banking Committee which apparently without previous broad party consultation, suddenly went on the offensive with sweeping amendments to President Nixon's proposed Phase 2 legislation, scheduled for a House vote before Nov. 19.

BOSTON (AP) - A Brighton youth was fatally shot as he and two companions terrorized and intended to rob the staff of a nursing home in the Dorchester section Sunday, police said.

The dead youth was identified as James D. McIver, 19, police said.

Police were searching for his companions.

BELFAST,Northern Ireland (AP) - Gunmen firing from a speeding car killed an off-duty British soldier and seriously wounded another Sunday in new outbursts of Irish Republican Army street warfare.

The ambush was staged at Lurgan, southeast Belfast.

TOKYO (AP) - Chi Peng-fei, Red China's acting foreign minister, said Sunday that Peking will "resolutely support" Pakistan should it be a victim of foreign aggression. The official New China News Agency said Chi made the remarks at a banquet for a visiting Pakistani delegation, in which he accused India of having "cruelly interfered in Pakistan's internal affairs."

WASHINGTON (AP) - The House will vote Monday on a constitutional amendment to permit nondenominational prayer in public schools.

Connally Considered For V.P.

ATLANTA, Ga. (AP) - Several Southern governors say Treasury Secretary John B. Connally would do as well as Vice President Spiro T. Agnew in helping Richard Nixon carry their region in the President's expected 1972 bid for re-election.

The Dixie chief executives who responded to a question on Connally's Southern strength generally agreed Agnew is very popular in the region but replacing him with Connally would be acceptable, to Southern voters.

The Southern governors, here for their annual conference, are predominantly Democrats. However, one Republican chief executive, Winfield Dun of Tennessee, was against replacing Republican Agnew with Connally, a Texas Democrat.

"While Secretary Connally is an attractive personality," Dunn said, "I believe he would loose his effectiveness if he were placed on the national ticket. I am not considering anyone but Spiro Agnew as the No. 2 candidate with President Nixon."

Dunn himself is the first GOP governor in Tennessee in half a century.

One other governor in the minority who thought Connally might hurt Nixon's chances for re-election was Missouri Gov. Warren E. Hearnes, a Democrat, who has endorsed Sen. Edmund S. Muskie of Maine for the Democratic presidential nomination.

"I think the substitution would cut off financial donations from certain higher-ups in the Republican party," Hearnes said. Last week Hearnes became ill in Missouri, however, and is not expected at the conference.

But others who responded seem to have plenty of respect for Connally's potential political impact in their states.

One Democratic governor who asked to remain anonymous said "Connally is a popular man in the part of the country. He definitely would be an asset for the Republican ticket."

Gov. John C. West, D--S.C., said a Connally vice presidential nomination "definitely would help" the GOP in his state.

John Bell Williams, Southern Governors Conference chairman who will be replaced in the Mississippi statehouse in January by William Waller, said Sunday, "Agnew is very, very popular" in his state. But "either one, as far as Mississippians are concerned, would be an asset."

Host Gov. Jimmy Carter of Georgia, like Williams a Democrat but unlike Williams considered a progressive and racial moderate, said either Agnew or Connally "would be very popular in Georgia. I think equally popular."

Gov. Marvin Mandel, a Democrat from Agnew's state of Maryland, said, "I don't get involved in Republican party affairs. But Connally has turned in a creditable performance as secretary of the Treasury and he has great personal appeal."

Herbert Klein, White House director of communications, said meanwhile his personal view was that Nixon would keep Agnew on the ticket.

"My reasons are based on looking at the trend of events which I believe is moving our way," Klein said in a copyrighted interview in U.S. News & World Report. "If that's the case, then the President would probably prefer to keep the ticket rather than switch..."

About a dozen of the 15 members of the Southern Governors Conference are expected for the three-day meeting. Center of attention likely will be Alabama's George Wallace, a third party candidate in 1968 who many expect will make another bid next year.

Issues expected to occupy the chief executives this week are education in general and school busing in particular, law enforcement, rural development and transportation, including a possible move to urge Congress to extend the Boston-New York-Washington high-speed Metroliner train south to Miami.

Any plans to make a major issue of school busing were seen here as at least partly diffused by the House of Representatives' action last week approving legislation forbidding expenditure of federal funds on busing programs aimed at correcting racial imbalance in schools.

Walpole Inmates Searched

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) - Prisoners were kept locked in their cells at Walpole State Peison Sunday as correction officers pressed a cell by cell search for contraband. There was no word what, if anything they found. A Correction Department spokesman said Supt. Robert J. Moore and Deputy Supt. Fred Butterworth at the same time made a cell by cell "survey" interviewing prisoners throughout the institution inquiring if they wanted to work.

A work stoppage in several prison ships Friday morning resulted in Moore issuing an order several hours later to lock all the men in their cells. He said a work stoppage would not be tolerated.

The spokesman said the prison's industrial instructors, who teach inmates how to operate various machines, will undertake a thorough search of all shops Monday morning looking for weapons or other contraband.

Despite the activity, the spokesman said the prisoners were quiet-"just waiting, not noisy at all."

Amchitka Data Analyzed

AMCHITKA ISLAND, Alaska — Atomic Energy Commission scientists began Sunday analyzing data from Saturday's successful underground nuclear explosion. The AEC also started work to restore this remote island to its natural state.

The nearly five-megaton explosion occurred a fraction of a second after its 5 p.m. EST scheduled time, and minutes later AEC Chairman James R. Schlesinger announced it was apparently a successful test of the Spartan antiballistic missile warhead.

Maj. Gen. Edward Giller, the AEC's assistant general manager for military application, said he was satisfied that requirements for the weapon have been met.

"I'm confident from the data we have now that a repeat of this test won't be necessary," he said.

The AEC has another partially dug bomb shaft on Amchitka, but officials said the commission has no plans at this time for further tests on the island, used for Cannikin and two earlier tests--the 80-kiloton "Longshot" in 1965 and the one-megaton "Milrow" in 1969.

Despite predictions by opponents of the blast that the explosion might cause environmental damage, there were no destructive earthquakes or seismic sea waves and no radiation leakage into the atmosphere.

AEC officials said scores of monitoring devices on the island--sone of which ringed the 6,000-foot shaft into which the nuclear device was lowered--detected no trace of radiation. "We have conducted the test with complete safety," said Schlesinger, who brought his wife and two of their eight children to Amchitka as a show of confidence.

The area of the island at ground zero was covered with debris. A large, corrugated metal-side building and instrument trailers remained standing, however, although the building sagged slightly.

About 200 yards from ground zero, a small ridge-like hill was cracked severely--as much as a foot wide in some places.

A road stretching the length of the finger-shaped 43-mile long island, also was cracked in at least half a dozen places and was rendered temporarily impassable. Most of the fractured areas, repaired quickly, were located where earthen fills had been used to level the surface.

One mile from ground zero, the tundra-covered side of coastal hills slid into the seas. Rocky cliffs were shattered and piles of broken rock fell into the sea as far as half a mile up and down the coast.

The AEC said it may be months before scientists fully analyze data from films taken of instrumental panels and from recorders.

Based on the preliminary data, Schlesinger said: "It has been a successful test. We will be able to certify, I think, this device for introduction into the U.S. weapons stockpile."

India Won't "Allow...Menace"

NEW YORK (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said Sunday her country would not like to provoke a war with Pakistan, but she vowed that no one would menace her country's freedom.

"We have fought for many years for our freedom, and we are not going to see that freedom threatened by no matter who," Mrs. Gandhi said.

She spoke on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press," taped Saturday for airing Sunday during a one-day stopover here en route to Paris.

She met in Washington on Thursday and Friday with President Nixon and other U.S. officials.

Mrs. Gandhi said her talks produced a "greater understanding" of what she called "a real threat to Indian democracy and Indian stability." She described Nixon as "very anxious" to avoid a conflict, particularly one that could involve other powers.

India recently signed a friendship treaty with the Soviet Union. Pakistan President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan has the support of CHINA.

"We would not like to to anything which would provoke a war," Mrs. Gandhi said.

The prime minister said President Nixon was not so "definite" as to promise he would raise the subject of India's difficulties on his upcoming visits to Peking and Moscow.

"We shall be unhappy if the U.S. does anything which is what we consider against Indian interest," Mrs. Gandhi observed, "but we shall not lose our heads over it."

Administration officials have expressed confidence that Congress will appropriate $250 million in economic aid funds and $250 million in grains to both India and Pakistan to benefit East Pakistan's needy and its refugees in India.

The prime minister said that the only way to achieve peace in East Bengal and thus to stem the refugee flow was to initiate talks between imprisoned East Bengali leader Sheik Mujibur Rahman and Pakistan President Yahya Khan.

She said no useful purpose would be served by increasing the number of U.N. observers on the frontier.

"We are not against Pakistan, and we have only the friendliest feelings for the people of Pakistan.

"And we think it is tragic that Pakistan should feel it necessary for their unity and survival to imagine a constant confrontation with India."

The prime minister acknowledged, "Well, quite frankly, we do support the people of East Bengal in their struggle...They were asked to vote honestly and openly, and this is what they did. And now they are being punished for that."

Mrs. Gandhi arrived in Paris later in the day to begin a three-day official visit. Her schedule includes a visit to the tomb of the unknown soldier, talks with French Premier Jacques Chaban-Delmas and an audience with President Georges Pompidou.

Modular Credit Marathon: November 8-13

By DON GLICKSTEIN
MDC STAFF

The School of Education's bi-annual Modular Credit "Marathon" Week begins today with a theme rarely confronted by any institution: the combatting of institutionalized racism.

The Marathon, now in its fourth year, is an attempt by the School of Education to break down traditional course learning structures in favor of more flexible, "modular" offerings. Any graduate or undergraduate student in the Five Colleges, regardless of major, is eligible to receive modular credit by attending the events. When a student accumulates 15 modular credit, he is registered with the University or his college as having earned one regular credit. Modular credit forms are available from the Modular Credit Office, Room 227 C of the School of Education.

As an aspect of the School of Education's efforts in community service, the Marathon is open not only to faculty and students, but to the public. In past years, people from the world over have descended on the School of Education to participate in the lectures, seminars, workshops, film festivals and group presentations of the Marathons. Celebrities like John Holt, Loretta Long (Susan from Sesame Street), William Schutz (author of Joy), and Robert Choate (Nader-lie nutritionist) have conducted the events, as well as the impressive graduate students and faculty members of the School of Education.

Early this year, the School Council--the unique governing body of the School consisting of faculty, graduate and undergraduate students--voted to make the combatting of institutionalized racism a priority of the School. As a part of this effort, there will be an exhibit of photographs and posters entitled "Asian Perspective on American Racism" located all week outside the Education Auditorium. The experience of 110,000 Japanese-Americans in American concentration camps during World War II is depicted in the exhibit. Also included are materials on current events in other Asian American communities.

Of special interest to undergraduates in the fields of elementary and secondary education, as well as non-teaching majors in the School, is a 5 PM meeting Tuesday in the Education Auditorium to discuss problems that undergrads have been facing in the sometimes near-anarchal School. All undergraduates are urged to attend for credit this meeting.

SCHEDULE UP-DATING

The Collegian will print the daily Marathon Schedule. A supplementary sheet will be provided on a day-to-day basis which will contain additions and deletions from this schedule. Late changes will be shown also on the TV monitors in the Educational Building.

Rushing: an open invitation to see for yourself what different fraternities and sororities are like in an informal atmosphere. The rush program is open at any time during the semester.

Pledging: once rushing is completed and you have chosen a house, you are formally invited to pledge. The pledge period basically gives you and the house the chance to become acquainted before the actual initiation.

Scholarship: High academic achievement is encouraged at all times. Individual chapters have scholarships and loans available. The overall cum. average for sororities is 2.8 and for fraternities it is 2.3

Activities:

Social - Social life can become an important part of our educational experience. Due to the interaction of the members of the Greek System with each other and with other campus groups, the social perspective is broadened.

Service - The Greek system is directly responsible for many service activities, such as (1) The University Guide Service (2) UNICEF Drive (3) Freshman Mugbook (4) Homecoming Float Parade. In addition, many Greeks individually contribute their time to UMass services.

Sports - fraternity and sorority members have always been and still are well represented in both intramural and varsity sports.

Expenses: Comparison of 7 day room & board costs
Average cost of fraternity $674. including meals
Average cost of sorority $674. snacks and fees
Average cost of dormitory $654.

Drugs And D.A.

The state Legislature passed a bill last Friday afternoon which took the first steps toward reforming laws presently related to drugs in Massachusetts.

We hope that the Legislature will continue to move in the direction of reform.

It seems oddly inappropriate that at the same time our society's law-making institutions are moving towards reform of the drug laws that in our own Hampshire County, we have a duly elected District Attorney who seems to want to regress into the use of brutal and unjustified prison sentences for persons convicted under the present drug laws. District Attorney John Callahan recommended to the Judge in Northampton district court a 5-7 year term in the notorious Walpole State prison for a young man convicted of selling LSD.

Fortunately for us all (because the D.A. is elected by us), presiding Judge Andrew Linscott refused to send the former UMass student to prison and ordered him to Concord State Reformatory for an "indeterminate" term. The Concord institution is the State's only reform institution.

The convicted young man had been arrested on three counts of selling LSD and possession in last Spring's Gestapo-like drug raid on the UMass campus, along with more than 40 other students.

Callahan's un-reasonable attempts to lock up students in prisons seems to be a political action on his part, designed to placate his nervous town constituencies, who had brought the pressure on the D.A. which lead to the massive drug arrests and "on-going investigations" we have seen.

A 5-7 year prison term certainly isn't going to help either a society distressed over its children's use of drugs or the individuals arrested under as yet un-reformed drug laws.

We strongly question the motives of District Attorney Callahan and urge that in the numerous drug cases still to be heard as the result of last Spring's arrests, that the District Attorney show at least as much discretion and good sense as Judge Linscott.

Love and Marriage Contracts

WASHINGTON-The chief steward of the "Christina," Aristotle Onassis' yacht, has just written a book in which he says that Mr. Onassis and his wife, the former Jacqueline Kennedy, signed a marriage contract with 170 clauses in it.

According to the steward, Christian Kafarakis, the contract stipulates separate bedrooms for the couple, lays down the rules as to how much time the couple must spend together and spells out financial arrangements. These include a $600,000 yearly allowance for Mrs. Onassis in addition to any gifts Mr. Onassis might give her, as well as a provision that if Mr. Onassis ever leaves his wife, Mrs. Onassis will receive the sum of $9.6 million for every year of their marriage.

If Mrs. Onassis were to leave Mr. Onassis, she would receive a lump sum of $18 million under the terms of the alleged contract. Mr. Onassis also is said to have provided $100 million in his will--for Mrs. Onassis.

A spokeswoman for Mrs. Onassis categorically and unequivocally denied that such a marriage contract exists and called the story nonsense.

I have no knowledge of whether such a contract exists and shall leave Mr. Onassis and his ex-steward to fight that one out.

But I do know that marriage contracts, particularly in Europe, are not uncommon, and as a matter of fact since both my wife and I were living in Paris when we wanted to get married, we signed one.

Our marriage contract, which has 169 clauses in it, was thrashed out over a period of months before the wedding was agreed to.

It provides for the following, among other things:

--I have to spend half of the year with my wife (she tried to hold out for seven months). This time can be broken up any way I want it. I am permitted to go on lectures, attend openings of Hilton Hotels, go to pro football games and attend homecoming weekends. For every day less than six months that I don't spend with her, I have to give her $2.50 or its equivalent in trading stamps.

--I am committed under the terms of the contract to give my wife $600 a year for her pleasure, safety, clothes, hair dresser, cosmetics and the care of the house. The $600 does not include gasoline for the car, providing she uses it on family business.

--If I want to leave my wife, I must give her the sum of $50 for every year we have been married.

--If she wants to leave me, she will receive a flat settlement of $185.50.

--As long as we are living together, I must provide my wife with detergents, mops, plastic garbage bags and a lawnmower.

--I also am obligated to pay for the veterinarian in case we have a dog.

--While we are married, my wife has custody of the children all day and most evenings. For this she is given the extra sum of $10 a week.

--If we have a fight, I must be the one to sleep on the couch in the living room

--I must also give her a sum of $5 if I pay too much attention to another girl at a party.

These are more or less the financial details of our marriage contract, and the only reason I'm revealing them at this time is that our cleaning woman just quit, and I understand she's going to sell the terms to the National Enquirer. It would embarrass my wife something terrible if the marriage agreement ever became public.

Living Off The Land

By SKIP CASPER
STUDENT SENATOR - BROWN

There is little doubt in my mind that the Sylvan Residential Area is faltering in its first weeks of existence. There are so many things lacking here, there really isn't much of a place to begin. But that is really irrelevant, for I feel that there are more immediate concerns for us.

First of all, the apathy which ravages this area is troubling those of us who are devoting much of our time to changing this place. The people whom I am referring to are the floor representatives, the Student Senators , the administrators in the Area Directors Office and a mere handful of other individuals. How do the residents expect any form of results if they won't take the opportunity to express their views and opinions to their elected officers? It's essential to bridge this communication gap so that we can work toward the goals of your choice.

As a direct consequence of this apathy, we find ourselves in a situation where many individuals have demonstrated a total lack of concern for others. Personally, I am appalled by the needs of adolescents, who bombard us with profanities, irritate us with excessive noise, as well as startling and endangering us with their fireworks. It has gone much too far.

As a point of information, it might benefit you to read the "Code of Student Conduct" which you will find in your 71-72 Student Handbook. Part I, Section II-B, Clause 1 prohibits the harassment of another person. Certainly the boisterous verbal abuse would be considered harassment of not one, but several people. Also, fireworks are regarded as dangerous weapons in the Commonwealth Part I, Section II-B, Clause 3 prohibits the possession or use of fireworks on this campus. The maximum penalty for both of the above -mentioned offenses is separation from the University.

Have we reached the point where we can't handle these conflicts ourselves? If we have, I think it is time that we consider filing complaints with the Attorney Generals Office in regards to all alleged offenses. Although this motion repulses me, I think that we have reached the stage where it is essential to begin to act like a community. I encourage any Sylvan resident who has a complaint to make, to seekout Henry Bouffard, the Attorney General, whose office is in 921 Campus Center or to contact me, who as a judicial advocate, will see that your complaint is processed.

The Sylvan Area has great potential. There have been several ideas for improvements floating around all of which need to be channelled. Things like dark rooms, music studios, a hot food snack bar, a computer hook-up and a "Munchy's" type operation can all become a reality if people are willing to exert the effort. At this moment, your student senators are investigating the lack of University provided facilities, high room rents, and the co-ed proportionment situation. I urge you to offer them your suggestions and aid. I'm making this plea because I feel that the Sylvan Area can be made one of the most attractive living areas on campus, and I don't want it to become an area where the housing office will place people for no other reason than that there are no other housing spaces available on campus.

"IF AT FIRST YOU DON'T SUCCEED..."

Letters To The Editor

A Documented Response - S.H.L.

To the Editor:

I would like to take the opportunity to reply to the letter in MDC, Nov. 4, entitled "A Question of Values."

Student Activities Tax Funding is granted by the Student Senate. The prime consideration for the granting of such funds is whether the organization requesting an appropriation fulfills a useful role to the undergraduates and whether it really requires the funds it is seeking.

The Student Homophile League at UMass has a dual purpose. Its supportive function is to provide the opportunity for homosexuals to develop a positive self concept. Its educational function is to dispel myths concerning homosexuality as a life style through the education of the community.

Several hundred homosexuals at UMass have in the past year become involved in the supportive activities of SHL. These activities involve weekly meetings at which we have consciousness raising, visiting lecturers on law, medical problems, the draft, religion and any other topic that has an impact on our life style. We also have purely social events such as coffee hours and several dances a semester.

The year none of the money SHL requested from SATF was budgeted for these supportive activities. All social events are paid for by participating members. Thirty members paid their own way to NYC this summer for a weekend political action. Amherst Women's Liberation donated the registration fee for half the delegates to New Haven in August; the rest came out of members' pockets.

Several thousand UMass undergraduates have had direct contact with SHL though its educational activities. Not only have we had three hours of radio time on WFCR and WMUA to answer questions on homosexuality, but in 12 months through our Speakers' Bureau we have provided volunteer Gay Speakers upon request to over 65 University classes (approximately 1700 undergraduates). Within the last month we have set up a counseling service in conjunction with University Health Services, Room-To-Move and Valley Women's Center. We have not used Student Senate appropriated funds for any of these activities, nor do we plan to.

Itemization

We have asked for and been appropriated funds ($785) for the following activities all directly concerned with peer education; 1. Duplicating Supplies and Services-the largest item on the budget ($275 or 35% of total) will be used for publication of papers on VD and Consciousness Raising, a monthly information newsletter, a bibliography and an information booklet on homosexuality, xeroxing of magazine articles on homosexuality and any other activities that come up during the year, all available to the total community either at meetings or in the SHL office. The information booklet is particularly important because there is a serious lack of facts about homosexuality. The same questions are asked time and time again in classes. A booklet is being written to answer all of them and will be available for class use as well as to the general public. 2. Books and Subscriptions-25% of the budget will allow us to renew ten subscriptions, add 6 more, and purchase 20-30 (paperback whenever possible, including a 10% discount from some bookstores for being a homophile organization.) Regular magazines and newspapers have a blackout policy regarding news about Gays. These publications are not available in the area for purchase and yet are a very necessary source of information on legal, political and economic status of homosexuals and the only presently viable form of information exchange between Gay communities. Anyone who has looked for books in the UMass libraries is very aware of the serious lack of volumes on homosexuality. Though members have donated some books to our library there is a need for a good research library on the subject. We are building one-as well as an achives of several hundred pamphlets, newspaper clippings and magazine articles, all of which have been used by numerous UMass students researching homosexuality, available five days a week to anyone.

The rest of the budget goes for advertising to make our services known, a telephone in the office, postage, pamphlets for free distribution, and office supplies.

The argument that SHL was a "special interest group" and as such did not qualify for funding was mentioned during debate on the Senate floor when our budget was passed. A person's sexual identity is not something taken up like a hobby.

Kinsey figures

All statistical surveys done by authorities, and our own experience in SHL, indicates that homosexuality is more than a "special interest" to a large number of people. Kinsey indicates in his study (recognized as the largest and most authoritative done) that 37% of males at some time have a homosexual experience to the point of orgasm, and 50% have felt homosexual arousal. Figures for females comparably 1/3-1/2 less. Kinsey's figures are substantiated by other independent studies, some as recent as 1970.

Statistically a very large portion of our population personally experiences homosexual feelings. The Student Homphile League does not recruit homosexuals; it tries to help people understand their own feelings and build healthy self concepts no matter what the sexual persuasion.

Is SHL more deserving of funds than other projects helping the disadvantaged and the retarded? The writer of Thursday's letter seemed to infer that homosexuals are less deserving. This is not to say that Boltwood and J.O.E. Projects are not deserving of funds; the Senate recognizes that. I feel the priority given SHL in this instance was based upon the fact that the Student Homophile League is directly reaching a very substantial number of undergraduates right here on this campus, and that the request for funds was comparitively very little in view of the many services rendered.

Wow, Man... Community

To the Editor:

The Brotherhood of the Spirit, a community of 250 people based on the love that people can share, will be participating in the fall (School of Education) Marathon. We, in the community, have stopped long enough to see what we really want. We have found that one's material situation need not stop a person from being happy; that all people need to do is to really look at each other and attempt to create something together. There is an attraction between all people that exists when someone looks for this rather than the fear, hatred, or greed that separates people. We do not believe that people necessarily have to agree or like each other. We do believe that people should be respectful and open in their thoughts to each other. By maintaining this openness, all people can function together. We do not consider these ideals to be a religion or a philosophy, but we attempt to live by them.

We hope to hold a course next semester in which each student will be expected to establish a meaningful understanding with each other student. If you are at all interested in the course or in talking to us, come and see us during the Marathon.

Coupon Appeal

To the Editor:

Could you help an out-of-state gal whose husband is in the Air Force here?

My home state of Wyoming needs nearly 300,000 more Betty Crocker coupons to meet the required 700,000 for a kidney transplant dialysis machine. This will be placed in a new hospital in Rawlins, Wyoming. The coupons may even be outdated.

The deadline for me to send them is November 20. Won't some of you kind people help?

Priority of Students

To the Editor:

I would like to respond to a letter written by Dick Wentworth, Bob Boudreau, Stu Heller, and John England, concerning the Student Senate funding of the Student Homophile League. I feel that if a choice has to made because of a shortage of funds between worthy volunteer projects such as the Boltwood Project, Juvenile Opportunity Extention, and the Orchard Hill Tutorial Service, and the Student Homophile League, the money should go to a program dealing directly with the needs of students on this campus. S.H.L.'s justification for funding speaks for itself as to how they are fulfilling the needs of gay students. But their main goal of communications is very important for every person on this campus. It is the fear and ignorance surrounding homosexuality that has distorted the matter so greatly that a sexual relationship has come to mean a whole life style.

I am very disappointed that the Boltwood Project, J.O.E., and O.H.T.S. could not be given the financial support they so badly need. But I agree with the decision of the Student Senate and firmly believe that a priority must be given to the needs of the students of this campus.

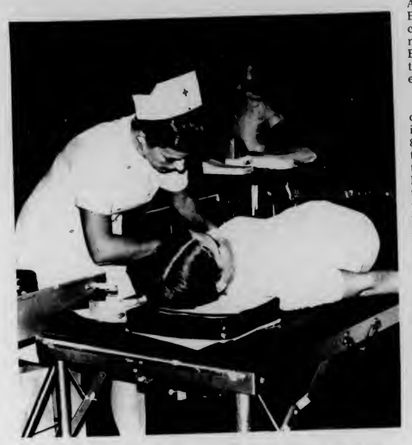
Red Cross Blood Drive Starts Today

The annual Red Cross Blood Drive at UMass will be Nov. 8-11, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

This year's drive has been extended from three days to four in order to accommodate the many donors that were turned away last year.

Marcia Parks, Angela Oleviri and Dave Stryke, student chairmen of the drive, predict that last year's record collection of 871 pints of blood will be broken this year.

Twice a year the two campus service fraternities, Alpha Phi Omega and Gamma Sigma Sigma, together with the University Women take on the job of running the Red Cross Blood Drive.



APO and Gamma Sigma Sigma this week will recruit and schedule student donors and next week they will set up the Bloodmobile equipment and serving as aides to the staff.

These two student organizations, affiliated with about 600 chapters throughout the country, sponsor or assist in about 20 different campus and community projects during the year.

Over 150 other volunteers will also be working on the blood program. Members of the University Women are expected to contribute more than 400 hours of work and the Senior Citizens Club of Amherst will make sandwiches to be served in the canteen.

All members of the community are urged to join the students in donating blood. Walk-in donors will be accepted or residents may make an appointed by contacting Mrs. Thomas Fox, chairman of University Women, or Mrs. John Noyes, assistant chairman.

The Bloodmobile will be in the auditorium of the Campus Center, Monday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and Tuesday through Thursday, 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.

The Bloodmobile will be in the Campus Center Auditorium taking blood donations from students starting today.

Spain Arrests Rightists After Paintings Destroyed

MADRID—The Spanish police made eight arrests early this morning after an extreme right-wing group raided an art gallery last night, destroying or stealing 24 Picasso engravings.

The raiders, clad in dark blue and calling themselves the "Anti - Marxist Commandos," smashed glass frames, slashed some engravings and poured acid on others and left handbills accusing Picasso of financing Communism and homosexuality in Spain.

The raid has aroused public opinion, and most of the press reported it in detail and wrote angry editorials. It has stirred up new demands for control of the handful of strong-arm rightists groups that have operated here in recent years, assaulting persons or institutions they suspect of leftism. Ten days ago three bookstores in Madrid were attacked for exhibiting books on Picasso.

Today's rapid police action was something of a novelty. In the past, the strong-arm groups, who are widely believed to have influential protectors in parts of the Government, army and police, have gone untouched. This time, the suspects were rounded up within hours of the raid, most of them at home.

The Theo Gallery had been marking Picasso's 90th birthday, by showing 26 prints borrowed from the Knoedler Gallery in Paris. The prints are part of the "Suite Vollard," a series done in the early nineteen-thirties, mostly on the theme of the Minotaur or the artist in his studio.

According to Elvira Mignoni, co-owner of the gallery with her husband Fernando, estimated the loss at $100,000. The engravings were insured.

This morning the gallery was in wreckage. Most of the pieces of the engravings had been gathered up, but a single Minotaur, cut in two and splotched yellow with acid, stared up from the floor.

Bahai's Celebrate

The Baha'i Community of Amherst will join millions of Baha'is around the world in commemoration of the 154th Anniversary of the Birth of Baha'u'llah, Prophet-Founder of the Baha'i Faith on Thursday evening, November 12.

On this evening, there will be a celebration at the Colonial Lounge in the UMass Student Union, at 8:00. The public is invited to share the time with the Baha'is. For those who are unfamiliar with the Baha'i Faith, there will be a short talk given by Mark Sedan. Sedan is president of KIVA Films, a firm which in the past has produced an assortment of award-winning films concerning a number of topics. Among them are 12 films in the "Sesame Street" series, "Indian Circle", (a film about young Indian people in America), and 8 programs for the NBC childrens' series "Take a Giant Step". In addition to Sedan's talk, one of these NBC series films, entitled "Take a Giant Step" and concerning the widely praised singing group, Seals and Crofts, will be shown.

The theme of this year's observance is "Baha'u'llah–Unifier of Mankind."

Mrs. Florence Conway, Chairman of the Amherst Baha'i Community, states:

"In 1863, Baha'u'llah whose name means "the Glory of God," proclaimed to the world of advent of a new Revelation from God. He affirmed that His coming represented not only the second coming of Christ but also the fulfillment of similar prophesies found in all Holy Books. To the Jews He was the Everlasting Father, the Lord of Hosts."

According to Mrs. Conway, "The Revelation of Baha'u'llah was either ignored or rejected by the religious leaders and authorities of His day. Today the Baha'i Faith has spread to every part of the world and is bringing together people of diverse races, nationalities, and backgrounds. Baha'u'llah proclaimed to mankind that the long-awaited age of world peace and world unity had at last dawned, and that He was the Bearer of God's Word for this new age."

Baha'u'llah was born in Tihran, Iran on November 12, 1817. For His teachings, Baha'u'llah suffered denial, exile and imprisonment for most of His life. He spent most of this imprisonment in the Holy Land, then under the rule of Turkey. His tomb, a Baha'i shrine, is located across the bay from Haifa, Israel, where on Mount Carmel is located the World Center of the Baha'i Faith.

ACTION - Helping People

By DON SAINT-PIERRE

Speaking at the University of Nebraska in 1970, President Nixon questioned if students today have the ability to understand and help those people in the urban ghettos who so desperately need it.

He suggested a plan for a living education instead of a lecture one. Now just over one year later that challenge has been accepted and more than met by students participating in the ACTION program.

Formally titled the University Year For Action, this new federal agency provides funds for select colleges and universities to place interested students in the contemporary urban environment, and to provide the tools necessary to help them better the lives of those people.

One

Robert Woodbury, Associate Provost for Special Programs, explained how ACTION came to Amherst. He said the federal government approached UMass around August 1st of this year stating the major points of the program and asking if the university could have it operating for the fall semester.

"It was a challenge, a big one, but our staff put in the extra effort needed, and the program is running full-speed now, Woodbury said.

The university was to provide 50 acceptable students who would work at local social agencies for one year, at which time they would be awarded 30 academic credits, and, hopefully, have gained a new outlook on life.

Woodbury continued, "The problem of choosing students was one we, as administrative staff, felt unqualified for. We gave the individual schools full rein in choosing the participants."

Each of the schools approached the problem differently, yet efficiently, as they were to present their choices to the university before Septemver 1st, or within three weeks. The School of English, as an example, requested all faculty members on campus at the time to provide names of students they considered acceptable for the program. They were to use whatever standards they wished. Then the schools attempted contacting the students, which can be quite difficult during the summer.

By September the 200 applicants from the schools had been reduced to the present 49.

Woodbury said, "It was the enthusiasm and work of all members of the university who helped, that allowed UMass to be chosen as one of the 11 campuses in the country which has an operating ACTION program."

After an intensive screening process the students selected the agencies at which they would work. They then participated in training programs designed to prepare them for their year in the community.

The ACTION students are working at such places as: the Hampshire County Jail, Belchertown State Training School, Springfield Model Cities, SASSI Prep of Springfield, and the Friendly House of Worcester.

"The children...want only love and understanding.
It's beautiful knowing you've made someone happy."

Two

Recently the Collegian travelled with Bill Burke, the program's administrative manager, to visit some of the students at work.

The first stop was the Belchertown State School which cares for and trains the mentally retarded. In the basement of one of the children's dormitories we talked with Karen Scorr, a Dance and Physical Education major. She was playing a game with 8-year-old Ellen which helped her develope her eye and hand movements. Karen said that the ACTION program has had a profound effect on her. She now finds herself reading and understanding books about the mentally retarded that would have meant nothing to her a year ago. She said, "It means so much more when the problems being described in a book are the ones you are trying to solve that day." She felt that all students should have the opportunity to learn through experience as she is.

Karen has started dance and motion exercises with the children which she feels has been extremely successful so far. She said, "The children and adults here want only love and understanding. It's a beautiful thing to go home at night knowing you've made someone happy."

In Holyoke we spoke with Richard Simmons and Janet Sheppard, both pre-law students at the university. They are working at the Holyoke Legal Services Center which provides legal aid for low income families.

Rich said that they spend most of their time working with divorce cases, most of which don't go to court but are settled in the office.

Janet added that she feels her presence "is helpful for the clients, in that they come to the office expecting a fast talking, unconcerned lawyer; most are very happy to have another woman to help them through the uncomfortable work."

Rich said that he's "getting and learning more here" than he would have ever accomplished in one year at the university. He felt that a scholastic education is essential as a foundation, "but it isn't an end in itself. All students should spend some time in the community, if just to gain a sense of humanity."

Janet said that their "work isn't where the children can come to both enjoy themselves and learn. The room was large and noisy with happy, smiling children everywhere. Shouting above the din, Larry said that he's "worked in schools in both England and the States," but he's "never experienced anything like this."

Explaining that his first reaction to the neighborhood and school was "shock", he said this quickly passed when he "realized the tremendous potential that's here, which is going to go untapped if someone doesn't help these kids out."

He was about to expound upon his statement when two boys interrupted and reminded him that he promised to read to them.

She said SALT is there to provide these students who want a place to learn newspaper, photography and writing. The weekly's rise in circulation is an indication of the success of the school. Robin further stated that "ACTION does more than put university students in the community to learn; it also provides the community with a contact to the university. It's a two-way street with both sides benefiting."

We next travelled to the Springfield Boys's Club where Juan Carlos Nieves was "working overtime". During the day Juan works in the Springfield Public Schools as an instructor in physical education. He said his "toughest job is getting equipment" as he is the first person ever to approach these schools with P.E.

It was now nearing 5:00 P.M. and Juan was supervising a "swim-in" at the pool. When the swimming was over, everyone went to the back of the building for apple dunking with the girls, who had just baked cookies for the occasion.

Juan was like a sheep dog with his flock, running back and forth, keeping order, and insuring everything was accomplished. He shouted one order in Spanish, the next in English, then changed languages in the middle of the next.

The problem of language has been a major one for the ACTION students. Because most are working in Puerto Rican neighborhoods, communications is sometimes extremely difficult. To overcome this handicap they have contracted, for themselves, an instructor to provide them with a crash program in conversational Spanish.

The students are encouraged to live in the communities in which they are working. A $3,000 housing allowance is provided by the program for this. At a meeting of about 15 ACTION students in Juan's apartment in Springfield the Spanish lessons and a summer camp were discussed.

The camp is being organized and developed by the ACTION students. This idea surfaced when they first realized that most of the children they are working with have never had a camping experience. The meeting was called to deal with where and when to have it (they are hoping to get federal funding so the children will not have to pay).

One obvious element at the meeting was the enthusiasm with which the students were attacking the problems. All had begun early that morning, doing jobs they enjoyed doing, and doing them well. Now, at 11 P.M., the excitement continued as they developed and created a summer camp. As one student said, "We're going to take these kids out of these crumbling, dirty, dismal buildings and introduce them to trees, clean water and flowers. Isn't that something to get excited about?"

It won't change history,
"just help some people... through some difficult times."

Three

Our next step was The Street Academy System of Springfield or SASSI Prep. Here Robin Smith is working on the schools' community newspaper "Springfield Life and Times" or "SALT." She said that SASSI "is for the dropout; the young person who feels stifled by traditional education and wants to try a different route."

The portal above the school's door proclaims "Everyone's a star" and that's what SASSI is trying to do. She said that "SASSI accepts every applicant, feels them out with tests and exercises and finds where their interest lies. Then the students go at their own pace learning what they really want to learn."

Action volunteer at work in Springfield. He is one of thirty UMass students spending a year working in and around this area at various social action projects.

Four

Back at the university, Dr. Ruth Burgen, the University for Action Director, explained that she is trying to get a second phase begun, in which 40 more UMass students will begin their year in the community in February. She said she hopes "to continue expanding the program as far as possible" but, even though most students are enthusiastic about the program, "certain members of the faculty and staff who believe a traditional education is the only approach" are causing some problems.

Miss Burgen said these problems arise when schools formulate the criteria for the ACTION students to gain their 30 academic credits. But, she does not feel this will be a permanent problem.

The President's challenge has been met. Students are demonstrating that they are responsible, and can work for the betterment of their fellow man. This is surely a venture in which no one will lose, indeed everyone will win.

BESTED BY BARNYARD ROOSTER-A 17-pound eagle with 7 1/2 ft. wing span lost a fight with rooster in farmer Dan Brown's yard when he swooped in with apparent intent to pluck a chicken. Rooster held by Brown at right fought eagle beak and spur for 100 feet across yard and stunned it with a spur to the head. Emerson Henson, center, and Brown pinned eagle and found it had a broken wing. Richard Knapp, left, helped Brown hold eagle for picture before they sent it to Ohio State University at Columbus for treatment.

Maples Dying From Lack of Water

A university-sponsored study of the slow dieback of New England sugar-maples indicates that the trees literally starve from lack of water.

Research conducted by Dr. Walter M. Banfield, plant pathologist at UMass sheds new light on the problem of maple decline that takes place for no apparent reason such as insects or disease. He said two factors commonly cited--applications of deicing salt and auto exhaust emissions--actually have little to do with the problem.

The "total environment of the tree" often is affected severely by road and highway construction and use, and this is the primary cause of decline, Dr. Banfield said. Factors in this include excessive water loss by trees that are fully exposed to sun and wind, and the location of trees on poor sites characterized by arid sandy soils, lack of ground cover and shade.

Over the last six years Dr. Banfield has observed hundreds of maples in different types of settings. Those in the sheltered hardwood forest are clearly subject to less exposure and stress for water than those by the roadside, he said.

The plant pathologist pointed out that although his study was limited to sugar maples, the same disease symptoms are produced on many other broad-leaf trees and shrubs by lack of water.

These excerpts from Dr. Banfield's report demonstrate how different environments affect tree health:

--The flow of air past declining roadside trees averaged 32 miles a day versus just under three miles a day in a normal forest setting.

--Soil temperature in the forest averaged 72 degrees but was 110 degrees beneath typical exposed trees beside a paved road in summer.

--Soil moisture beneath dying roadside trees fell to less than five per cent in drought periods, compared to at least 15 per cent in a normal forest setting. (When the soil moisture around experimental trees drops to this level, threes show the same disease symptoms--marginal scorch of leaves, early defoliation and die-back.)

--Sunlight ratings on the ground beneath trees were much higher for exposed trees than for those in the forest.

--Soil density was twice as high at the roadside as in the forest. Pedestrians and traffic compact the soil so showers do not help. The water runs away without reaching the roots.

--Relative humidity was much lower at the roadside.

These environmental factors add up to high "evapotranspiration," or water loss from exposed trees, Dr. Banfield said. Trees at the roadside lose nearly three times as much water as trees in the forest.

"Injury due to highway construction and pipeline installation aggravate the problem," he said, and it is complicated further by the fact that these trees show no effects of root damage until several years after the injuries have occurred.

"Highway construction and improvement normally involves grading that covers some roots and cuts off essential water. The tree still stands and it looks good, but in a critical rainfall year that tree is the first to show symptoms of drought."

Dr. Banfield reported that some roadside trees in his study show no symptoms of decline because they stand in a low area and thus get plenty of water. Similar trees that are equally exposed but stand on the top of a hill do show evidence of die-back caused by lack of moisture, he said.

"This information tends to refute the argument that salt damages the trees," Dr. Banfield said. "Both sets of trees are equally exposed to winter salt but the low-lying trees standing in a more favorable environment with respect to abundance of soil water do not show symptoms of decline."

In fact, Dr. Banfield said, he has no evidence that road salt is to blame for ill health of trees, although heavy applications are known to damage certain types of vegetation located within a few feet of the roadside. "You can rule out salt because sugar maple decline is not limited to the roadside," he said

"I have observed decline in trees half a mile from the road," Dr. Banfield reported. "And I have seen health sugar maples within 10 feet of a heavily salted roadway. The tree's total environment is the deciding factor," he said.

Youth Killed By 'Toy' Gun

CRANSTON, R.I. (AP)-A 20-year-old Cranston youth, believed to have accidentally shot and killed himself in a Cranston tavern late Saturday night, may have thought he was holding a toy-pistol.

Police Sgt. George F. Holt called the fatal shooting of Thomas J. Salisbury, 20, of 719 Dyer Ave., Cranston, accidental, but said an investigation would continue.

Sgt. Holt said police received an anonymous telephone call shortly before midnight, that a man had been accidently shot inside the Cricket Cafe.

When police arrived at the scene they found Salisbury lying in a pool of blood on the floor behind the bar, with a .38 caliber pistol underneath him.

Police questioned 11 persons inside the cafe at the time of the shooting, and from their testimony pieced the following account of the shooting.

Kenneth Phillips Sr., owner of the cafe, who was not present at the time of the shooting, legally kept a .38 caliber pistol behind the bar, under the counter.

According the police reports, prior to the shooting Anthony Caprio, 23, of Cranston, the bartender, Salisbury and some patrons were engaged in "horseplay" with a toy gun.

Model Community Burns

COLUMBIA, Md. (AP) - An early morning fire swept through five townhouses here Sunday and a fire official complained the layout of the so-called model community hindered men fighting the blaze.

"The buildings are arranged to be aesthetically pleasing to the eye, and not for aiding firemen," said John J. Poetker, the Howard County fire chief.

A spokesman for the Rouse Co., developers of Columbia, called the charges "ridiculous."

W. Scott Ditch, vice president of public affairs for Rouse, said, "Everything in Columbia is in total compliance with existing coded and we feel that county standards are entirely adequate. This kind of thing could have happened anywhere."

Poetker acknowledged that Columbia was in compliance with county regulations but added that he feels there is a need for more fire stops-non-combustible walls made of cinder blocks or brick"

The fire left 12 families homeless, but the only injury was to a fireman who suffered a burned hand. Officials said it started in the basement of one of the townhouses, apparently because a gas-fired furnace caught fire.

Teenager Elected Mayor

Nineteen-year-old Jody Smith, mayor-elect of a tiny northwest Iowa town, says he never could have won if he had to rely entirely on the youth vote.

Smith, who graduated in June from Ayrshire Consolidated Schools, defeated four-time Mayor E.B. Swanson by 48 votes Tuesday, 83-35.

"There's only between nine and 12 voters who are 18-20 years old in the town," Smith said Wednesday. "I had their support, plus the support of the other townspeople."

Smith, now enrolled at Iowa Lakes Community College, called for a "time for change" during his campaign and he said the election results indicated most voters were ready.

Ayrshire has 243 residents.

Irish PM To Face Vote Of Confidence

DUBLIN (AP) - Jack Lynch, the mild-mannered prime minister of the Irish Republic, is fighting for his political life.

A rebellion in his Fianna Fail party has put his fate in the hands of two ministers he ousted from the Cabinet in a gun-running scandal last year involving Northern Ireland.

The showdown comes Wednesday. Lynch faces a vote of confidence in the Dail-the 144man parliament equally divided between the government and all other parties.

Lynch has dropped his normally quiet facade to pass the word that either the ex-ministers--Charles Haughey and Neil Baney--go along with the government or risk expulsion from the party.

Lynch's survival depends on their votes and that of at least one independent-and in the event of a tie the speaker of the house.

Failure to get a vote of confidence would mean Lynch must resign and call a general election before Christmas.

Col. Fisher Heads AFROTC

In the spring of 1971, a new face arrived to replace retiring Col. Leon Friedman. The new head of AFROTC, Col. Paul H. Fisher, projects an energetic and spirited image to all that he meets.

A graduate of Stetson University, Col. Fisher entered the Air Corps meterology cadet program at M.I.T. in 1942. While he was there, Col. Fisher served as a research assistant and earned his graduate degree in 1944. After World War II, Col. Fisher flew hurricane reconnaissance then returned to civilian life as a college professor.

In 1949 Col. Fisher served on the staff of the U.S. Weather Bureau in Washington, and returned to military duty in the Air Force in 1950. Col. Fisher has served overseas tours in Japan, England and Southeast Asia.

Before Col. Fisher arrived at UMass, he served as chief of Operations of the Fourth Weather Wing, the unit which supports the North American Air Defense Command and operates the U.S.A.F. solar-geophysical observation and forecast network. Col. Fisher brings with him his twenty-six years of active service in the fulfillment of his duties as administrator of the AFROTC program at UMass, and the instructor of the Air Science 100 and 200 courses.

"Over-21" Club Started Here For Vets, Grads, & Others

By PEGGY McKOAN

Are you a veteran and finding it hard getting back into college life? Are you a grad student and finding that most of your friends are white rats or microbes? Are you a secretary and finding the only faces you know are the girls in the office?

If you find yourself in one of these ruts or some other rut that's like them, the "Over-21 Club" may be able to help you.

A singles club, started on campus a month ago, is still a relative unknown among the UMass community. Penny Demarest, a member of the publicity committee said, "We've placed notices in 'The Bulletin' for the meetings at Memorial Hall, but it's still news to most people."

Sponsored by R.S.O., the "Over-21 Club" is open to all single undergrads, graduate students, staff and faculty of UMass, age twenty-one and older.

The purpose of the club is to give single people an opportunity to meet other singles in a relaxed atmosphere.

"It's not a mixer or a dating set-up," Miss Demarest said. "It gives singles a place to go, to share common interests or find new ones."

The club plans to start having get-togethers on a regular basis, possibly every two weeks. If there is enough interest in the club, a variety of activities will be added to the format.

"We hope to organize Happy Hours, ski trips and any other things people are interested in," said Miss Demarest.

She also said that broader publicity is planned for future meetings of the "Over-21 Coub" so that all interested members of the University community can become involved.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

For me, Scorpio is Katharine Hepburn, Burt Lancaster, Dr. Jonas Salk, Robert Vaughn: It is also Her Serene Highness Princess Grace of Monaco, very much aware of her sign and its implications, quite proud of it, too, to the extend of imprinting the Scorpe symbol of high-flying eagle and lowly scorpion on parts of her apparel.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Responses tend now to be emotional rather than intellectual. Be receptive to one who has your best interests at heart. Avoid extremes. Adhere to diet, health resolutions. Change of scenery is due.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Challenge due; stress ability to be flexible. Overcome tendency to be stubborn. One who cares has been singing your praises. Don't disappoint by display of temperament. Entertain at home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis on movement, including short journeys. Answer calls, messages involves relatives, neighbors. Leo individual could figure prominently. Praise others and compliments will be returned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Spotlight on money, possessions, ability to collect what you need. Be ready for change, travel, a variety of experiences. Co-operate with Gemini, Leo individuals. Open lines of communication.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Lunar cycle is such that doors of opportunity open. You have but to enter. Take initiative and first step. Welcome new chances, challenges, contacts. Love is in picture. You will be happier.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Activity may center around hospital, group, institution. Organize efforts. Gain co operation of club members. Build bridges of friendship. Do so in quiet, behind scenes manner. Avoid sensationalism.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Creative resources are brought into play. You can make friends, influence people. Key is to follow through; no halfway measures. Older person knows score. Heed voice of experience. Then you gain.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Challenge due; you are tested. Success indicated if you exhibit self confidence. Others watch, wait for cue. Doubl on your part can cause despair. One in aulhority wants your opinion.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good lunar aspect now coincides with journeys, special educational project. Stress independence of thought, action. Break through red tape. Get to heart of matter.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): What you do may be more expensive than usual. Keep something in reserve. Means don't reveal complete hand. Discretion now definitely is better part of valor. You will comprehend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on permanent relationships, contracts and contacts with public. Judgment, intuition may not be as sharp as usual. Know this; defer to mate or business partner. Ideas need more development.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Check tendency to take others for granted. Key is to evaluate, to perceive needs of co-workers, close associates. One who performs special service may feel slighted. Show appreciation for unique contributions.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY, you are able to successfully use material at hand. You make do in many areas which would leave others at a loss. Enterprise begun this year is due to grow and prosper. Association with Leo individual could bring profits.

Celtics Draw Poorly

By STEVE GERSHMAN

So, you say Boston is a major league sports town. Well, we have the Bruins, Braves, Patriots, Red Sox, Celtics,--Celtics, oh yes, they're that bunch of giant orphans who share our palace on Causeway Street with the Bruins and Braves. Boston has proudly exalted with the Bruins and Braves, while making the Celtics the ugly stepsister to hockey. People only go to see the Celts when they can't see the Bruins, or the Braves are out of town. A team with a history like the Celtics, deserve a better fate than this.

From the mid 1950's to the late 1960's the Celtics won 11 championships in 13 seasons, and 9 in a row at one time. They brought more glory to Boston than any other team has, or ever will. Called by many the greatest pro sports team ever assembled, Boston had so much talent that several All Stars had to sit on the bench. Perhaps the two greatest basketball players of all time played right here for the Celts in the persons of Bill Russell and Bob Cousey.

Nobody ever could say this was a dull team as they ran and battled, and were coached by mister colorful, Red Auerbach. So, can anyone explain why this team played before so many empty seats night after night at the garden? The losing Bruins drew more fans than the champions. On the road the Celts far outdrew their home attendance. In a sports town like Boston, where every kid plays basketball, it doesn't make sense.

Some people said the Celts couldn't draw because people were bored with winning all the time. That's an incredible statement and completely absurd. Just look at how the Yankees and Packers drew while they kept winning.

For the past 3 seasons the Celts have been rebuilding and polishing up their game. Attendance naturally dropped the past 2 years as the team couldn't make the playoffs for the first time in almost 15 years. But, late in last year the Celts started to look like a winner again. Youngsters Jo-Jo White, Don Chaney, Steve Kuberski, and Dave Cowens, are maturing and playing great ball. Mix in the experience of John Havlicek, Don Nelson, and Art Williams, and the Celtics are a tough oncoming team.

At the time of this writing, the Celts are in first place and the only team to beat the champion Milwaukee Bucks. They play some of the most exciting basketball anywhere, stressing running. So why did they only draw less than 3,000 one night two weeks ago, or average under 8,000 fans so far? Why do so many seats remain empty every game? The minor league Braves outdraw the Celtics.

For over 5 years the Celtics have not raised ticket prices and retain just about the cheapest seats in pro ball. You can see this exciting young team for only $2.00. There is plenty of rugged contact and banging for those who like contact. When 7 footers pound the board, for a rebound, there is bound to be violent contact. The Celtics play a lot of Friday and Sunday games so it is easy to get to see them. So the question remains: Why don't they draw well? I wish I could answer that, and so do the Celtics. I'm sure of one thing though, Boston does not deserve the Celtics. Maybe if they threaten to leave people will come out. It seems sad anything like this should have to happen.

Jets Stun Chiefs; Howfield FG Decides

NEW YORK (AP)-Bobby Howfield's 39-yard field goal in the fourth quarter and the capricious winds of Shea Stadium combined to give the New York Jets a stunning 13-10 National Football League victory over the powerful Kansas City Chiefs Sunday.

The loss left the Chiefs, who came into the game tied with Oakland for first place in the Western Division of the American Conference, with a 5-2-1 record.

The injury-riddled Jets, meanwhile, were winning only their third game against five losses.

But the Jets were aided by the unpredictable winds of Shea Stadium, which whipped around the oval in all directions with gusts as high as 35 miles an hour.

That handicapped the Lenny Dawson-to-Otis Taylor passing combination that had been setting the conference on fire, enabling Dawson to connect with his favorite target only twice during the game.

The wind also blew off target a 39-yard field goal attempt by Kansas City's Jan Stenerud just minutes before Howfield connected for his game-winner.

Howfield got his opportunity only after a running-into-the-kicker penalty by linebacker Bob Stein and a personal foul by defensive back Jim Marsalis kept a Jets' drive moving.

Marsalis' foul on a 17-yard pass from Bob Davis to Don Maynard put the ball on the Kansas City 30 and four plays later, Howfield kicked his winning goal from almost the same spot at which Stenerud had missed.

Frosh Gridmen Topple UConn From Undefeated Ranks

By BILL BALLOU

There was a party Friday night at the University of Connecticut. It was held at the freshman football field and had everything from dancing cheerleaders to a well-soused marching band. The stands were full and the sidelines crowded with party-goers expecting to see their freshman from Connecticut continue their undefeated streak and take care of the visitors from UMass.

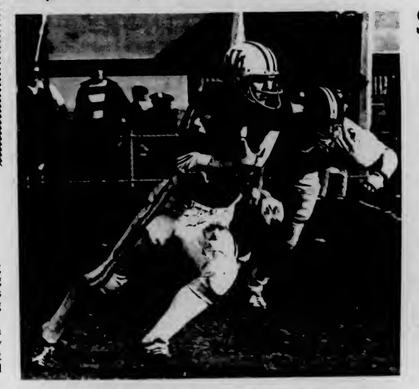
However, a scrooge-like Redmen defense and an offense that sputtered all night before finally coming to life in the second half played party-poopers and sent the UConn fans home unhappy.

The story of this game can be told in just one word-Defense. The Redmen picked off five Huskies' passes and came up with the key play every time UConn came within sight of the end zone. The Connecticut defense held an extremely potent UMass attack scoreless in the first half by the virtue of their fierce pass rush and despite being on the field for most of the secondhalf they were able to hold the Redmen until the offense began to fall apart and give UMass great field position almost every time they got the ball.

In the first half neither team proved too particularly potent, although both had their opportunities. The Redmen held the territorial advantage but the closest they could come to scoring was a field goal attempt from the 20 by John Ames that everyone in New England except the official that made the call thought was good. Throughout the half the UMass passing game, which had devastated Rhode Island two weeks previous, was rendered impotent by a great pass rush led by the Huskies defensive tackle Manny Sasser. Quarterback Fred Kelliher did a great job in eluding the hard rush and was able to throw some good, crisp passes even with people hanging on to him.

Connecticut twice threatened, the first time after a blocked punt deep in UMass territory and the second after quarterback Larry Livramento had hit tight end Steve Fredette for 65 yards down to the Redmen 15. Both times the defense came through with the clutch play; Bob Parrott coming up with an interception and Don Sokolnici pouncing on a fumble.

A 45 piece marching band, well fortified with more than one kind of spirit, put on a delightful halftime show to the cheers of several hundred frozen onlookers and the consensus in the stands seemed to be that it was only a matter of time before UConn got on the board and started to take charge.



Just a couple of minutes into the third quarter, Dave Modugno of UMass came in to punt and boomed a pip that was downed inside the Connecticut one yard line. On the following play Paul Mazerall tried to go outside and linebacker Dennis Kiernan was there to meet him in the end zone for a safety that gave the Redmen a 2-0 lead.

Immediately after the free kick from the 20, Kelliher put his ground forces to work to see if he could eat up time and get some insurance points. Rich Harman ate up 17 yards on a draw and Larkey Mays 16 yards through the line for a touchdown, putting UMass up by eight. Dennis Lombardo's conversion made it 9-0.

That proved to be it for Connecticut as Livramento was forced to go to the air, with the result being two interceptions by linebacker Paul St. Onge and one by Mike Facchini that set up the final Massachusetts touchdown.

That final touchdown was a pass from Kelliher to a wide open John Healy covering 24 yards- so what else is new- that frosted the cake and made it 15-0. The kick was blocked but it didn't matter anyway and it ended 15-0.

Connecticut had been undefeated coming in to this game with a record of 4-0 while UMass was 2-1. Naturally any time you beat an undefeated team at its home it is especially sweet, but a shutout is bound to add a little zest to the stew.

NOTHING CAN STOP ME NOW--Paul Metallo, Redman halfback shown here on one of his long scampers, piled up a UMass record of 258 yards rushing Saturday to break the old mark set by Greg Landry back in 1966. Metallo averaged almost nine yards per carry and scored four touchdowns to lead the Redmen to a 38-27 upset victory over Holy Cross. (Photo by Barbara Brecher)

Key Interceptions Lead Pats Over Oilers

FOXBORO, Mass. (AP)— The New England Patriots capitalized on pass interceptions by Steve Kiner and Jim Cheyunski for a pair of touchdowns in the final five minutes Sunday for a 28-20 National Football League victory over the Houston Oilers.

Frustrated on two other thrusts deep into Houston territory, the Patriots suddenly came alive after Julius Adams and Dennis Wirgowski put a heavy rush on Oiler quarterback Dan Pastorini.

A pass was deflected into the air, picked off by Kiner at his 45 and returned to the Houston 44. On a fourth play, pass interference gave New England a first down at the four, and Jim Nance bulled into the end zone.

The Oilers took the ensuing kickoff, and Pastorini promptly went to the air again. Cheyunski intercepted the toss at the Houston 29 and returned to the five. Carl Garrett needed just two cracks at the line to score an insurance touchdown with just two and a half minutes remaining.

The Oilers had rallied on the passing of Pastorini to go in front 20-14 in the second half.

The Patriots, winning their third game in eight starts this season after a 2-12 record last year, scored in the first period on Jim Plunkett's 10-yard pass to Hubie Bryant.

After Mark Moseley booted the first of his two field goals for the Oilers in the second period, the Patriots marched 38 yards for another touchdown.

Action took place Saturday morning as the UMass varsity Lacrosse team met Rutgers in a fall season scrimmage. Garbor's Guerillas have been meeting for informal practices throughout the fall basically for experience and to check out the new players; expose them to the UMass style of play in preparation for the spring competition.

Though Rutgers won the scrimmage 13-10, the lead switched back and forth many times. The first quarter Rutgers scored six goals. Paul Schachacter, however, broke the ice during the second quarter scoring UMass's first goal. He said, "We'll prove we can come back from behind."

That is exactly what the team did during the third quarter. They completely dominated it, scoring the total of eight goals in fifteen minutes. Four were scored by Paul Ritch, two by Dwight Blomquist, and Hirsh Seidman and Peter Connolly each contributed one a piece. In the words of Paul Ritch using a typical quote from Coach Garbor, "We fell behind early, but the coach told us it's a sixty minute game and we can come back."

During the fourth quarter Fred Michels scored UMass's final goal while Rutgers slid by using their top men with a three point lead.

Coach Garbor said, "The purpose of the scrimmages is mainly for the playing experience; everyone on the team plays, it's a time to see the new guys under fire. Also, it's for the fun of playing."

The tri-captains for this year's team are mid-fielder Dana Stone, goalie Bruce Crawford, and attack man Charley Hardy. When asked how he felt about this year's lacrosse team Bruce Crawford replied, "We have a strong established attack returning from last year, young mid-fielders, and two young Frosh defense men, John McCarthy and Bill Blaustein.

Redmen Upset Holy Cross, 38-27

By DAN KAMAL

It was the worst of times. It's beginning to be the best of times. An ecstatic Dick MacPherson, obviously savoring his team's most impressive victory to date, called it "without a doubt our best game yet; Holy Cross is a good football team" Crusader Coach Ed Doherty, a bit dazed after watching his team absorb the 38-27 loss Saturday to the Redmen at Alumni Stadium, said, "It was the better team that won. They were a well coached bunch; they came to play."

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS

And play they did. Led by junior Paul Metallo, the fleet halfback out of Pittsfield who broke a UMass record set by Greg Landry while gaining 258 yards (on 28 carries), the Redmen were behind only once in the game and forced Holy Cross to play catch-up football most of the way. As Doherty said, "A team like ours whose offense is geared to the running game can't play catch-up football."

For weeks, MacPherson had been telling people that he has a team better than it had shown on the field. Saturday proved him right.

However, at the game's outset, it didn't appear as though Mac would be proved right. Holy Cross took the opening kickoff and marched 73 yards in 11 plays to take a very quick 6-0 lead as Jim McClowry's PAT attempt sailed wide left.

At this point, the 14,500 in attendance were probably thinking "here we go again".

But not this week. After a Piel Pennington pass had been intercepted by HC's Bill Stachowski on a daring third and one pass play intended for Steve Schubert on which, according to MacPherson, "Schubert had not set wide enough," Bill DeFlavio hit Crusader quarterback Mickey Connolly to force the first of three Cross fumbles within its own 35 yard line. Dennis Collins recovered for UMass on the HC 15.

Two plays later, at 6:58, Metalllo set the pace for a great day for him and the rest of the Redmen offense, when he slanted off left tackle for a touchdown. Mark Palau's conversion attempt was good and the Redmen led 7-6. They never trailed after that.

Another Crusader fumble set up the next UMass score. This time it was Skip Parmenter pouncing on an errant Connolly pitch-out to give the Redmen the ball at the Cross 33. This time it took five plays before Metallo found the end zone again. The junior accounted for 30 of the 33 yards in the drive.

Incredibly enough, the Cross, which must have thought the ball had hepatitis germs on it, gave it away again on a fumble, and again UMass capitalized. This time however the Redman drive fell a bit short, and Palau came in to boot a 27-yard field goal that gave the home team a 17-6 lead.

The game had the makings of a rout when Metallo swept 17 yards for his third score of the day to give UMass an apparently safe 24-6 lead.

However, the Cross was by no means dead. A 55-yard kickoff return by Scott Lodde gave the Crusaders great field position. The visitors' thrashing running back Joe Wilson took the ball in on a ten-yard burst. Connolly passed to Joe Neary for two points to cut the UMass lead to 24-14 at the half.

The second half was a case of "you let me score, I'll let you score." Metallo refused to stop and swept the right side for 53 yards and his fourth TD. It was on that play that he broke the record.

A few minutes later Wilson retaliated with his second scoring run of the game, and that's how the quarter ended, 31-21, UMass.

It appeared as though Holy Cross might come all the way back, but UMass was not to be denied as linebacker Joe Sabulis broke up a key fourth down situation for the Crusaders.

A Jack O'Neil interception provided the impetus for the next UMass scoring drive, which was highlighted by two first down scampers by Metallo (who else?), and was capped by a Pennington roll out. Piel, still nursing an injured shoulder, was quite careful as he just touched the corner of the end zone and trotted to the sidelines.

With a few minutes left in the contest, HC's Fran Meagher closed out the scoring with an eight-yard burst off tackle. It was, however, quite meaningless.

FACTS: MacPherson had a lot of praise for Dick Etna, Ron Marino (who incidentally suffered a pulled hamstring muscle), and Dick Cronin who led the blocking for Metallo on the sweeps...About the Holy Cross backs who chewed up 340 yards, Mac said, "My God, they'll kill you... we had to get a lot of points with those great running backs. We got ahead in the game; that was the secret. We forced them to go to the pass."...Metallo, who electrified the fans, had a lot of praise for his teammates, "The blocking was there; they opened up huge holes."...Doherty called Metallo "the best back we've seen all year."...Perhaps MacPherson summed it up best: "The kids could've given up. The season could've been a disaster."....

THE PICTURE TELLS THE STORY--UMass head coach Dick MacPherson accompanies a Redman cheerleader in a version of the Victory Jig after UMass upset Holy Cross by a convincing score of 38-27. MacPherson, who has had his share of frustrations this season, was understandably happy. Now maybe he should start taking dancing lessons. (Photo by Barbara Brecher)

Runners In NE Meet

By JAY NESTOR

The heralded season of Coach Ken OBrien's cross-country team will be coming to a climax today, as UMass faces the best of this region in the New England Championship Meet.

The race, which is held in Franklin Park, Boston, will pit such powerhouses as Northeastern, Dartmouth, Providence, and BC against the Redmen. Since the outset of the season, these teams have been strong contenders, while UMass had to recover from a harrowing start, to the point where they were crowned Yankee Conference Champions.

After the Redmen were trounced by Harvard and Providence in an early season tri-meet, Coach O'Brien expressed the opinion that he thought the main problem was for the Redmen to adjust to the early pace. This they have learned to do and the improvement has been immense, as shown in the recent Yankee Conference Meet, where the Redmen took the initiative from the onset of the race.

The harriers have shown much maturity in the manner with which they have handled their opponents, and front runner chores have been held by at least three Redmen--a rarity in cross-country.

Doug O'Connell, Tom Derderian, and Bill Gillin have all won races for UMass this season, and if they perform close to their abilities today, the Redmen could walk away with it all.

Peter Crisci and Randy Thomas, a pair who have been running well all season, will be included in the celebrated top five. Crisci has improved over this season and seems to be a capable runner in tough situations. Thomas, along with Gillin, constitute probably the toughest combination of freshmen in New England. Randy is quite a pleasant surprise to the team.

Competing the top seven will be Roger Nasatka and Mike McCusker. These two broke into the top seven following their fine performances against Central Connecticut and Coast Guard. Paul Segersten, who has run steady all season will miss the New Englands due to a leg injury.

Due to the extremely well built depth of the harriers, the JV team will consist of seven top rate runners, who would have stood a good chance of making the varsity on another squad. Rick Barry and Bob Sullivan will head the talented crowd, which will make a strong showing for the title.

The pride and morale is at a high point going into this meet. The incredible twenty second top five split for the last meet is a huge factor for building team confidence. The Redmen are convinced that they can run as a unit.

UMass will have to be considered a dark horse, but the possibility of capturing the New England title is certainly attainable. This squad is mentally ready for a big win, and a victory at Franklin Park today would not be too hard to swallow. Northeastern and Dartmouth face a hard run for the big one. Last year, the Redmen finished second. They would like to better that by one place this year.

Booters Shutout By UNH

By STEVE FERBER

DURHAM, N.H. - Chances were that UNH would score two goals against the Redmen last Saturday. They did. But the question was how many would UMass tally. The Redmen registered zero for the second time of the season, ending the year on a losing note, ending a chance to gain a share of the YanCon title with Vermont.

The 2-0 loss to New Hampshire, in their season finale, capped a five-game season ending slump in which the Redmen lost three games and tied two. From October 20th on the Redmen were unable to score a victory, as the 6-2 romp over Coast Guard some two weeks ago was the last chance for UMass to celebrate.

The New Hampshire loss put the Redmen at 3-2-0 conference wise, and now only Rhode Island, at 3-1-0 in the conference, has a chance to tie UVM for the title, this coming Saturday at Storrs, Conn. UNH also emerged with a 3-2-0 mark in the conference as their season finale was a bit more rewarding.

Early did the Wildcats strike, as some 8 minutes into play, a few UMass miss-kicks led to a one on one situation and gave the Wildcats the lead, and all the goals that they needed.

Quarter number two saw goal number two, and it was the second one that really demoralized the already disheartened visitors. A defensive mix-up led to this one, as Dave Oullette and John Kiah played Alfonze-Gaston, and watched as the UNH forward took the ball all the way in for the final tally of the day.

UMass really never came too close, that is besides the Mike Nugent head. It was a Redmen corner kick, that found Nugent's headed ball heading goalward. But a Wildcat fullback got in the way, preserving the shutout for goalie Jim Mueller.

And Mueller, wow what a game he played. Only a sophomore and a conference selection from last year, Mueller was too much for UMass. Coming out on several occasions, he cut down the Redmen's offensive chances to a bare six shots on goal, kicking the ball well over mid-field every time that he did get his hands on it.

But the story was the disappointment of UMass. They didn't have it, and looked rather sluggish, and the fact that the Wildcat's second goal was a bit of a fluke didn't help. The fact that UNH dropped into a defensive formation in the second half didn't help, and despite the four forwards used by Coach Berryman late in the game, UMass couldn't score.

It was the second time that the Redmen had been shutout, and the first time that they hadn't scored when the opposition had.

But it was as though the Redmen had given up. They had lost their post-season hopes some two weeks ago, when they dropped a game to Tufts, and subsequently tied WPI. Tufts presently is ranked among the top 20 teams in the nation, and knowing that you've outplayed a team like that, but ended up on the short side, does little for one's morale.

Thus a loss must close a 5-3-3 season, that at one time read 5-0-1 and had tournament possibilities. The YanCon title was also lost in the scurry in what has to be one of the most disappointing ends to a soccer season in quite a while. As Coach Berryman said, "It's discouraging how things can change so rapidly." Yes, it is.

Committee Considers Spring Concert

By JUDY PITTMAN

A newly formed Student Senate subcommittee is working towards formulating a proposal, acceptable to the administration, for a large spring concert in Alumni Stadium.

The committee must determine the possibility of acquiring use of the stadium, an effective security system, the students' desire for such a concert and the cost.

A controversy has arisen over the lack of student power in effecting use of the stadium, according to several senators.

Senator Eliot Sherman of the Senate Rents and Fees Committee said that although student fees are paying the debt service of the stadium, students are given "little voice" in determining the expenditures of the athletic department and the use of the 20,000-seat stadium.

Sherman explained that the Athletic Department's budget is developed by the director of athletics (Warren P. McGuirk) and his staff, and then subject to approval of the Athletic Council. This proposed budget is submitted, with a recommendation, to the chancellor and trustees for final approval.

Each student contributes $8.00 annually toward reducing the $100,000 debt service of the stadium, Sherman said. "Yet there is only one student--a token representative--on the Athletic Council."

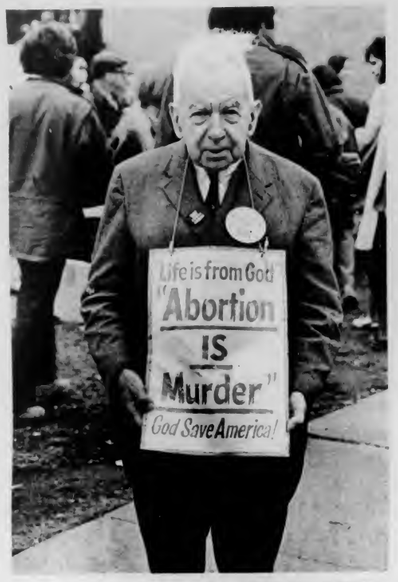
The stadium, under supervision of the director of athletics, is used for four home football games, graduation and four "other possible events" annually.

"A concert is not included as one of the four possible events," said Sherman. "This is a gross injustice to the student body since they contribute a substantial portion of the funds that are used for the stadium as well as the entire athletic department and they are given little voice in determining the expenditures of the athletic department."

Joseph Tropiano, Dwight House senator, described the stadium as "a facility where maximum security could be held."

Student marshalls, like the ones during the 1970 strike, could keep order within the stadium, supplemented by a neutral police force outside, he suggested.

"Room to Move" has volunteered, in cooperation with the infirmary, to provide a first aid station for accidents or drug problems.



The response to a "referendum" ballot distributed throughout the campus Friday night, will determine both the students' desire for a spring stadium concert and the preferred entertainers.

The bands popularly indicated on the referendum will determine the approximate cost of the concert, the senators said. The expense of a band will be covered by the sale of concert tickets, they explained.

Abortion And What To Expect

A man who marches to the beat of the different drum is this gentleman who attended the leftist rally of the Boston Common last Saturday afternoon. (Photo credit by Carl Nash.)

If you're pregnant and have decided on an abortion, it's helpful to know what to expect. "Cathy Jones" is a UMass student who knows. She recently had an abortion.

Clergy Counseling Service is the first step in getting an abortion, Cathy says. The counseling service is made up of a group of people "who are helpful and who handled me in a tactful understanding way," she added.

"Questions they asked are based on an emotional rather than physical level; your relationship to your parents, the man involved, and your ideas on abortion before, explained "Cathy."

"They explained to me in detail what would happen from the moment I arrived in New York, till the end. I was encouraged most of all to go down with at least two other people, because the four-hour wait is nerve-wracking."

At the end of the interview Clergy Counseling Service gave her a code number and the telephone number of a clinic in New York.

"I arrived three-quarters of an hour early at the clinic and they took me right away. If they had asked me to wait or come back, it would have blown my mind completely."

A preliminary questionnaire was filled out with answers to the same questions Clergy Counseling service had asked, including a medical form.

After two minor physical tests, a dozen pregnant women met with a counselor.

"The counselor, with the help of a plastic diagram described the female organs during pregnancy and what would occur during the operation. She went into the drugs that would be administered and their effects. The possible pain we would encounter and why it occurred. "It was a real good thing to understand, what was going to happen and the reasons behind it," said Cathy.

After question and answer period in which the group discussed contraceptive forms available, the counselor closed the discussion by mentioning the precautions to take after the abortion. "No baths, no internal tampons, and no intercourse for a short period of time." Each woman was assigned a counselor who stayed with them till the recovery room.

"My counselor talked to me about my answers on the personal questionnaire in greater detail and the coming operation.

In the operating room, the counselor stayed with Cathy. She informed her on what the doctor was doing and to fight the pain by taking deep breaths.

'Throughner I could follow the operation. The whole time she had her hand on my shoulder and for me it was reassuring."

The operation lasted five minutes. After the operation the doctor left the counselor to fill out medical forms and to prepare for the next patient. Later the counselor walked Cathy to the recovery room where she had to stay for an hour.

"You're not allowed to eat for three hours before the operation. They brought me juice and my counselor, who knew I was hungry, bought me a half a sandwich, which was real cool," she said.

They took her blood pressure and heart rate during the hour and when it was at a normal level, she was dismissed.

"They asked if I would be met, where I was going afterwards."

More questionnaires were given to her concerning her present reaction and suggestions on the phases of the service, and another to be mailed back in two weeks. This was the end.

The last question on the form to be sent back to the clinic reads:

"One of our over-all goals has been to try to make this a positive experience for you in the sense that as a result of your contact with us the people you met, the literature, the way you were considered that you are a more mature and understanding person than otherwise. Have we succeeded in doing this?"

Cathy replied, "I would answer an emphatic yes."

Juvenile Extension Services Take Inventory

J.O.E. (the Juvenile Opportunities Extension) conducted a mid-semester organizational meeting that took an inventory of what resources that were available to work with at the Westfield Detention Center. Also laid down at this meeting was a structure and a goal by which people will involve themselves with the kids at the Westfield Detention.

However, what this newly funded RSO group found to be its top priority is the acquisition of additional material resources. Many of the 40 or so volunteers that showed up at last nights meeting have been working at the detention center since late September and have a pretty accurate measurement of what they need to work as volunteers and what the kids need who are committed to the detention center.

As last nights meeting what came through was that different individuals saw different needs as having highest priorities. Miss Shelly Tushman felt the need for furniture as being great to make the simple act of sitting down comfortable. Miss Tushman stated, "kids live at the detention center 24 hours a day, for often as long as six months. In order to make the Westfield Detention Center a more comfortable place furniture is desperately needed."

Included in Shelly's list of needed furniture are sofas, chairs, tables, lamps, rugs, etc. It is hoped that any donation would be in good shape and strong enough to take extreme wear and tear. Any furniture donated to the Westfield Detention Center not used there will be shipped out to Middlefield where Westfield kids are often sent for a few weeks in the country. You can call Shelly at253-3502. She also said, that she, "has enough MCP's ("Male Chauvinist Pigs") on the line who will pick up any donation."

Another serious point of need was also brought out at the meeting. The instructors of both Westfield and Middlefield, Bill Cook and Peter Ullman respectively brought forth the need for educational supplies at both institutions. Both expendable supplies and educational materials were mentioned. This included books (novels, short stories, field guides for identifying trees, flowers, etc., gardening books, how to do it books, high school texts and magazines) and arts and crafts materials (including paper of all sorts, paints, games, puzzles, scissors, rulers, pens and pencils).

The change in the type of programing which the volunteers are a part of was cited for the cause of the need for these things. Much of the above was not included in any budget. If people have any of these things and care to donate them may drop them off at room 105 of the Campus Center (the N.E.S. office) in care of J.O.E. or the Middlefield Project. If you have things to pick up you can call either Cyndi Dunbar at 253-9353 or Ernie Reis at 549-1215 or 545-0575. JOE hopes you all will be generous.

Through all this the J.O.E. volunteer program should not be overlooked for the sake of the program's need. A goal was adopted by the group which will coordinate the volunteer activity with that of the staff at the detention center. The goal was stated in these words--"To create situations which promote growth for those youth at the Westfield Detention Center and ourselves such that we (including youth) recognize and create alternative decisions in any given situation and realize the consequences of each decision as it may affect ourselves, others and society."

One of the first alternatives mentioned at the meeting was by Bill Cook. He felt that any tutoring done with Westfield kids should be done on campus as the detention center has a definite negative or hindering atmosphere. Basically this could also lead or extend into a program that would eventually admit kids into this university or any other institution of higher learning.

The above and many other activities and programs were discussed. All this means is that J.O.E. is alive and well but more importantly growing. If you want to be a part of this growth for your own life experiences and that of a teenager the process is easy but the committment is hard. In anycase, if interested the number to call is 253-9353 and ask for JOE.

Second Voter Registration Drive Planned

The Amherst Board of Registrars has scheduled a second voter registration session at the University Campus Center for Thursday, November 18, between 1:00 and 6:00 P.M. Residents from all precincts can register at this session to be held on the main level of the Concourse.

Every person over the age of eighteen who has resided in Amherst for six months may register to vote here, provided he has not voted elsewhere during the last six months. In such cases residency in Amherst must be counted after he has been removed from the voting list of the city or town where he had voted. Students are urged to read the pamphlet "Amherst Voter Information," which will be available at the time of registration, before deciding where to register. It would be advisable for all students to carefully weigh the advantages of voting in Amherst against those of voting in their home towns.

In home towns in most cases there would be a single registration with absentee voting as long as a student continues his studies, or until he has established his own home. If his parents continue to list him each year on the street list at his home address, he will be able to vote in all elections in Massachusetts (including

In Massachusetts absentee voting requires a simple request for an absentee ballot, for which there are both forms and postcards in the offices of town clerks. Absentee ballots are normally sent to voters between two and three weeks before the election, and may be voted and returned as soon as received. It is necessary that they be marked in the presence of a notary public in order to have the voter's signature witnessed. There are many notaries public at the colleges and in town. These ballots must be received by the Town Clerk by the day of the election, but cannot be opened and counted until that day.

If, however, a student is more concerned with local elections in Amherst than with those in his home town, or if he comes from a state which does not allow absentee voting, he should probably register here.

Students who wish to register in Amherst should at least be aware of certain problems which have arisen in the past with student registration.

In Amherst where a student's residence may change several times in the course of his college career, there is apt to be considerable confusion as to where the student will vote in any given election. This is determined under the General Laws of Massachusetts by the address on the current voting list. A voter goes to the precinct polling place for the address where he registered until the next annual voting list is prepared.

Under General Laws, voting lists are updated once a year in June based on a voter's residence the previous January. For townspeople this means where they are found when the street listing is done in January. For students this will probably mean where they are listed with the University in January.

Since the new voting list does not come out until June, for town elections--or any election before June--this will mean that if the student registered the previous year, he would vote where he was living at that time. If a student has moved since registration, the simplest way to be sure of going to the correct polling place is to check the voting list which will be posted in the various colleges. A voter's name must be checked off on the voting list before he is allowed to vote, thus it is essential that he go to the proper polling place.

Students registered in Amherst must also be sure they can get to the proper polling place during the hours the polls are open, and be prepared to wait in line if the voting is heavy. So - for voting in Amherst:

1. Remember your precinct.
2. Check your precinct again if you move.
3. Allow extra time if voting is heavy.

Gas Outage Hits Area

By JAMES GOLD

A gas outage which has hit this area has resulted in a revised menu at the UMass Dining Commons today and tomorrow. Joel Stoneham, Director of Food Services, said that because four of the five commons are served with gas, "we will not be going on a standard menu."

Food will be served at all the commons he emphasized, but different types of food will be served. He stated, as an example, that no toast will be served at three of the dining commons because they have gas toasters.

Berkshire D.C. will serve as a central roasting point and food will be shipped out from there, Stoneham said. Berkshire is the only totally electric commons.

A blockage in the pipeline from Tennessee Gas Company of Agawam caused the outage. Pressure was lost at a booster station at Hampden Ponds near Holyoke. Tennessee feeds Berkshire Gas Company, which serves the Amherst area.

Although pressure has been restored, the local gas companies must visit all their customers twice. The first time will be to shut off all gas valves. Then street lines will be repressurized. On the second visit, gas will be turned back on and pilot lights relit.

Because no exceptions can be made, this process is expected to take from one to two days.

Telephone lines were jammed last night as curious people kept calling gas companies, radio stations, and police. A spokesman from WHMP suggested that people not tie up phones and instead listen to their local radio stations.

Towns affected by the outage include Northampton, Easthampton, Florence, Leeds, Amherst, Greenfield, Hatfield, Whateley, Deerfield, and others served by a gas pipeline which runs almost parallel to the Connecticut River.

In The Nation And The World

Little Adverse Effect From Bomb

AMCHITKA ISLAND, Alaska (AP) — A government spokesman says the only initial adverse effects from the Amchitka underground nuclear blast were minor ones. Scientists now look forward to the use of underground blasts elsewhere to tap new sources of natural gas.

Atomic Energy Commission officials said they were pleased with the results of the Amchitka explosion and plan no further nuclear tests on this bleak Aleutian island between the Bering Seas and Pacific Ocean.

It is conceivable, AEC officials say, that a new test of the use of nuclear explosions in the production of natural gas could come as early as late next year near the small mountain community of Rio Blanco, Colo.

Hundreds of similar explosions could follow beneath the hills of Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico and Utah.

AEC officials also expect that this peaceful use of atomic energy will meet with many of the same protests that met Saturday's Cannikin explosion here, a test of a warhead for the Spartan antiballistic missile.

The AEC said that post-detonation examination of the island has discovered only minimal environmental damage.

The only casualties discovered thus far, the AEC said, were an injured sea otter, several dead birds, a destroyed nesting area and a small freshwater lake.

The otter, the birds and the nesting area—of either bald eagles or peregrine falcons—were apparent victims of massive rock slides touched off by the United States' most powerful underground explosion.

The small lake near ground zero drained away when the nearly 5-megaton blast ripped a crack in the lake bed, the AC said.

Henry Vermillion, an AEC public affairs officer, stressed that the AEC's findings were incomplete. He said the search for more subtle environmental damage—which the AEC hopes it won't find—will continue for at least a year.

Environmentalists, who fought a losing battle against the test all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, contended there was a possibility the explosion would touch off natural disasters and inflict severe damage to the environment and wildlife.

The blast gave birth to an earthquake which registered 7 on the Richter scale, but it was felt no further away than an island some 200 miles distant. No seismic sea waves developed. And the AEC said scores of monitoring devices on the finger-shaped island showed no trace of radioactivity.

James R. Schlesinger, AEC chairman, took his wife and two of his children to the barren, uninhabitated island to demonstrate his faith in Cannikin's safety. He later said the test was "amply justified."

The Spartan is designed to destroy enemy intercontinental ballistic missiles outside the atmosphere by bombarding them with a screen of Xrays and neutrons that would render their electrical components useless.

At Rio Blanco, CER-Geonuclear, Inc., wants to detonate nuclear explosives in a sandstone formation 7,000 feet beneath the surface in a new gas production method.

The force of the explosions, which might include nuclear devices fired sequentially, would fracture the sandstone.

Little pockets of gas in the formation would be freed to accumulate in the underground chambers formed by the detonations.

The chambers would then be tapped and the gas, inaccessible before the sandstone was fractured, could be pumped out.

El Paso Natural Gas Co. also has proposed a test, code named "Wagon Wheel," for the Green River Basin of southwestern Wyoming, perhaps in 1973.

The firm is talking of setting off five nuclear devices, each equivalent to 100,000 tons of TNT, in a single well to stimulate gas production.

Estimates have been made that 317 trillion cubic feet of natural gas, now inaccessible, could be freed in several Rocky Mountain technique.

But hundreds, perhaps thousands, of nuclear explosions might be necessary. For example, estimates are 700 to 900 nuclear detonations in up to 300 wells might be needed to produce four trillion cubic feet of gas over a 20-year period at Rio Blanco.

Gas stimulation is one of the ideas to come out of "Plowshare," the AEC's program that seeks peaceful uses of nuclear explosives.

The first gas stimulation test, named "Gasbuggy," was conducted in December 1967 near Farmington, N.M. Gas production from the Gasbuggy well since then has far outstipped that of a nearby conventional well.

A second test came near Grand Valley, Colo. in September 1969.

Last summer, the AEC tested at its Nevada test site a new nuclear device designed just for gas stimulation. It was small enough to fit down an 8-inch well casing and, from a radioactivity standpoint, was quite "clean."

Thomas Blankenship, head of the Nevada test site's peaceful uses of nuclear energy program, described the new device as "a device we can use with assurance in the field."

Laird Says Things Look Great In Nam

WASHINGTON (AP) — Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird returned Monday from his Saigon visit with a glowing assessment of the Vietnamization program and a recommendation for President Nixon on further U.S. troop withdrawals.

The South Vietnamese may not win every battle, Laird said, "but they are in a position where they are strong militarily and they can handle the military situation to an extent that I did not think was possible when this program started."

In a news conference at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington, he said Vietnamization--the Nixon administration's program of withdrawing U.S. forces and turning conduct over the South Vietnamese--is "on schedule or ahead of schedule in all respects."

Although Laird declined to discuss what he will recommend to the President, Pentagon aides viewed the Defense Secretary's optimistic report as setting the stage for a further significant reduction in U.S. troop strength when the President makes his announcement next week.

The number of Americans now in Vietnam, 191,000, is scheduled to drop below 184,000 by Dec. 1. Speculation both in Washington and Saigon has focused on a residual force of about 40,000 by next summer. This would require increasing the monthly withdrawal rate of about 14,300 to 20,000 a month.

Laird said American air power would be used "as long as it's needed and necessary to protect the remaining forces of the United States."

But he said its use has been reduced substantially as the South Vietnamese have become better trained.

Prayer Amendment Dies In House

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed constitutional amendment to permit official praying in public schools died in the House Monday when backers fell 28 votes short of the two-thirds majority needed for approval.

The intense and often emotional debate ended with 240 congressmen favoring and 162 opposing a resolution that would have been the first step toward writing this in the Constitution:

"Nothing contained in this Constitution shall abridge the right of persons lawfully assembled, in any public building which is supported in whole or in part through the expenditure of public funds, to participate in voluntary prayer or meditation."

Recommending rejection of the resolution, House Speaker Carl Albert, D-Okla., shouted to his colleagues that he is "not prepared to let the meddling hand of government, at any level, to any degree, be placed on any man's altar."

But Rep. Chalmers P. Wylie, R-Ohio, chief sponsor of the proposed constitutional amendment, said a vast majority of the American people "want this kind of amendment...and the people of this House should allow the people to speak."

The amendment's backers said the measure is needed to restore the practice of prayers that had been widely followed before a Supreme Court ruling halted it in 1962.

But opponents, with major church organizations on their side, called it an attack on the Bill of Rights.

The 240 to 162 vote in favor of a resolution to let the states decide the controversial issue was 28 short of the two-thirds needed.

The vote ended, for the time being at least, a fight that started in 1962 when the Supreme Court held that the First Amendment prohibits states from composing prayers that had been used widely in public schools at that time.

The proposed change defeated by the House would have allowed voluntary prayer or meditation in schools instead of non-denominational prayer as originally proposed.

Opponents claimed both terms were ambiguous and could lead to confusion and even to prayers prepared by school boards.

Earlier Monday, House foes of the amendment demonstrated enough strength on a preliminary test to defeat the proposal in the end.

Boston Schools Worsen

BOSTON (AP) — A state attorney general said Monday that the racial imbalance problem in Boston schools has become worse, not better.

Asst. Atty. Gen. William Searson said the city has produced only "broken dreams and frustrated hopes" for 26,000 black children.

Searson appeared in Suffolk Superior Court to oppose the Boston School Committee's attempt to recover about $14 million in money being withheld because the state says Boston's school system is not racially balanced.

Searson charged that the city is "operating a dual school system--one white and one black." He said if the court granted the injunction it would be "contributing to the maintenance of that invisible wall in the city behind which black children are getting an inferior education.

New Highway Irks New Englanders

WASHINGTON (AP)-A Senate bill to create the Connecticut Historic Riverway won the blessings of the Interior Department Monday but incurred the wrath of a small New England town.

Introduced by Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., the proposal would establish an 11-mile, 23,500-acre preserve along the Connecticut River between Old Saybrook and Haddam, Conn.

Ribicoff told the parks and recreation subcommittee of the Senate interior committee the riverway would be an initial step in his "long-range proposal" to set aside federal lands all along the river valley from Long Island Sound to the Canadian border.

Ribicoff is making his second attempt to get the bill approved in Congress. Last year the Senate passed it but the House did not.

Main opposition against the riverway development came from James H. Thach, a representative from Lyme, Conn., and William Moore.

Thach noted that Lyme, which has a population of about 1,200, voted in referendum to oppose the federal project.

"The tourist buses, the government buildings and the camp sires would in the end destroy the environment," said Thach.

If you've seen how crowded the river is now on weekends, you'k know the added boating would make it equivalent to rush hour traffic in many of our big cities."

Besides disturbing the "peaceful atmosphere of quiet little town," declared Thach, the riverway project would increase the local towns' police costs, traffic, and fire services as well as increase upkeep of roads.

Thach said Lyme recommends the Interior Department submit more detailed plans for proposed boundaries of the preserve. It also wants the department to be more precise on how it plans to share added costs-such as law enforcement, traffic controls and sanitation-with local governments.

Moore said the Gateway Advisory Committee could support the riverway if the federal government would permit local self-determination on questions of zoning and boundaries.

"We also want preservation as opposed to intensive recreation, or recreation without stringent controls," said Moore.

In Brief...

FT. MEADE, Md. (AP)-Col. Oran K. Henderson won a major legal victory Monday when a military judge dismissed the most serious charge brought against him in the aftermath of the My Lai massacre.

The judge, Col. Peter S. Pondolowski, denied, however, three defense motions seeking dismissal of the remaining three charges against the much-decorated combat veteran accused of covering up the massacre.

NEW YORK (AP)-A six-man advance party from Peking flew into New York Monday to set up a base for the Chinese Communist delegation to the United Nations. They travelled light, with only half a dozen suitcases among them.

After a flight via Karachi, Pakistan, the six spent the night in Paris. Then they jetted across the Atlantic via Air France and arrived at Kennedy Airport without fanfare.

BOSTON (AP)—A bill providing for the election of a high school student representative with full voting rights to the state Board of Education was signed into law Monday by Gov. Francis W. Sargent.

The bill creates 15 student regional councils throughout the state with representatives from every Massachusetts secondary school.

SAIGON (AP)-U.S. planes attacked antiaircraft sites in North Vietnam Monday for the second day in a row, one strike coming 180 miles north of the border in the deepest raid this year.

There were two raids involving eight fighter-bombers that were escorting two unarmed reconnaissance planes photographing airfields. All the planes returned safely, the U.S. Command reported.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Judiciary Committee reacted favorably Monday to Lewis F. Powell Jr. with all signs indicating he will be confirmed easily for the Supreme Court.

The lean, graying lawyer from Richmond, Va., pledged at a relaxed nomination hearing to sell much of his extensive stock portfolio and spoke of a "deep conviction" in equality for "our black brothers."

KEY BISCAYNE, Fla. (AP)-In a possible prelude to an election year battle over how to clean up the environment, the White House said Monday it wants revisions in a strong water-pollution control bill written by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, a front-runner for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Presidential press secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said "we are not satisfied with all aspects" of the legislation approved by the Senate last week.

NEW YORK (AP)-New York City began its observation of Clean Air Week on Monday by testing cars and trucks for carbon monoxide emissions and found that 43 per cent of the vehicles tested flunked.

The program is designed to alert the driving public to have regular tune-ups to avoid pollution.

Draft Counselor's Corner

The New Draft-Part Two

By GILBERT J. SALK

The new draft regulations make some important changes in terms of student deferments, conscientious objection, and medical deferments, as well as creating a major new classification, the I-H. Other significant revisions were discussed in last Thursday's Collegian. If you missed the column, get a copy of it.

The most important change, for many of you, is the new rules concerning the II-S. To qualify for this deferment, you must have been enrolled as a full-time student at the end of the 1970-71 academic year. This means that freshmen and people returning to school after a semester or more away are eligible for student deferments.

It does not mean, however, that you should refrain from applying for the deferment. The new regulations do not go into effect until December 2, 1971, so there is still an outside possibility that the Courts will determine that boards should give them out. You lose nothing by applying, at any rate.

Remember, if you are an upperclassman, and you held a II-S last year, you should be able to retain your deferment until you graduate or leave school. So you can relax unless you receive an unsatisfactory classification in the mail. Then see a draft counselor immediately.

Another important change is the new I-H classification. This is the SSS' new circular file. Every 18-year-old who registers will be given a I-H, and will retain that classification at least until her gets his lottery number. If his number is higher than the expected maximum to be called the following year, he will keep his I-H forever.

This takes a great deal of pressure off the local boards. Apparently, they will accept no information from those in the I-H category other than their name, address, and date of birth. This means that the board does not have to send out Classification Questionnaires to most registrants. They do not have to accept or consider requests for deferments or conscientious objector status from anyone with a I-H.

What all this means is that the system's vehicle for obtaining meat for its overseas diplomatic corps has been greatly streamlined. It will be more difficult for you to find ways to hassle them, and the temptation on your part to simply let things ride until the last minute will be greatly increased. There will be few and few day-to-day reminders that the draft is hovering like a vulture over you and your brothers, but it will still be there. The responsibility to start planning to deal with the draft will rest solely in your hands, and if you wait until you are sure that your number is coming up to start working, you will be making the job that much more difficult.

The third installment of the changes in draft regulations will appear in Thursday's Collegian. Until then,
PEACE.

'Don't Know, I Don't Give A Damn'

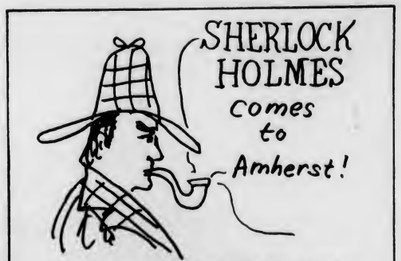
SAIGON (AP)-While President Nixon is scaling down the U.S. presence inside Vietnam, thousands of 7th Air Force and 7th Fleet officers and men remain committed to supporting the Vietnamese form bases and carriers outside the country.

The 7th Fleet has 13,000 men aboard ships operating off Vietnam to support the war effort, and an amphibious force of 25,000 Marines ready for what an officer described as "a crunch if there is some kind of horrible attack on the dwindling U.S. forces in Vietnam."

In Thailand, there are 32,200 U.S. troops, mostly airmen supporting the war effort in Indochina.

None of these troops operating outside of South Vietnam is counted in the U.S. Command's weekly strength summary.

The summary notes the 7th Fleet but makes no mention of the forces in Thailand.



The U.S. government is trying to keep a low profile in Thailand.

Not only do these U.S. forces outside Vietnam provide an air shield for Saigon government troops, but they carry out clandestine operations in both Cambodia and Laos in support of those governments.

Supplementary air power is provided by the Central Intelligence Agency in Southeast Asia.

The CIA runs Air America, whose supposed 16 civilian pilots perform such missions in Laos as close air support and carrying guerrilla troops in and out of battle. Air America planes also evacuate refugees and make rice drops.

Military planners in Saigon expect the United States to maintain an air and naval presence in Asia after American ground troops leave Vietnam.

Bad Day At Black Mesa

Copyright 1971 by John Adams

"It is prophesied," warns Hopi Indian David Monongye, "that the Indians will have their lands confiscated or ruined, by forces or lies, and that the Hopi Indians would be the last to go. When this happens, no one will survive." Primitive babble? Perhaps?

But the Hopi believe their land is the spiritual center of the earth, and when it is destroyed, the destruction of humanity will follow. For over 800 years, the Hopi have lived on the Black Mesa in Arizona and New Mexico. One of the villages, Oraibi, is claimed by some historians to be the oldest continuously-inhabited village in North America.

The Hopi have survived on this arid hostile land through careful observance of the natural ecological balance. Their way of life is founded on the belief that the land was given to them by the Great Spirit to be protected and held in trust. To preserve the fragile balance one must take from the earth no more than can be returned.

The Hopi settled in autonomous villages guided by village chieftains called "Kikmongwi." There was no central governing authority representing the whole tribe until 1936. At that time a constitution was imposed on the tribe by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. Although a minority of the Hopi, called "progressives," accepted the constitution, the traditional Hopi refused to acknowledge it because of their tribal beliefs.

A Tribal Council was, nonetheless, instituted with the power "to prevent the sale, disposition, lease or encumbrance of tribal lands." But many traditional Hopi are not represented on the Council, because they refuse to elect members and prefer, instead, to continue with the Kikmongwi as their leaders.

Traditional Hopi life and culture were immediately threatened when the mushrooming population of western America demanded more electric power. The Black Mesa holds an estimated 16 billion tons of coal. Not surprisingly, in 1966, a strip-mining lease was negotiated with the Hopi Tribal Council and the Department of the Interior by Peabody Coal Company. Now a 23-company consortium (Western Energy Supply and Transmission Associates) plans six major coal-fired electrical generating plants in the area.

The Native American Rights Fund of Boulder, Colorado has filed a lawsuit on behalf of 63 traditional Hopi Indians against Peabody Coal and Rogers C.B. Morton, Secretary of Interior. He is the principal officer of the government charged with responsibility for fulfilling the trust obligation to the Indians and administering the laws relating to Indian Affairs.

Instead of fulfilling the trust, the Interior Department is allowing a serious conflict of interest to damage the Indians' interest. One of the largest recipients of the coal-fired electricity is the Bureau of Reclamation, which lies within the domain of the Interior Department. Five hundred megawatts of power (1/5 the amount consumed by New York City) is earmarked by the Bureau of Reclamation for the Central Arizona Project, which "needs" the electricity to move vast quantities of water from Lake Havasu on the lower Colorado River to southern Arizona.

Far from protecting the Indians, the Interior Department approved the strip-mining lease negotiated by the unrepresentative Hopi Tribal Council: Of the 18 seats on the Council, 7 representing traditional villages were unfilled. (At no time were the Kikmongwi of these villages consulted or notified of the pending lease.) Of the remaining 11 seats, only 6 had been certified in accordance with the tribal constitution.

Apart from these technicalities, an ecological disaster may be in the making. The strip-mining will cover 64,000 acres. Roads necessary for such mining in some places stretch 300 feet wide. These scars will be permanent, because the arid land, desert and semi-desert, is almost as vulnerable and slow to heal as tundra.

The Four Corners Plant, the first completed, spews out 300 tons of particulate matter daily--more than all the industrial polluters of New York and Los Angeles combined.

Mojave Power Plant will be supplied by a 275 mile pipeline through which "slurry" (half pulverized coal, half water) will be pumped, requiring from 2,000 to 4,500 gallons of water per minute. The water will be drawn from deep wells at Black Mesa, but nobody knows what 89,204,500,000 gallons over a 35-year period will do to the water table of the region.

In return for this plunder and waste, the Hopi will receive $14.5 million over a 35-year period; while Peabody Coal takes in $750 million--approximately 90% of the purchase price.

This lopsided deal will rupture the entire ethic upon which Hopi life is based. Black Mesa will be ripped apart, the water drained, and the air polluted. Are not the doomsday predictions of the Hopi simply a plea that man is part of nature, and must live within its bounds?

John Adams, an environmental lawyer, is Director of the Natural Resources Defense Council, working with the Black Mesa Defense Fund (107 Cienega Street, Santa Fe, N.M. 87501).

Very Interesting

Within recent weeks, more and more students have been looking into the different fees which the University has levied on them for this academic year. The one fee which has drawn the most interest has been the athletic fee.

Presently, students pay $30.00 per year ($15.00/semester) in athletic fees. The funds are then administered and paid out by the Athletic Council, through a budget which is drawn up by the Council. The most interesting and controversial part of the fee is this budgeting and spending method.

The Athletic Council is basically made up of faculty and alumni. The Council is a standing committee of the Faculty Senate, and as such is not responsible to any student organization or student government.

Within the past few years, the administration here at the University have agreed to and encouraged student input in the budgeting and expenditure of student fees to pay for the dormitories, the dining commons, the Campus Center, and the University Health Services. The Administration has taken a very open view as to how much students know about how their money is being spent.

The same cannot be said about the Athletic Council.

It is only with overwhelming difficulty that a student can obtain a copy of the Athletic Council budget. How much is spent for athletic scholarships? In a recent article in the Springfield Union comparing the amounts of money spent by UMass and the University of Connecticut on athletic scholarships, the Union reported that the Athletic Department at the University of Massachusetts had refused to disclose any information. If the news media is unable to obtain the information, how is a student supposed to be able to?

Many students at UMass have become dissatisfied with the way in which the Athletic Council is run. The Board of Trustees will very carefully go through the Budget of the Student Senate ($35.50/student), a budget of student money which is spent by a representative body of over ninety students. But the Athletic Council budget, containing almost as much money as that of the Student Senate and which has had the input of only ONE student is not openly presented to the Board.

The time has come in which the Athletic Council must be made to have more student representation. When a board of ninety percent faculty and alumni gets to spend almost half a million dollars of student money without being accountable to students, something is very wrong.

A Billion Dollars

WASHINGTON--It had to come sooner or later. The unthinkable has become thinkable. The U.S. Navy is asking for ONE BILLION DOLLARS to build ONE aircraft carrier.

No one thought it would happen for five years, but when the word got out there was jubilation in all the military services at the Pentagon.

An Army general said, "I never thought the Navy would have the guts to ask for it, but now that they've broken the sound barrier, we're all free to ask for a billion dollars for our favorite weapon."

"Then you're not mad at the Navy for asking for that kind of money for an aircraft carrier?" I asked.

"Why should we be mad?" the general answered. "We've been piddling around with $100 million here, $100 million there on a new piece of hardware, when everyone knows you really can't get a bang for a buck less than a billion.

"But we didn't know how Congress would react until the Navy asked for the billion for a carrier. It didn't faze them in the least, so now if the Navy can get a billion for an aircraft carrier, we can get a billion for something we've wanted to build for some time."

"What is that?"

"It's a giant tank," he said, "and it takes up eight football fields. It's the greatest advance in military hardware since the invention of the Gatling gun."

"A billion dollars for one tank?"

"It's not just a tank, you fool," the general said. "Look at this model. The top of the tank is flat so bombers can take off and land on it. On the sides you have missiles and in the front and rear you have four 16-inch guns."

"But even with all those things it doesn't seem as if it would cost a billion dollars."

"Aha, that's the surprise," he chuckled. "You see this here on the bottom?"

"It looks like a keel."

"Exactly. This is a floating nuclear airborne tank, something the U.S. Army cannot do without."

"But it looks just like an aircraft carrier," I said.

The general took the model away angrily. "How can it look like an aircraft carrier?" he said. "It's painted brown!"

The Air Force was also celebrating the Navy's billion-dollar breakthrough. An Air Force colonel in research and development showed me the latest plane the Air Force wants to build.

"This is the greatest bomber ever designed by man," he said. "It flies at 60,000 feet, floats on water and can cut its way through a jungle so silently that not even birds can hear it."

"But it looks like a tank," I said.

"How can it be a tank?" he grumbled. "It says 'U.S. Air Force' on the side."

Although there was excitement in the Army and Air Force wings of the Pentagon, it was nothing comparable to what was going on over at the Navy Department.

Officers were handing out cigars and you could feel the excitement in the air.

While I was talking to one admiral, another admiral came down the hall and my admiral rushed up to him saying, "Zeke, for gosh sakes, I haven't seen you in four years. You look like a billion dollars."

The other admiral laughed "You look like a billion dollars yourself."

Letters To The Editor

Wednesday's Child-Full Of Woe?

To the Editor:

Please pause for a moment to try to penetrate to the suffering of millions of Pakistanis and Indians which is hidden in unbelievable statistics: last November a half-million East Pakistanis died in a cyclone and tidal wave; already more than 250,000 naively innocent victims have streamed into India--and the flood continues daily; two weeks ago 10,000--possibly 20,000--Indians drowned in yet another cyclone and accompanying tidal wave that swept the state of Orissa; this past weekend thousands more may have died in a new cyclone moving from the Bay of Bengal into East Pakistan. Press reports speak of a sea of human and animal corpses floating in the Bay of Bengal. Starving people are seen eating the bark of trees to stay alive. These are the WEDNESDAY'S PEOPLE.

Last week India's Prime Minister, Indira Gandhi, made a plea to Americans which simply cannot go unheeded. "I came here", she said, "in search of some wise impulse that has sometimes worked to save humanity from despair". She reminded President Nixon (and us) that the "worst tragedy is a man-made tragedy", namely the 10 million East Pakistani refugees fleeing into India. In the Sunday New York Times (October 31, 1971) there appeared a full-page ad on behalf of the WEDNESDAY'S PEOPLE which said: "This Wednesday (November 3) students in high schools and colleges throughout the country will go hungry. Their lunch money, snack change, and whatever they might normally spend to feed themselves will instead be used to provide food and medicine to the desperate millions now dying on the frigid plains of West Bengal". Probably because of a lack of publicity, I don't believe any of us on this campus missed a meal for the WEDNESDAY'S PEOPLE. Let us respond to Mrs. Gandhi's invitation for "a wise impulse" by making this Wednesday, November 10th (that's tomorrow), WEDNESDAY'S PEOPLE DAY at the University of Massachusetts.

The human victims in India and Pakistan need three things: your prayers, your fasting, and your financial help. In support of these needs, the following program is planned: 1) Pray--individually and collectively; 2) Wednesday, November 10th, a table will be set up all day by Indian, Pakistani, and UMASS students in the Campus Center to collect funds. Please make it your responsibility to set up tables in your dormitories, eating commons, etc. As a reminder to one another, wear a home-made sign or arm band saying: THE NOVEMBER 10th FAST TO SAVE A PEOPLE (sorry, buttons are not available); 3) Fast--and donate the money saved. For a single day, give up some part of yourself: meals, cigarettes, a record--whatever your habitual pleasure may be--so that you may physically and spiritually share the suffering of the poor.

In connection with WEDNESDAY'S PEOPLE DAY, the Program in Comparative Literature will offer two showings of Satyajit Ray's film, "The World of Apu", Tuesday night, at 8 and 10 p.m., in Thompson 104. Profits will be donated to the Indian and Pakistani refugees. Charge is .75.

Money collected will go to Project Relief, Inc. P.O. Box 1555 Annex Station, Providence, R.I. 02901. This is a totally voluntary organization. It pays no salaries and accepts only donated staff services. Proceeds collected are being channelled through Oxfam-American, Inc., a British based relief organization with an exceptional record for efficient assistance to victims of disaster. You may send your donations to the above address, or if you wish, to me c/o Comparative Literature Program, Thompson Tower. I'll see money is sent to Project Relief.

As Long As It Fits

To the Editor:

As a participant in the current exhibition Boston Artist, '71, I feel that it is very important to note that although I am pleased to be in the show I do not wish to endorse it as in fact being a completely valid survey of Boston art.

Had the University taken more time investigating the Boston situation it would have been obvious that this could have been a much more extensive show. There remains the possibility that the University was primarily interested in simply mounting a show with too little real concern for the meaning of that show. This has become perhaps too common a practice in university galleries. It reflects a casual attitude about art and usually leads to a casual treatment of artists. For example two artist who were to have been included in the show, Anthony Thompson and Elizabeth Divorkin, felt that they could not participate in the show because of this casualism. There appeared to be more concern for a physical space requirements and arrangements than for presenting an opportunity for the artists to make statements they felt were important and right for this show.

This all sounds terribly crankish, I'm sure-but the point is simply that if there is anything sensual to Boston art as an idea it is that a number of artists take their work very seriously indeed and are also growing increasingly concerned about the status and treatment of artists.

Don't Rock The Boat

To the Editor:

Certain facts have come into view concerning The Athletic Council and its relationship to women's athletics. Since women compose 44% of the total student population and are paying the same $30 per annum fee as do male students, they should share in the benefits as do the men.

An example of the imbalance would be the fact that women's athletics were budgeted 2% of the $648,500 total athletic fee, or $13,000. Also, there are only two women in the whole University receiving athletic scholarships as compared to the hundreds given to male athletes (this scholarship covers tuition only). Men's sports are allotted specific budgets, whereas women's sports are given one lump sum to haggle over.

Women's teams, unlike men's, must buy their own practice and competition uniforms because of scanty budgeting. Also, men's traveling teams are given lesser rates for food and lodging than are women's.

One concession made to Women's Athletics this year is that any money a women's team earns may be kept by them.

The Athletic Council has fallen back on the rationale that they only want to fund income-producing sports. They contend that women's teams have received more money this year than in previous times. They also say that women's teams have not been around long enough to prove themselves and become a tradition.

Ad additional argument is that the insurance policy covers both men and women equally (doesn't this really protect the University?).

These arguments seem to bear very little weight because the new Dean of Physical Education, David Bishoff, has said that something will have to be done in the next year about women's athletics. The question is: what?

Another major problem is that the Women's Physical Education Department is afraid to become involved. They don't want to rock the boat for which they have nothing to lose and everything to gain.

Sweet Charity

To the Editor:

"Charity begins at home, not with a corporate Santa Claus," concluded R.J. Waters in a letter to this chronicle of campus events last Friday. However, there are many more implications within the body of Mr. Waters' letter that need comment-mainly his attitude toward humanity that clearly comes through in the letter.

Most of what I have to say rests on the use of the word "charity." If any off campus service dealt in charity they would certainly be rejected by the individuals they attempt to serve. This is the main reason why the "traditional" service groups stay on campus and maintain a closed system of rewards and punishment for any activity completed. An example of this system manifests itself in the flood of requests for underprivileged kids from the surrounding communities during Christmas. These are one shot deals that can be considered traditional forms of white middle-class charity which I consider dehumanizing and sick. This is what concerns me most about Mr. Waters' letter of last Friday.

It is this-charity and Christmas parties do the economically deprived individual no good, therefore they are acceptable by white middle-class society. It provides the economically deprived child with no tools or resources to succeed in society. Instead the only things that are transfered between the college student and disadvantaged child are candy and a few laughs. Nothing real happens and this, I believe, is what Mr. Waters wants-that which he hides in words such as charity begins at home and political and fiscal realism. Mr. Waters is also caught up in that individualistic bag-"Should not the individual student have the same right to his own personal value judgement, i.e., contribute to charity as an individual." I wonder if Mr. Waters would want to extend that option to all facets of student activity, but that is not my criticism.

Essentially what Mr. Waters really says when he spouts all his conservative rhetoric is that I want to deprive all of you low-income, poor, white and non-white of any resources I and my middle-class partners may need in making it. I mean isn't that what being rich is all about.

Now, I have put words into Mr. Waters' mouth but it is considered justified when one assesses the society in which we live and on whose backs it was built. However, my arguments are mainly directed at denying Mr. Waters and his beliefs. That community service is not charity but the sharing of resources so individuals who find the traditional roads to well being blocked for whatever socio-economic, cultural, or racial reason may be able to find alternative and independent ways to achieve this economic well being.

To believe that community service is anything but the support of alternatives within the community only serves to devalue the spiritual attributes of those people and any society that does that will rear monsters and savages. Some people have been known to say that of American.

The Mass.es Will Benefit

To the Editor:

Those who dislike the expense and the ecological damage of more cars, more roads, have a chance to do something about it.

C.E.Q. members will be soliciting the signatures of registered voters on State Rep. Charles Flaherty's petition to permit use of highway trust funds not only for roads but also for mass transit. Buses, railroads, subways, etc., will benefit.

The petition will be available in the lobby of the Campus Center, this Wednesday, Nov. 10, from 9 a.m. till 6 p.m.

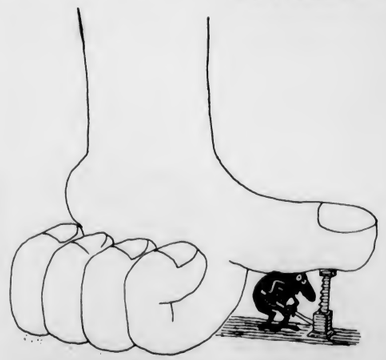
Breathe Deep



To the Editor:

I would like to comment on your MDC closeup of October 27, 1971 entitled "Physical Plant Provide Power, Pollution". The State Department of Public Health must by the 1967 Air Quality Act and the 1970 National Air Quality Standards Act enforce regulations on emissions such that the ambient (local ground level) air quality standards are met. This means that along with air pollution control devices, the type of fuel may also be specified such that pollutant levels are reduced.

Contrary to the facts presented in your article, coal burning will not be permitted at the new Tilson Farm plant. This and other important as well as correct information can be obtained from the Pioneer Valley Air Pollution Control Office of the Department of Public Health in Springfield.

I should also like to explain that the Environmental Engineering Program of the Department of Civil Engineering has begun a long term air monitoring program from facilities atop Marston Hall. Measurements of weather conditions, particulates and sulfur dioxide are being made on a continual basis. This data will later be made available to the campus at large in a simplified version so that we may all be assured of the quality of air we breathe.

Alice Continues At The Arena

The Manhattan Project perform a scene from ALICE IN WONDERLAND.

The Manhattan Project will present three performances of "Alice in Wonderland" at UMass Monday through Wednesday, Nov. 8 through 10.

Performances based on the Lewis Carroll classic will be directed by Andre Gregory and will begin at 8 each evening in Grinnell Arena near parking lot five. Informal dress is recommended for the audience.

During its three-day residency, The Manhattan Project will also give two informal workshops Nov. 9 and 10 at 3:30 p.m. in Grinnell Arena.

Members of the Project are graduates of the New York University's School of Arts. Their original theater work is funded by a grant from the Rockefeller Foundation.

"Alice" was first performed by the company at the Loft Theatre Workshop, Harvard's Loeb Center, and the Berkshire Theatre Festival. Last fall, Mr. Gregory's "Alice" ran at the off-Broadway Extension Theatre, and in March went on tour.

The production is faithful to Lewis Carroll in plot and dialogue, but is intertwined with the director's and the actors' imaginations.

Tickets for the evening performances are available in the Fine Arts Council Ticket Office, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available one hour before the performances at Grinnell Arena. Ticket Office hours are 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Alice Group Extends Projects

By MEL GUSSOW

Immediately after Andre Gregory's version of "Alice in Wonderland" opened last October, he was flooded with suggestions that he adapt other children's classics, such as "The Little Prince" and "The Hunting of the Snark." Mr. Gregory turned them all down.

For one thing, his "Alice" is not a children's show (although children have seen and like it). It is a freehand adult theaterpiece. Furthermore, says Mr. Gregory, "there was a great danger in repeating what we did before. We want to find new areas in ourselves."

About three years ago Mr. Gregory formed the Manhattan Project, a small theater company, with some of his students at New York University. While they performed "Alice," they continued training together as a company and looked for a new project.

When "Alice" closed this weekend, it was the end of a long, successful season's run. "Alice" played four performances a week, for 122 performances, almost all of them sold out. But the theater was so tiny (115 seats) and ticket prices so low ($3 and $6 for identical seats) that a profit was impossible.

The Manhattan Project was not intended to make profits but to create theater. The company is now involved in three works, a production of Beckett's "Endgame," a new play about Houdini that Arthur Kopit is writing, and their own version of "The Bible." The route to these works in progress was almost as circuitous as Alice's descent into the rabbit hole.

Initially the group explored four possibilities: Dante's "Inferno," "Sir Gawain and the Green Knight," "Bleak House" and Marlowe's "Dr. Faustus." Mr. Gregory says with a smile, "We tried to live up to our reputation—as a company dedicated to the destruction of English classics." But somehow the performers were unable to make a connection with the works.

For a while they worked on an original project called "The Lemmings," which the director described as "a comedy about death in a repressive society; it got darker and darker and started hurting."

Finally the company undertook "Endgame." After every performance of "Alice," they exercise with "Endgame." "We used the whole performance of "Alice" as a warm-up," says Mr. Gregory. "Beckett influenced 'Alice' in many ways. I see 'Endgame' as 1,000 games to get away from loneliness, fear, anxiety. We're trying to find something we found in 'Alice'—and go further."

Meanwhile, Arthur Kopit decided to write a play for the Manhattan Project, using, says Mr. Gregory, "the life of Houdini as a springboard." Mr. Gregory sees nothing out-of-character about the choice. "Houdini is rooted in burlesque. Beckett is, and we are." Actually the director's first professional job was in burlesque. "I was the business manager for Princess Totem Pole, the Artaud of striptease. She was stripped by two large blackbirds. I took care of the birds."

The Kopit play will be involved with magic and escape, which are very much of interest to Mr. Gregory. In one of his characteristic exercises, he sent three of his actors blindfolded through Central Park with a message to Lincoln Center: "In the land of the blind, the one-eyed man is king."

At present the group is waiting for Mr. Kopit's escape from Hollywood. The playwright is currently occupied with the screenplay for "The Sensuous Woman."

The company was intrigued by the notion of doing Shakespeare. They worked briefly on "A Midsummer's Night Dream" and "Timon of Athens." For months they worked on "Measure for Measure," then dropped it. Mr. Gregory concluding, "A structured play didn't seem to work for us."

But one scene in "Measure for Measure" led the group to improvise a Nativity play, and that led back to the Bible. "I think I know what our work is about," he expains, "but it's a little too early to say. The material is marvelous. It's the first thing that zapped everybody."

The Manhattan Project will continue to work on "The Bible" and "Endgame" and to wait for Mr. Kopit's Houdini while it takes "Alice" on tour through Europe and the Middle East. The plan is to reopen "Alice" in New York in the fall and to follow it with "Endgame."

As for Andre Gregory's "Bible," it will, he says, "take a long time. We might have something to show a year from now. I've heard a rumor that the Theater of the Ridiculous is thinking of doing something based on the Bible." If both are staged at the same time—"it will be a religious festival!"

Lewis Dance Group To Appear Next Week

The Murray Louis Dance Company will appear at the UMass in Amherst for a three-day Residency, November 16-18. During this time, the Company headed by the noted dancer and choreographer, Murray Louis, will offer two different evening performances in Bowker Auditorium at 8:00 p.m. on November 17 and 18 as well as a Master Class on Tuesday, November 16th at 3:30 p.m. in the Studio, Women's Physical Education Building. This program is part of the 1971 Massachusetts Coordinated Dance Residency Project which is co-sponsored by the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities and The National Endowment for the Arts.

Clive Barnes, New York Times reviewer has characterized Mr. Louis as follows: "Louis himself is a brilliant dancer...one of the best technicians in modern dance. He excels in rhythmic responses and muscular control, but also has an exceptional beauty of line that is more like that of a classical than a modern dancer. He has in abundance, a theatricality, a coldly dada sense of the ridiculous, and a crystal bright imagination."

Reserved tickets to the Murray Louis Dance Company performances in Bowker Auditorium, Wednesday and Thursday, November 17-18 are now available by contacting the UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall or by telephoning 545-0202. Ticket prices for this engagement are $1.50 for UMass undergraduates; $2.50 for other full-time students; $3.00 for UMass faculty/staff and $3.50 for the general public. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium ticket office an hour before each performance.

MAHAR AUD.

As Saroyan's Play Opens Thursday

Mike Baird as The Duke is seen in rehearsal of William Saroyan's comic fable THE CAVE DWELLERS.

The UMass Theatre will present the second play of its 10th anniversary season, William Saroyan's comic fable THE CAVE DWELLERS, at Bartlett Auditorium, Nov. 11-13 & 18-20.

The Cave Dwellers is about three old, lost people who live in a theatre that is about to be torn down in a lower East Side slum clearance project in New York City. The three people are The Queen, a fallen theatrical star, The King, who was once a great clown, and The Duke, a broken-down prize fighter. Into this impoverished world comes a lonely, lost girl, a destitute young couple who own a performing bear and who have a baby the instant they arrive, a mute young milkman from whom The Duke has been obliged to steal milk in order to feed the baby and its mother, and eventually the boss of the wrecking crew who has to demolish their home.

The Cave Dwellers embodies all of attributes that Saroyan's plays are cherished for. It has color and fancy, not laid over the play but organic to Saroyan's message and his plot. His germinal idea lends itself to the optique of the theatre.

The Cave Dwellers "philosophy" may be regarded as gentle existentialism. We do not know why we are here, we cannot comprehend the universe we are in, we shall never understand the great pattern, if pattern there be, of life. No matter; there is goodness, there is love-even hate is love. We get up in the morning, go to bed at night; in between we play wonderously. We require more, but if the spectacle is bright and the dark has some light, it just might be enough.

The production is directed by Michelle Faith, with costumes by Katherine Reed, Sets by James Dooley and lights by Paul P. Wonsek, Jr. Reserved seats are available at the Bartlett Box Office or by calling 545-2579. Curtain times are at 8:30.

The Drum Sends It's Message

By ANDREA KORTHY

The drum will be sending it's message across the college campus. Drum is the Black Literary Experience magazine at UMass. It is the only magazine of its type in the five-college vicinity.

Editor Herman Davenport and co-editor Roy Jones talked about the magazine located at the Black Cultural Center.

"Our purpose is getting a qualified black magazine on campus."

"The magazine is circulated in the black community and mailed to other colleges." "We're trying to reflect the experiences of Blacks, Chicanos, and Puerto Ricans, from one phase to another covering a broad field."

The magazine started in 1969 after it broke away from Black Mass Communications. "We were two communication groups working together but we were not together."

Two issues were published yearly.

The magazine contains poetry, short stories, essays, features, and interviews. "It's equal between essays and poetry."

Up-to-date news is handled in a literary fashion. "We're trying to show continuing views that were sparked by a news incident. For instance, news affecting the world of black entertainment.

The staff is made up of fifteen volunteeer students who have had some background in writing. Professors have been asked to submit feature articles but the students are encouraged to do the essays and poetry. "We have a bigger staff now so we can cover more ground."

For the 1971-72 season, four issues are planned. "Our theme is quality. We're using prior issues of Drum as a model, improving on them and getting a more firm base of direction and organization to our magazine."

Drum has received $19,000 in aid from the Student Activities Fund for this year's publication. "Everything that we want to do, will get done, even if we don't have enough money, we'll try."

The Drum's staff main goal is to get its publication to other colleges in the area as well as to black students on this campus. "...to let them know what's going on and then to have them come in and talk; find out what makes us tick."

The first issue of Drum this season will be out in the first weeks of December.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

If you want quick answers, ask Gemini. If you desire a studious reply, aim your question at Sagittarius. If it's a recipe you need, call on a Cancer individual. If you seek a solution concerning a love dilemma, press the button for Leo.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Creativity and flexibility become twin allies. Stand tall for principles. One close to you may try to discourage. Key is to accept without being cowed. Message will become increasingly clear.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Blocks, obstacles may appear. Accept these as healthy challenges. Spotlight is on how well you deal with opposition. You can learn. You can get lay of land. You can regain bearings. Do so.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your energies need outlet. You find way of expressing yourself. Refuse to be discouraged by one in habit of singing blues. Be enthusiastic. Also be aware of need to correct obvious faults.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money comes your way. Evaluate assets. Accept cooperation from family member. Gift purchase now is favored. Remember birthdays, other anniversaries. Youngster needs special attention.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Perceive inner needs, motives. Find out the why of events. Do some self analysis. Judgment, intuitive intellect are on target. Perfect techniques. Don't fear one who shouts.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Disagreement with relatives, neighbors should not be permitted to grow out of proportion. Make intelligent concession. Bring forth sense of humor. Realize one who is handicapped is nervous.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Friends may disagree among themselves. Stick to principles. Finish what you start. Some around you display paucity of ideas. Set your own pace. You will attract people to you with their problems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Boost up ladder is distinct possibility. Means you are aided in fulfillment of special ambition. Stick to facts. Leave speculation to others. Display your own style. Your personal rhythm succeeds.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Follow through on hunch. Unorthodox approach succeeds. Aquarian individual plays key role. What you learned in past is brought forward. You learn how to apply knowledge in more effective manner.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 21): There is more than one way of accomplishing your purpose. You find out; you are aided by one who appears uninterested. New friendship is formed. But you must be self-reliant.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Lie low; do more listening than talking. Emphasis on contracts, partnerships, special agreements. If married, male plays special role. If single, talk of marriage is in the air.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Low key approach brings best results. Obtain hint from Aquarius message. Talk of travel, future plans tend to dominate. Exchange ideas. Member of opposite sex plays meaningful compliment.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can help those with problems. Often, in fact, you are better at aiding others than at solving your own problems. Emotional blocks are due to dissolve. You will be happier; you will do more traveling; social life will be accelerated. Sagittaria can help you with finances.

The Best Way To Cure A Frustrating Season

Legal Problems To Delay Frazier-Ali Rematch Until 72...?

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP)-Heavyweight champion Joe Frazier says he won't be rematched with Muhammed Ali until next year and, because of legal problems, it could be 1973 or 1974.

Frazier appeared before more than 200 convicts in the Ohio Penitentiary Monday on the Avco Broadcasting Corp.'s Phil Donahue Show, a talk program telecast in 44 cities.

Avco is showing how life is in the 134-year-old maximum security prison in a five-part series this week and picked Frazier as the leadoff guest.

"I'd like to meet him (Ali) next year," said Frazier. "But it probably won't be until 1973 or 1974 because of contract and legal problems.

"No matter when it is, it'll be an instant replay," predicts the 28-year-old Frazier.

That brought applause from the convicts, mostly black and about evenly divided in their allegiance for the two fighters. In their first meeting March 9 in New York, Frazier decisioned Ali in 15 rounds.

One convict suggested that Ali, who has been out of action for over three years while lawyers appealed his draft evasion conviction, would have beaten Frazier several years ago.

"Three years ago I'd have taken him apart," answered Frazier.

Another prisoner, obviously an Ali supporter, questioned Frazier for always calling Ali by his former name, Cassius Clay. The champ said he had a reason for that.

"I'm just a little more clever than him, I call him Clay to make him mad.

"He says he's gonna whup you when you call him that," Frazier said.

"When he sees the tube and hears this, he'll get angry," predicted the champion.

"He'll call me tomorrow and say, "Joe Frazier, I'm gonna get you."

An inmate asked if Ali still calls Frazier ugly.

"Ugly?" answered Joe, "No, he don't call me that any more."

Frazier said he has respect for Ali's Muslim religion and revealed, "In private, I'll say, 'how you doing, Ali?'"

Frazier said he has a lot of respect for Ali, but admitted making two mistakes in his first meeting with him.

"In the 11th round when I had him in trouble, I should have put more pressure on him. And in the 15th when he was down I should have rushed in and tapped him one," the champ said.

Frazier admitted he was up to 225 pounds because he couldn't work out traveling with his band, the Knockouts.

Frazier hasn't fought since meeting Ali.

Metallo Heads YanCon Picks

UMass halfback Paul Metallo, Vermont end Wayne Bulman and New Hampshire halfback Dennis Coady have been chosen as the top offensive, defensive and sophomore players in the Yankee Conference for their performances last Saturday.

Metallo, a 5'10 180-lb. junior, set a new UMass rushing record with 258 yards on 28 carries, including TD runs of 3, 4, 17 and 53 yards, to spark a 38-27 upset over Holy Cross. Metallo had 9 runs of 10 or more yards.

Bulman, a 6'3 220-lb. junior, sacked the quarterback 5 times and had 6 unassisted and 11 assisted tackles to help Vermont overtake Maine 17-13. The Catamounts held Maine to 85 yards rushing with Bulman leading the way.

Coady, a 5'8 165 lb. sophomore, carried 24 times for 122 yards, ran back 3 punts for 26 yards and 3 kickoffs for 67 yards as the key offensive threat in UNH's come-from-behind 24-24 tie at Springfield. Last week he was chosen as the top YanCon offensive player.

Other nominations were: Offense-SE Chris Hess (Rhode Island), SE Dave Paul (Maine), FB John Richard (New Hampshire), TE Tim Sullivan (Vermont) & FB Joe Wilson (Holy Cross); Defense-T Nelson Cassavaugh (New Hampshire), LB Dan Harper (Holy Cross), E Steve Furness (Rhode Island), S John O'Neil (UMass) & T Dick Todd (Maine); Sophomores-HB Warren Collins (Boston U), HB Steve Coon (Vermont), QB Doug Lentz (Maine), FB Molly McGee (Rhode Island) & QB Peter Vaas (Holy Cross).

NOTE TO MEDIA: Although new Yankee Conference members Holy Cross and Boston U. do not play enough league games to qualify for the Conference championship their players will be listed in the weekly award winners and statistical rankings.

Nebraska Increases Lead Over Oklahoma In College Ratings

(AP)-Nebraska continued to pull away from Oklahoma in this week's Associated Press college football rankings while the Nitany Lions of Penn State climbed ahead of Auburn into fifth place.

The Cornhuskers of Nebraska received 41 first-place votes and 1,060 points from a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters following an impressive 37-0 trouncing of Iowa State. That was seven more top votes and 10 more points than last week.

Meanwhile, runner-up Oklahoma had its hands full in beating Missouri 20-3 and wound up with six first-place ballots and 968 points, compared to 17, and 1,010 the previous week. Two weeks ago, the Sooners trailed Nebraska by a mere 24 points.

Michigan also took down six first-place votes and retained third place with 876 points after walloping Iowa 63-7. Alabama turned back Louisiana State 14-7 and held onto fourth place.

Then came the only change among the top eight teams. Penn State, a 63-27 winner over Maryland, got one top vote and 618 points and rose from sixth to fifth. Auburn, which defeated Mississippi State 30-21 after leading by 30 points entering the final period, slipped from fifth to sixth, although the Tigers received the remaining first-place ballot.

Georgia and Notre Dame remained in the 7-8 spots. The Bulldogs whipped Florida 49-7 and the Fighting Irish clobbered Pitt 56-7.

Ohio State, a 17-10 loser to Michigan State, skidded from ninth to 16th while Arizona State trimmed Brigham Young and went from 10th to ninth. Stanford, which clinched a second straight Pacific-8 crown and Rose Bowl berth by defeating UCLA 20-9, climbed from 12th to 10th.

Although the order changed in spots, the Top Twenty teams were the same as a week ago. The Second Ten consisted of Tennessee, Colorado, Texas, Toledo, Southern California, Ohio State, Arkansas, Houston, Washington and Louisiana State.

Last week it was Tennessee, Stanford, Colorado, Toledo, Texas, Arkansas, Southern Cal, LSU, Houston and Washington.

The Top Twenty teams, with season records and total points. Points tabulated on basis of 20-18-16-14-12-10-9-8-etc.:

1. Nebraska	9-0	1060
2. Oklahoma	8-0	968
3. Michigan	9-0	876
4. Alabama	9-0	736
5. Penn State	8-0	618
6. Auburn	8-0	601
7. Georgia	9-0	551
8. Notre Dame	7-1	446
9. Arizona St.	7-1	283
10. Stanford	7-2	255
11. Tennessee	6-2	226
12. Colorado	7-2	215
13. Texas	6-2	138
14. Toledo	9-0	121
15. So. Calif.	5-4	59
16. Ohio St.	7-1	56
17. Arkansas	6-2-1	50
18. Houston	6-2	47
19. Washington	7-2	36
20. Louisiana St.	6-2	29

PIEL-There were five touchdowns scored by the Redmen in the 38-27 victory over Holy Cross last Saturday. Paul Metallo scored four touchdowns with the fifth belonging to quarterback Piel Pennington who rolled out and ran into the endzone for a four-yard jaunt.

Ruggers At Home Saturday

The UMass ruggers play their last home game of the fall this Saturday when they host Tufts RFC in two games on the UMass rugby pitch. The UMass first XV opens action at 1:00 P.M.

UMass RFC will be looking to improve their 3-5 record. The injury-plagued Redmen dropped a squeaker to Holy Cross 0-4 last Saturday morning. The loss to the Purple came on the heels of a crushing defeat administered by the best club side in New England, Harvard Business, 47-7.

Saturday, UMass lost scrum-half Jim Clapper for the season when he pulled a hamstring. He joins a [illegible] watching the game from the sideline, but the return of fullback Jack Hamilton and lock Bill Kesgen should provide the offensive punch missing against Holy Cross.

The UMass second XV continues to fare well as they tied Holy Cross B's 4-4 on Bill Owens' fumble recovery in goal. The B forwards, a strong mobile pack led by Owens and Pete Herrmann, should put UMass on top against the Tufts side.

With UMass footballers playing at UNH and the soccer season over, the final rugby home match will provide ample excitement for the spectator willing to brave the late fall winds on the Boyden pitch.

Harriers Finish Third

By JAY NESTOR

"We've come a long way, and I'm real happy about how the team performed today," quoted the beaming cross-country coach Ken O'Brien when his team arrived home from the New England Meet. Who would have thought at the beginning of the season that UMass would grab third in New England, only to be edged out of second by two points?

"We had an outside chance to win, but we were primarily shooting the third and fourth," said the pleased Coach. Providence College put it all together to garner the big New England victory. Led by Bill Speck in seventh position, they put four men within the top twenty-five finishers to grap the title. Following Providence's total of 88 points, was Northeastern, whose 99 point total gave them second by two points to Massachusetts with 101. This is the same Northeastern that bombed the Redmen at the outset of the season.

The top man for UMass was Randy Thomas in eleventh place. As O'Brien termed Thomas' performance, "It rates with Ron Wayne's first place and Larry Paulson's second place of last year. It was a super job." This is a fantastic performance by the talented Freshman, and he is quickly proving that his potential is vast indeed.

Bill Gillin, another freshman, was the second Redman finisher as he placed in seventeenth position. The worth of these two harriers has been proven invaluable to the UMass effort. It is an exciting thought to think of what the future holds in store for them.

Tom Derderian scored a solid twentieth place; two positions up on Yankee Conference Champion, Allieu Massaquoi. Mike McCusker ran by far his best race as a Redman, with his twenty-sixth position and fourth man finish for UMass. Recording the same time was stable Peter Crisci, right behind McCusker. Doug O'Connell was sixth man for UMass, while only a second behind the two Redmen, finishing twenty-ninth.

Overall, Dan Moynihan of Tufts broke Redman Ron Wayne's New England record of 24:11 on the Franklin Park course as he cruised to a time of twenty four minutes flat. Charles Duggan of Springfield followed him to the line nineteen seconds later as Moynihan dominated the race.

Citing his team's progress in the race, Coach O'Brien remarked, "Teamwise, we ran well. At the mile mark, everyone was there. We recorded one of our better team splits at thirty-four seconds, and this was enhanced by Randy's great run." The team was mostly beat by the top men of Providence and Northeastern, but they picked up well on the fourth and fifth men of each team. This has been the typical UMass trait of the season, and they used it well at this meet.

In the JV meet, Redman Rick Barry lead the entire race only to be overhauled by two Providence men in the final 220 yards. It was a heart breaker for Barry, who led by forty yards earlier in the race. Wayne Lucas capped his best race of the season with a strong fifth place finish. He had fought it out at the front with Barry and the Providence harriers. Chris Chambers broke into the Providence contingent with seventh place.

Don Dunsky and Paul Albini finished fifteenth and sixteenth respectively, as UMass grabbed second place behind the Providence second team. It was a powerful achievement for Providence to win both divisions of this New England Meet.

Every one except Tom Derderian and Peter Crisci will be coming back next year to this promising cross-country team. A third place finish is something to be proud of when the condition of this team at the start of the season is taken into consideration. Coach O'Brien certainly did his rebuilding work.

As an added bonus, Coach Ken O'Brien was named Coach of the Year, by the New England Coaches Association. This was bestowed on the basis of the performance of his last year's cross-country, indoor, and outdoor teams. After this New England third place finish, he stands a good chance of being in the running for this year's award.

"They Just Love To Hit People"

By EARLE BARROLL

The linebacker is a rare breed of football player, their Saturday calling for a specialized effort from sideline to sideline, from the enemy backfield to their own defensive backfield.

They roam the field with wreckless abandon looking to hit people...the thing they do best. They need the size and strength of a lineman to handle the rush and they need the speed and agility to stay with backs on pass patterns.

Their position is the toughest mentally and physically on the field. They play a dual roll and it is this breed of athlete the coaches look for to man this slot in the defense.

Dennis Collins, Joe Sabulis, Doug Winslow and Tim Edwards are just this type of football player.

UMass has been blessed with four outstanding linebackers this season and over this past weekend they had perhaps their toughest day of the year in trying to stop the Holy Cross tandem of Joe Wilson and Eddie Jenkins.

Yesterday on a cold and blustery football field behind Alumni Stadium these four took time out to look back over this game and their feelings on their position.

Edwards is the "fourth" linebacker on the UMass defense. Dick MacPherson has employed four linebackers since the UConn game in order to "get the best men on the field." In Edwards he's picked a jim-dandy to man the position.

He plays as a "quick defensive end" shutting off the run, charging the quarterback from the outside and being able to get back for the pass.

Does he remember Wilson? Just take a look at his broken finger on his left hand...Wilson stepped on it Saturday on a green pass.

"I had to grab at Wilson on Saturday which is different from what I usually do," he said. "Usually I give the runner shots but he wouldn't stop so I had to grab."

As for his "fourth linebacker post", he said, "It's great...I practice every day like the rest of the players and want to play."

He agrees that the linebacker is the best athlete on the field and he also prides himself in quickness, "enough to keep up with Paul Metallo coming out of the backfield in pre-season," he smiled.

Edwards also called himself and Collins and Sabulis mean. But Winslow...that's another story. He's hostile.

To this accusation Doug put it this way, "I have a job to do and I do it. It involves hitting people. I don't try to be punishing. I just make a play and try to make it well."

Winslow is the middle linebacker and a young one at that. He's a convert from defensive end where he played behind Jim Kelliher last year...which means he didn't play and he sees this as a real chance to get into the action.

He took his lickings the first few weeks of the season but has come on like a gangbuster as of late and has been an integral part in the defensive revival.

MacPherson said of him earlier in the season, "we'll have to let him mature" and mature he has.

Collins is the little guy of the four, only 6' and 190 pounds (The others range around 6'3 and 2 5.) He felt he could have hit better on Saturday on the sprint outs. He did make adjustment in the third quarter to stop the outside run.

He called Wilson and Jenkins the "best backs I've seen this year as a tandem...even harder to defense than Ed Marinaro of Cornell."

"I really like my position this year," he emphasized. "Last year I was too small. I like to cover the run...this is what the linebacker has to think first, the run."

And like all hearty linebackers he likes the main weapon in their repetoire..."I like to hit people."

He also calls the linebacker the best athlete overall on the team. And his number one example...Joe Sabulis whom he calls, "the best I've ever seen."

What does Joe have to say about this? Not much...he's a modest sort, but inside his lanky frame is perhaps the best linebacker in New England. (He was all New England last year.)

He likes the running game and plays with the epitome of pursuit.

Coach Bob Pickett who coordinates the linebackers calls these four "a great unit."

"Outside of the quarterback this is the most demanding mental process to play," he said. "They play the run first but have pass responsibilities.

"They just love to hit people."

Cover the run, cover the pass and hitting people, these four give UMass the finest unit, at the most specialized position, in New England.

A WILSON—BURGER—Holy Cross' Joe Wilson (40) readies for a big hit from the oncharging Dennis Collins(43) in Saturday's win over the Crusaders. Dave Levine made the initial shot (he's on the bottom) and Dennis Keating(41), Joe Sabulis(52) and Johnny Jones(79) move in to apply the coup de grace. (MDC photo by Barbara Brecher)

Mexican Open Eyes American Spot

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Mexican Open, for years a poor relation among the world's pro golf championships, is casting ambitious eyes on a spot on the rich American tour.

"We have to raise the purse to $100,000, and to do that we have to get a commercial sponsor," said Guillermo Lozano Jr., general director of the Mexican PGA, who describes himself as "the little Joe Dey."

Dey is commissioner of the tournament players division of the American American PGA, governing body for the American pro tour which this year offered more than $7 million in prize money.

The Mexican Open, which boosted its total purse to $28,000 for the championship that ended Sunday, is not associated with the American tour in any way and the money won by U.S. pros does not count on their American totals.

"We would like to talk to Joe Dey about getting a place on the American tour," Lozano said. "But first we have to get some money. To go to $100,000, well, that's over one million pesos and we would have to get some backing.

"We did have some help from Seagrams, but they are backing the Canadian Open now. We'd be very happy to get help from some American company that has interests here, an airline, or a tobacco company or something."

Lee Trevino, who failed in his bid to add this national title to his collection of American, British and Canadian championships easily was the biggest attraction.

Orioles Win In Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Brooks Robinson blasted two home runs and Frank Robinson and Andy Etchebarren one each as the Baltimore Orioles drubbed Japan's champion Tokyo Yomiuri Giants 7-0 in a game shortened to five innings by rain Sunday.

The Orioles, held to a 10-inning, 9-9 tie by the Giants Saturday, took a commanding 5-0 lead on three home runs in the first inning.

Leadoff man Paul Blair and second baseman Dave Johnson both singled. After big first baseman Boog Powell struck out, Frank Robinson clouted Yomiuri starter Hisao Niuri's fast delivery deep into the left-field bleachers.

It was the veteran 36-year-old Robinson's second homer in Japan.

Korean-born southpaw Niura struck out Merv Rettenmund for the second out but yielded back-to-back homers to Brooks Robinson and Etchebarren.

The triumph maintained Baltimore's unbeaten record in Japan.

Trustees To Meet On Campus Conflicts

By MDC STAFF

The Board of Trustees will be meeting today at 2:00 P.M. in rooms 162 and 175 CC to discuss the conflicts between the campus and the President's office that resulted in former Chancellor Tippo's resignation last month. The Board will be responding to the report of the Committee of Concern, a group of students and faculty empowered by the three campus senates to speak for the campus.

Dean Bruce Morris, Chairman of the committee, will present the report to the Trustess. The Faculty Senate will be represented by its delegate, Prof. Joseph Burroughs. The Graduate Student Senate will be represented by its president, Mrs. Veda Ross. Student Senate Vice President Larry Ladd will represent that body.

The report of the Committee of Concern outlines four major areas of tension between the campus and the systems office that the Board should act upon. According to the report, the board should take the following steps:

"1. That the board set forth a clear demarcation of the functions of the central office and of the constituent units of the university, incorporating the maximum possible degree of autonomy for the units within the general policies developed by the Board of Trustees.

2. That the board reaffirm the principle; expressed at the outset of the expansion of the university beyond one campus, that improvement of the quality of programs in the newer units not be made at the expense of quality in the older units.

3. That the board clearly and carefully describe the budgetary process and establish and delineate the roles of all constituent units therein.

4. That the board establish a policy of full communication on all major issues to all elements of the system and that the senates and their committees be given full opportunity to present their views on all important matters at all stages of the decision-making process."

The issue is the degree of autonomy and participation the board is willing to grant to the campus and its various constituencies. Spokesmen for the Committee of Concern report that they will press the board for specific commitments to grant the campus considerable authority to decide its own affairs and for a great degree of participation by students and faculty in decisions made at the university level.

The report of the committee was originally presented to the Board of Trustees at their last meeting, but the Board did not respond to the report. At that meeting, the report was read and the Trustees then moved on to the next item of business. According to members of the Committee of Concern, that lack of reaction of the Trustees was a source of considerable consternation to members of the three campus senates. Following the meeting of the Board, the Faculty, Graduate, and Undergraduate Senates all passed a motion urging the Trustees to come to the Amherst campus to respond directly to their concerns.

Today's meeting of the Board is open to all members of the campus community.

Culturnatives

Life Was Just Too Short

By GILBERT J. SALK

Today is my birthday, but it's not a day of happiness, for it is also a day of loss. On my birthday last year, I participated in the memorial service for my best friend, who had died four days earlier.

It seems appropriate to use this week's CULTURNATIVES colum to discuss Ron Hardy, the love he and I shared, and the memories of him which keep him alive within me. Maybe we can dispel a few myths about death, and open some doors on brotherhood and community.

Ron Hardy was a Baptist campus minister. He and I met shortly after the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., after we had put together a memorial program for King. Together, with a few other people, we organized the Martin Luther King, Jr., Social Action Council.

Ron taught me many lessons. One of the most important was that Christianity and the church were two different things. He and I both shared a deep concern for humanity, and a painful awareness of the responsibilities of learning to treat all men as brothers in a world where brotherhood was denied by napalm in Vietnam, by individual and institutional racism, by the Chicago Police Dept., by "revolutionaries" calling some people "pigs". Ron taught me to trust his use of Christian terminology as meaning the same things as my humanistic rhetoric.

Ron taught me a lesson I'm still internalizing–that, regardless of the political and organizational demands put upon us by ourselves or our friends, we must still take-or-make-time for people. He was a one-man support group for many people. He was genuinely interested in their concerns, their hopes, their fears.

Ron understood that the direction of the revolution was cultural, that it was necessary to build and maintain support communities, that people could not live their lives apart from other people, that current institutions were dehumanizing, that alienation was a major force in the lives of those living in today's society. His philosophy and his life-style were one and the same, and both made up his ministry.

Ron wasn't perfect. But his faults were mostly faults of excessive zeal, of trying to do more than any one man possible could. I loved him. He was my brother. And on November 6, 1970, he died.

He died of severe burns, and the date of his death is not a painful memory for me, for it was almost a relief to know that his pain was ended. The loss really hit me four days later, on my birthday, when the memorial service was held, and that loss is as fresh in my mind today as it was a year ago.

But with the loss is the memory of a kind of joy, a celebration of life. Ron's death, my birthday, his wife Anne, pregnant at the time, later giving birth to a beautiful little girl, a sureness that Ron left a legacy behind that will live in the minds and hearts of those who knew him.

Death, it seems, is a beginning, not an end. Ron's physical presence is no longer here, but I still hear his laugh or his voice, and I often find myself thinking about what kind of advice he'd offer or comments he'd make if I was rapping with him about some problem or other. Having shared his life brings me closer to others who also shared. He first introduced me to the United Christian Foundation, and I now find myself working at reorganizing UCF and being very concerned with thoughts of community and human understanding, concerns which Ron first thought out in me, and expressed as a goal he was working on in UCF.

Ron is a part of me. He is part of me as a draft counselor, and many of the ideas I write about in this column are the results of seeds planted in conversations I had with him.

It's hard to separate life and death. Each gives something to the other, and each has a message of its own. Yes, I'm sad today. But the sorrow is for Ron, that he can't be here to share what tomorrow is going to be, and to dream with me about what the day after tomorrow might be like. But I have my life, and the memory of what he did with his, and I know that my course must be to live today as if my revolution had already been completed, and that the world was what I would like it to be. That seems to be the only road to freedom.

Take some time today, and celebrate life. Live it. PEACE.

Two UM Students Sentenced For Drugs

Two former University of Massachusetts students pleaded guilty Monday in Hampshire County Superior Court to charges stemming from their arrest in the May 14 drug raid at the University.

Christopher Ryan, 19, of Greenfield pleaded guilty to charges of possession, sale and possession with intent to sell the drug LSD. He had been accused of two counts of each.

Dist. Atty. John Callahan recommended to Judge Andrew R. Linscott that Ryan be given a 60-day term in the Hampshire County House of Correction for the possession charge and a term of five to seven years at Walpole State Prison for the sale charge.

Ryan's attorney, Norman Callahan, of Greenfield, argued for a suspended sentence for him. He offered for consideration letters from Ryan's high school principal and counselor, from the manager of the Erving paper mill who said that he would give the youth a job, from his grammar school principal and from others in the Greenfield community.

Model Student

Ryan, he said, "was spiritually, morally and physically impeccable until he went to college." In high school, the attorney said, his client had been a model student while starring on the football team and setting three records at track.

Callahan agreed that the floor where Ryan had lived in Grayson dormitory at UMass had been a center of drug usage and trading at the university. "It took a bus to haul away" all the people on that floor that were arrested for drug dealing, he said.

There was a person on that floor, Callahan said, that was a major dealer in drugs who had gotten residents to sell for him. Callahan conceded that neither Ryan nor Richard Vatcher, 20, of Rehoboth who also pleaded guilty to similar charges, was a primary seller of drugs, but still, he said, "the dollar volume was there."

Ryan was accused of selling a total of 110 tabs of LSD in two separate sales to state trooper Ronald Ford for about $125.

Judge Linscott followed Callahan's recommendation and sentenced Ryan to 60-days for possession and five to seven years, suspended, for selling. Charges of possession with intent to sell were filed by the judge.

Poetry Reading Today At Twelve

Gil Salk and Bob Zelman will do a poetry reading on Wed. Nov. 10 at 12 o'clock noon until 2 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union. The theme of the reading will be political and erotic poetry. Ferlinghetti's epic poem about Pres. R. Milhouse Nixon "Tyrannus Nix?" will be featured.

They will read poems by Allen Ginsberg, Robert Bly, Kenneth Patchen, Lenore Kandel and Michael McClure.

Gil Salk is a draft counselor on campus and author of the "Culturnatives" column. Bob Zelman, who has done many poetry readings on campus before, is a grad student in philosophy.

Nude Scenes On TV Cause Few Ripples

NEW YORK (AP) — Nude scenes have been shown on television this season and the bareness has caused only a ripple of complaint. The nudity has been limited to the Public Broadcasting System, and commercial networks say it's still a far way off.

The glimpses of nudity on PBS have been fleeting, an integral part of the plot, and have been set in classical productions imported from England. The number of protests are so few that officials are surprised.

One station, KTPS-TV, Tacoma, Wash., declined to carry the "Jude the Obscure" segment of "Masterpiece Theatre" series, where the nudity has been this season, because of what it called "risque scenes." PBS said only six or seven of its 211 stations cut the nude scenes from the British-made production before broadcast. Several nude scenes appear in two other segments scheduled later this season.

"It just hasn't been a problem. It hasn't stirred up anything," said Hartford, Gunn, president of PBS. "Masterpiece Theater" is put together at WGBH-TV in Boston.

The productions on "Masterpiece Theatre" were made by the British Broadcasting Corp. and shown over its network in England. The British commercial network also has occasional nudity in dramatic programs.

The three American commercial networks have never shown a nude scene.

Robert D. Wood, president of the CBS Television Network, said, "I wouldn't say that nudity will never come to commercial television. It's like football. It's a game of inches. We may get to where BBC is now in seven or eight years."

James E. Duffy, president of the ABC Television Network, said, "I wouldn't want it on our shows. We go into millions of homes and there are children's morals and religious values to consider."

An NBC spokesman said, "It's ruled out at the present. At some future time I cannot say. We move as society moves, but I don't see public attitudes relaxing that much. The only possible exception would be if it were relevant to a news documentary."

The nude scenes on "Masterpiece Theater" have been:

—In the first episode of "Jude the Obscure," in a wedding night scene, Arabella confesses to Jude that she tricked him into marriage by pretending to be pregnant. She unsnaps her bodice facing the camera and exposes her breasts briefly before turning around.

—In the third episode Sue Bridehead disrobes in front of her college roommate while discussing the acceptability of nudity. There is a full-length shot of her nude back.

—In "Cold Comfort Farm," to be broadcast as a two-hour special Dec. 26, there is breast exposure during the introduction and several scenes of slightly camouflaged nudity.

Strickland On Black History

The Distinguished Visitors Program will be presenting on Thursday, November 11th in Thompson Hall, #104 at 8 p.m. Mr. William Strickland, Senior Research Fellow of the Institute of the Black World. Mr. Strickland will be speaking on the topic "Black History and the Collapse of the Republic".

Mr. Strickland is one of the foremost young writers, historians, educators, and activists in the contemporary struggle for Black liberation in this country. He is one of the founding members of the Institute of the Black World in Atlanta, Georgia and is currently a Senior Research Fellow and Director of Policy Studies for that organization. After receiving undergraduate and graduate degrees at Harvard, where he was also an instructor in race relations, he left Harvard to become Director of the Northern Student Movement which was organized to support the voter registration projects conducted in the South in the early 60's by SNCC, CORE, SCLC and NAACP.

Mr. Strickland has done extensive work in political analysis and organizing having been chairman of the New York State Committee to Support the Mississippi Freedom Democratic Party Challenge and worked with Black political organizations in South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. He has also been a visiting lecturer in history at Columbia University and has lectured extensively at colleges and universities throughout the United States and in East Africa and the Caribbean.

He has been published in Freedomways, Rights and Review The New York Times, The Amsterdam News, Journal of Black Political Economy and other periodical publications. He is co-author of Federal Power in the Suppression of the Black Movement and is currently working with his colleagues at the Institute of the Black World on a volume on Black Studies and the Struggle for Black Education.

As Director of Policy Studies at the IBW, Mr. Strickland has developed a number of programs which include consultative services to local, state and national Black elected officials and seminars and "Think Tank" sessions with national and international Black leaders and activists such as C.L.R. James, Stokely Carmichael, Imamu Amiri Baraka, Charles Koen, Julian Bond, Mrs. Shirley Graham DuBois and others. Mr. Strickland is also coordinator of the Institute's two year project to develop a National Black Agenda, which has organized a national network of Black activists and social analists. This Black agenda network, in conjunction with other elements of the Black community, is attempting to identify and analyze the key problems of Black America and the manner in which they are interrelated. It will propose strategies for coming to grips with these problems and seek to identify, stimulate, or create change agents necessary to implement the recommended strategies. Its areas of concern are education, political organizing, economic development, political control, Pan-African affairs, Black History, health and community services, and cultural definitions.

A coffee hour will follow.

Callahan Clarifies Actions Concerning UMass Drug Cases

By MDC STAFF

District Attorney John Callahan yesterday clarified his actions in cases involving those arrested in last Spring's UMass drug raid, saying that he has been "recommending 5-7 year suspended sentences" because the law requires him to do so.

Responding to a Daily Collegian editorial, Callahan, who is in the midst prosecuting several UMass cases at Superior Court, Northampton, said "Anyone who was in court" knew that he was recommending "suspended" prison sentences. He further stated that there were only three of those arrested last Spring from whom he was recommending "indeterminate" sentences at Concord State Reformatory.

"An 'indeterminate' sentence usually means between seven and nine months, depending upon how the individual works out down there (at Concord)", said Callahan. He also said that the sentences being given at Northampton District Court for the drug offenses were the most lenient in the state.

A Daily Collegian editorial Monday stated that Callahan was "recommending to the judge a 5-7 year term in the notorious Walpole State Prison for a young man convicted of selling LSD."

The editorial added, "Callahan's unreasonable attempts to lock up students in prisons seems to be a political action on his part designed to placate his nervous town constituencies."

The drug raid last Spring at UMass was the result of an undercover investigation by State Trooper Paul Ford. Ford had made purchases of drugs from UMass students, posing as a student here at UMass, using money that District Attorney Callahan had received to conduct the investigation.

The District Attorney is known to have received an additional $2,700 last month for what is generally believed to be another investigation of local drug trafficking. Presumably the money will be used by undercover narcotics agents to purchase drugs.

Gripe Session At School Of Ed.

An open meeting for undergraduates of the School of Education in which various complaints, needs, and ideas, relating to the School of Education were discussed, was held in the School of Education Auditorium last night. The discussion, which drew about fifty students, was sponsored as part of the current School of Education marathon.

The main topic of the night was that of undergraduate representation in decision-making in the School of Education. Presently, all personnel, academic, and other policy decisions for the School of Education are made by the School Council. This council is composed of faculty, administration, and graduate students, and also has three undergraduate seats. Debate centered upon the question of whether the small group of students attending should appoint three people present to represent the 1400 undergraduates of the School of Education.

It was argued and finally decided to send three students to the next meeting, which is to be held at 9:00 A.M. on Thursday, November 18.

Nixon's '72 Campaign Starts Rolling

WASHINGTON (AP) — With election day precisely 52 weeks away, marching orders have been passed to the foot soldiers in the campaign to re-elect Richard Nixon president. The message: "We're going to run like we've never run before."

Nixon has not said publicly that he will seek a new term and probably won't before early next year. But the ever- widening preparations for campaign battle would not be underway without his consent.

Tuesday the President's schedule included visits to New York and Chicago for appearances at Republican fund-raising dinners. His speeches were to be beamed via closed-circuit television to 18 other dinners. At $500 a plate, the GOP hoped to raise $5 million as a substantial down payment on the 1972 campaign.

Aside from such brief forays, Nixon is expected to maintain a low political profile in the months ahead by concentrating all his energies on being President, his advisers said.

But the Nixon camp isn't letting campaign preparations take care of themselves.

"The word is to forget about the power of the incumbency, to organize and build from the bottom up, to take nothing for granted," said one worker who has been active in past Nixon campaigns. "The word is that we're going to run like we've never run before."

Still undecided, sources said, is the timing of Nixon's re-election announcement. The deadline for entering the New Hampshire primary is Jan. 6, and some sources predicted a presidential statement shortly before then.

Interviews with key officials in the Nixon camp disclosed a curious blend of caution and confidence about 1972. Some aides, looking over the crowded field of Democratic presidential hopefuls, talked boldly of an easy victory for Nixon next year.

But other advisers play down such talk. The interviews disclosed that the Nixon campaign likely will be built around a dual theme, peace and prosperity.

But the charting of what issues to stress still is in in its early stages. Far more advanced is the nuts-and- bolts mechanics of organizing for the re-election bid.

From a Pennsylvania Avenue suite a block from the White House gate, a group of political operatives working under the "Citizens for the Re-election of the President" are rebuilding the national campaign organization used successfully by Nixon in 1968.

Set up last spring, the committee is laying the "groundwork which the President can use if he wants, when and if he decides to run again," a spokesman said.

Other sources said the citizens committee, rather than the Republican National Committee, will be the focal point for the re-election effort. It began with a staff of about a dozen in May. Now its staff is nearly three times that size, and by next spring it will triple in size again.

In addition to the headquarters staff, recruiting of the state and local chairmen is under way. "The chairmen are being selected on the basis of their ability to organize down to the precinct level," said one Republican strategist. "We've got to find out who our friends are and to make sure they get out to vote."

Heading current operation of the citizens committee are two former White House aides, Jeb Magruder and Harry Flemming, and one of the party's experienced fund-raisers, Lee Nunn.

But early next year, sources predicted Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell will leave his Cabinet post and take charge of the election effort which he also headed in 1968. Secretary of Commerce Maurice H. Stans may take command of fund-raising forces, they said.

In 1968, Nixon's campaign spent about $14 million for advertising, and campaign planners say the 1972 advertising budget probably will be in the same range.

Besides Mitchell, the dawning of 1972 could draw other veteran GOP political planners into the campaign fold. One of these may be Murray Chotiner, whose ties with Nixon date back to the President's first race for Congress 25 years ago.

Chotiner was on the White House staff until joining a Washington law firm last year.

Chotiner said in an interview he has taken on a few assignments for the White House, but, "I'm not doing anything at the moment for the actual campaign or preparations for the campaign."

Deport Him - The Question Is Where

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thomas Glenn Jolley, a modern man without a country, may have reached the end of the road in his fight to remain in the United States.

The 27-year-old North Carolina native who renounced his citizenship in Canada in 1967 to escape the draft did not win a single vote in the Supreme Court Tuesday on his appeal for a hearing. He faces deportation within 90 days--but to where?

Jolley, now working as a news reporter in Tallahassee, Fla., never applied for Canadian citizenship and Canada has no legal obligation to take him back. An Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman said Canada will be asked to allow Jolley to live there.

If Canada agrees, said chief counsel Charles Gordon of the Immigration Service, then Jolley will cross the border voluntarily or be forced to go there. If Canada refuses, Gordon said, "We will have to find a country that will accept him."

The court made no comment on several claims raised by Jolley's lawyers in an effort to avert deportation. Their main point was that he did not give up his citizenship voluntarily since he renounced it to avoid Army service.

When the news reached Jolley in Tallahassee he said he was not surprised and that he doesn't know what legal avenues remain open. He said he wants to remain in the United States and he still might have a chance if no country can be found to accept him.

In other actions, the court shored up the rights of men and women to be treated equally on the job. In one case the justices let stand a ruling that Pan American World Airways must consider men for stewards. In a second case, the court refused to review a ruling--and thus let it stand--that a South Bend, Ind., brewery cannot force women to retire at 62 while allowing men to work until they are 65.

The justices turned down an appeal by Gov. George Wallace of Alabama attacking the exemption of "superficially charitable, religious, educational or scientific" organizations from the federal income tax.

In other cases the court:

—Ruled invalid a 1970 New Jersey welfare regulation that was designed to limit assistance to families having outside income that amounts to at least two-thirds of their needs.

—Upheld a Georgia election law that requires a majority vote for election to Congress.

—Agreed to decide this term whether illegitimate children are eligible to share in the insurance benefits of their serviceman fathers.

AFL-CIO Criticize Federal Controls

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — AFL-CIO leaders voiced mounting criticism Tuesday of new federal wage controls in reactions ranging from caution to a call for a general protest strike of the labor federation's nearly 14 million members.

"We have introduced a resolution for the AFL-CIO convention opening Nov. 18, to take whatever action is necessary, including a national work stoppage or general strike," said the executive board of the 500,000-member Amalgamated Meat Cutters Union.

The Meat Cutters and several construction union leaders urged AFL-CIO President George Meany to quit President Nixon's 15-man labor-industry public Pay Board, which Monday ordered a general 5.5 percent limit on future pay hikes.

The five labor members of the Pay Board, including Meany, were outvoted 10 to 5 by the industry and public members in the decision which also ruled out most retroactive pay for the current 90-day wage-price freeze and indicated some scheduled pay hikes could be rolled back.

"If President Meany wants to resign from the Pay Board, he has my support," said President Edward J. Carlough of the 150,000 member Sheet Metal Workers.

But some other construction union chiefs, including three on the policy-making 35-man AFL-CIO Executive Council, cautioned against a labor walkout from the Pay Board at least until more details and specific decisions on wage hikes are available.

Rehnquist Testimony Attacked

WASHINGTON (AP)—Spokesman for civil rights groups struck Tuesday at William H. Rehnquist, one of President Nixon's Supreme Court nominees, and challenged testimony he gave to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

But they took no stand either for or against Nixon's other nominee, attorney Lewis F. Powell Jr., of Richmond, Va.

An administration spokesman defended Rehnquist against allegations of racism.

Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., counsel for the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights and a spokesman for Americans for Democratic Action, called Rehnquist "a laundered McCarthyite."

"He is a lawyer without compassion for blacks and other minorities and a lawyer who never once has spoken up for the Bill of Rights," Rauh told the Judiciary Committee.

Also testifying for the conference, Clarence Mitchell said the nomination of Rehnquist, an assistant attorney general, was "an insult to Americans who support civil rights."

Through Rehnquist's nomination, said Mitchell, director of the Washington bureau of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, "the foot of racism is placed in the door of the temple of justice."

Mitchell and Rauh were the leadoff witnesses as the committee, after completing its questioning of the nominees, began taking testimony from about 30 persons who have asked to be heard.

The Justice Department, meanwhile, denied that Rehnquist is or ever was a member of the ultra-conservative John Birch Society. Committee sources said Rehnquist would submit a sworn denial later.

Sidney Zion, a former newspaperman, claimed in a radio interview Monday night that Rehnquist, while a lawyer in Phoenix, Ariz., in 1961 and 1962 had joined the Birch Society.

Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., a Judiciary Committee member who has expressed misgivings about Rehnquist's nomination, told newsmen he knew of no evidence at all to support Zion's allegation.

Rehnquist's record in the racial field was defended by Arthur R. Fletcher, assistant secretary of Labor and a Negro.

In a speech to a Republican fund-raising dinner at Phoenix, Ariz., Monday night, Fletcher cited Rehnquist's role in the so-called Philadelphia Plan through which the administration has sought to increase employment of blacks in the building trades.

Fletcher said Rehnquist did the legal work and drafted a brief on the plan. He noted that the Supreme Court upheld it and added:

"So for those who say Rehnquist is a racist, I'm here to say just the opposite...because he took a stand for equal-employment opportunities for minorities."

Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., the committee chairman, previously has said that full FBI field investigations of both Rehnquist and Powell turned up nothing reflecting adversely on either of them.

U.S. Advisory Effort Cut

SAIGON (AP)-The U.S. advisory effort in South Vietnam is being sharply cut as American combat troops withdraw.

When the Military Assistance Advisory Group became the U.S. Military Assistance Command, Vietnam-or MACV-in 1964, there were fewer than 1,000 American advisers.

That number soared to 10,500 during the peak years of U.S. involvement.

The U.S. Command says there are now 9,700 advisers in Vietnam, but many of these are no longer in the field. Officials say substantial cuts in the advisory effort will be made in the next eight months.

The cutback already has had a major effect on the number of battalion advisory teams, district advisory teams and mobile advisory teams in the field.

In Brief...

SAIGON (AP)—A U.S. expert painted a bleak picture Tuesday for South Vietnam if Washington cuts off all economic aid.

The informant, who asked not to be identified, said its armed forces would have to be cut nearly in half at the risk of military setbacks. If not that, then the nation will have to try to ride out disastrous inflation, he said.

"I don't think they could survive it," in either case, the source said.

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y. (AP)—In their first appearance at the United Nations, three members of Red China's advance guard visited headquarters Tuesday to discuss problems related to the arrival of the main Peking delegation Thursday.

The 2-hour and 25-minute visit came as a delegation of more than 40 took off from the mainland capital with a personal send-off by Premier Chou En-lai and a cheering crowd of thousands.

WASHINGTON (AP)—The President's Pay Board does not expect that many businessmen will seek rollbacks of scheduled wage increases in existing labor agreements, informed sources said Tuesday.

Under general guidelines approved Monday night, a businessman may appeal for a rollback of scheduled wage increases exceeding 5.5 per cent a year. He will get it if the Pay Board decides the raise is "unreasonably inconsistent".

WESTPORT, Mass. (AP)—Russian negotiators met with officials of a local lobster company in its weathered dockside offices here Tuesday and agreed to reach "an amicable settlement" of the firm's $377,000 damage suit against the Soviet Union.

Joseph S. Gaziano, president of Prelude Corp., made the announcement after a two-hour session with a three-man Russian delegation headed by Semeonovich Babaev, president of the Soviet fishing fleet. He said they'd meet again Wednesday to draw up final terms.

WASHINGTON (AP)—Donning his political cloak, President Nixon was cast in the starring role Tuesday as the Republican party sought at 20 dinners across the country to raise a multimillion-dollar war chest for the 1972 campaign.

Nixon planned to fly to New York to address a Tuesday night dinner, then head for Chicago to appear personally at a second dinner.

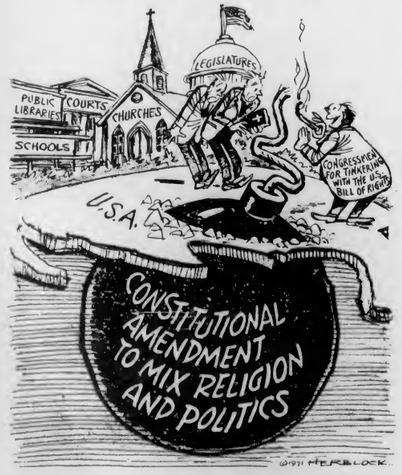
One Step More

Though it may seem like a dead issue to those who have not closely followed the career of the Committee of Concern, campus autonomy, or lack of it, will be the main subject before the Board of Trustees as they gather here today to discuss the conflicts which surrounded the resignation of Chancellor Tippo.



The aim of the Committee is to get the Board to grant this campus, with specific commitments, the authority it needs to determine its own affairs and to allow students and faculty a stronger voice in decisions made on the university level. Both of these issues can be directly traced to the Tippo incident and to the actions of the Board at its meeting concerning the resignation.

However, the Board, in its infinite wisdom, chose at that time to virtually ignore the suggestions of the Committee. It is possible that this was done so the Trustees could more closely study the proposals. If so, let them display the knowledge gained from this perusal period with a concrete program to implement and institutionalize the recommendations of the Committee.

We fear, though, that this will not be the case and that the Board will be little better prepared to offer hard solutions than it was a month ago. A month is long enough for the enthusiasm to drain from any proposal and perhaps the Board felt it could procrastinate the proposal into oblivion. Luckily for this campus, though, there are some dedicated people who would not allow this to happen.

The Trustees must face the fact that unless these questionsare answered now, they may lead to a more critical conflict in the future; a conflict which the Board will not be able to sweep under the rug of parliamentary procedure. That the Trustees were willing to come here to discuss the problem is a positive step and deserves our commendation. We hope that they are willing to take another step towards campus peace and security.

A Cyclops Gone Blind

This weekend witnessed another of what has become almost institutionalized anti-establishment demonstrations. The demonstration is something that most of us have grown up with. In fact, we have become so used to the role of demonstrator that we often fail to perceive the meaning of the demonstration itself. Like actors, we tend to become so caught up in our part that we fail to realize the significance of the play itself. We come to think in terms of what we are demonstrating for, rather than in terms of why we have to demonstrate.

This tendency to overlook the significance of demonstration has been almost universal. Demonstrating has been a key factor in American life for over a decade, but most people overlook the action itself in favor of examining the participants. Literally volumes have been written on the cause of student dissent. Long books have poured forth examining the effect of affluence and permissiveness on the young mind. Great rhetorical masterpieces have been produced proclaiming this the most moral generation that ever lived. On the other hand, speeches have echoed forth decrying student demonstrations as the root of all evil. However, I think all of these have really missed the point.

How people view the student movement is based more upon how they view themselves than upon reality. There are those who feel uncertain because they have been unable to adjust to the rapid change from a society of exterior moral norms and economic subsistence to a society that is both permissive and affluent. There are the liberal idealist who see the students fighting for the things which they themselves have failed to achieve. But most important is the reaction of "Middle America" and it is fear--fear of their own insecurity. Middle America still believes that happiness is just around the corner, but they also know that like the Red Queen it takes all the running they can do to stay in the same place. They don't analyze why this is so, all they can see is that the demands of the demonstrators threaten their own precarious stability. If you combine all of these reactions, you begin to get a picture of the state of society itself.

The issues involved in the demonstrations tend to convey a false dichotomy between establishment and anti-establishment, remove these for a moment and you get a picture of a very unstable society. You have a society full of uncertainty, frustration and insecurity of which the demonstrations are a visible manifestation. Thus the demonstrations become not something that are removed from society, but rather they are a reflection of it. They are simply an overt manifestation of the subconscious feeling of the overall society that things are not working as they should--because if things were working as they should there would be no need for demonstrations, but some how the system has broken down.

When viewed in this context, demonstrations become an important key to an overall social phenomena. The reason for this mass insecurity and social instability may be attributed to the fact that the system has failed to fulfill its purpose. The fact is that government has ceased to effectively function. It has ceased to lead the way; it has lost its ability to inspire people. The prime example of this is Indochina; there as elsewhere the phrase: "we are the unwilling led by the unqualified to do the unnecessary," sums up the attitude of a society that lacks a purpose. It lacks a purpose because government itself lacks a purpose. Despite promises to create a "Great Society", it is obvious to all that government has ceased to be creative. Even if you overlook its destructiveness in war, it is evident that government is reacting more than it is acting. It is trying to help the poor, without really ending poverty. It is trying to control crime and urban decay, yet it seems incapable of stopping either. The best it can do to help or to control problems, but not to solve them. Government has ceased to govern. It is only capable of creating administrative bureaucracies to supervise stop-gap measures like welfare, model cities, revenue sharing and the wage and price freeze, but it seems incapable of solving the problems themselves. When seen in this light, demonstrations do not represent a rebellion against a functioning system, but rather frustration at a system that has ceased to effectively function. Maybe the reason why demonstrations have become institutionalized is that the institution itself has ceased to work. In this context, it becomes important to remember that we may be fighting a monster, but that monster is a Cyclops gone blind. Thus our goal should not be to tear down a system which isn't working in the first place, but rather to build one that will.

Shades Of HK

Rumors abounded yesterday in the wake of a disclosure by the Daily Collegian that a Student Senate Concerts Committee has been working for six months in secret on a plan to bring Black Sabbath and Grand Funk Railroad to campus in the spring.

The committee, headed up by Senate Treasurer Rick Verrochi, made its recommendations in a blue ribbon report handed to President Lee Sandwen over a University Hot Brown at the Top of the Campus Monday afternoon.

Sandwen accepted the report with regret, warning that it came at a financially difficult time. Howie Bresner has since introduced a bill into the Program Council that would establish another Concerts Committee to be headed by Russell G. Vierra, of Poisson-Vierra Productions, the successful promoters of last spring's concerts.

Verrochi warned Bresner yesterday afternoon when they bumped into each other scrambling for the executive washroom in RSO , that he (Verrochi) would take any attempt on Bresner's part to cloud the concerts issue as a serious challenge to the Senate's authority.

Bresner claims: "Verrochi was throwing around a lot of words like "Senate investigation" and "Curtailment of funds pending rectification."

Verrochi, speaking by telephone from his penthouse suite in Greenough, denied that any such discourse between the two ever occurred.

"Howie's off his nut, that's all. All I said was that I'd love to take him to the cleaners." "Uhhh, that is, I said I'd like to take him to the Hatch so we could talk about it," he said.

Verrochi and Bresner have scheduled a joint press conference for today at 4 p.m. in Curry Hicks Cage. It will be open to the University community.

Meanwhile, Chester G. Wajinski, head of the janitor's union, has warned that unless the Senate makes concessions to the Polish-American Workers Alliance on campus, he will order a general strike on maintenance services.

The union is reportedly seeking Lawrence Welk and Little Polka Richie for the concerts.

And while all of this is going on, somewhere in Fall River, Harold Koltin tosses ane turns in his sleep.

We Wonder Why

Whistling Wilbur Wilson whistles while we watch with wonder. (Wilbur works with water.)

"Wait Witty Wilbur!" whispers weak, weepy, Winnona. Why wasn't William whittling woodchips while Wilbur whistled? Where was William? Wilma witnessed William with Wendy wading. Which Wendy? Why, waddling Wendy with white, whiskery whiteheads!

Wilbur winked with Wilma. Watch weak, weepy Winnona (wench) wreck what Wendy wanted--wants--William.

Without Wilbur, Wilma, Wendy--Winnona was whitewashing Williams wheelbarrow. What's with Winnona? Witchery! Wicked Winnona. Where will William whack Winnona? We worried.

Wednesday we went wild! William was whipping withered Winnona with weapons, water pistols, wilted watermelons, warping Winnona worse...worse.

We wouldn't want William wearing Wendy's washed well-worn, wet woolens. (Weird woman.)

Winnona's wake--

Wintery, whispering, Winnona with willows--wailing, wishing, wanting, wailing--William's worshipper.

William went whacko.

Oh, Morbid Soul, Be Still

The use is gone, the quitting stares me... the leaving calls me new.
The hope is lost, no longer dares me...
the fear of losing, now the fear is through.
I fear the helpless, too.
The helpless that is me and you.
My very soul, my only growing brother,
how more could you endure?
Awake tonight, asleep tomorrow,
how well thought you were sure?
The jungle goes much deeper than we knew,
now that we're there.
Must do our part on jungle thorough-fare.
Good-bye.

Letters To The Editor

Ignorant Little Children

(Ed. note-This letter appeared in the Boston Globe and refers to an article which appeared in the same paper)

Editor, Safety Valve:

I'm a UMass student. I am a product of my environment--UMass. If I do anything wrong, it's because I don't know any better. My "social consciousness" has not yet been developed, even though I may be 21 years old. Getting involved with drugs is something every UMass student does as soon as he gets up there--there is no way to avoid it.

Insulting and ridiculous. Incredibly, it comes from such upstanding and educated citizens as our lawyers. This is the attitude inferred in Friday night's article about the two UMass students involved in drug charges and their "Stupidity Pleas" presented by their lawyers. This is apparently a new plea and a very insulting one-both lawyers tried to beg off their clients by claiming they were "A product of the UMass environment". Being a UMass student, I have to take offense at this inference that we students are ignorant little children and I would be embarrassed to be a client of these two lawyers.

This is NOT meant in defense of the two students involved with drugs. I only have respect enough for them as "persons" to think that they knew what they were doing and should take the consequences for their actions. A student only gets involved with drugs if he wants to and if he is selling them, it's easy enough to guess that he has outside contacts that are big enough to out him outside the realm of "ignorant and innocent" students.

I should think these respectable lawyers would have more sense than to go around spreading insulting views of their clients and formulating gross generalizations such as making a "zoo" out of the university-a very mistaken assumption. It is respectable people as these lawyers who have the most influence on attitudes here at home and they should be more careful and conscientious of what they have to say.

Strike One

To the Editor:

In response to Reid Fishman's letter (Nov. 4, 1971) concerning McGovern's stand on sending planes to Israel, I would like to say that sending planes to Israel "to protect that country from invasion," (at least we hope that's how they'll be used) is at best a short range program. A program whose strength lies in the fact that if Israel has bigger and better planes than the Arabs, the Arabs will be afraid to attack Israel. Also afraid to negotiate, because it is the Arabs that will be in a bad bargaining position.

This program of sending Israel planes to perpetrate peace through fear, and is in no way bringing the two sides together.

A more long range plan is needed before one side becomes so paranoid that it decides it has to make the first strike. A strike which could put the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in difficult situations.

This type of program shows dangerous lack of foresight, and I feel not only McGovern but every presidential candidate should make an attempt to outline some method by which peace could be attained, in every corner of the world.

Editorial Points

UMass may soon have an airport, compliments of President Wood. We know he has high hopes for this place, but that's going a little far.

Speaking of the President, what if they named the library after him instead of Tippo. They could call it "Wood's Hole."

There was considerable debate in the Student Senate Executive committee meeting about how the Student Senators would sit at meetings. One senator wanted everyone to sit on the floor, apparently so they could all get to know and like each other more. Another wanted to assign seats in alphabetical order, which is the way everyone finally agreed upon. Rumor has it that alphabet lists will be made available to the Senators.

Cold Facts

By ALAN K. WRIGHT

A subject that has always served mankind as a useful conversational resort is weather.

For UMies, that is where weather's usefulness stops.

Just about a week and a half ago, an incredible Indian Summer kept the October mercury above 60 and only ardent ski fans were frowning on the state of affairs. Now, almost without notice, the November winds have begun to whip without mercy. Coats, hats and gloves have quickly become as permanent a part of student equipment as books, bikes, and the tres necessaire backpack.

For the professional class-cutter, a dilemma has been raised. During several weeks of this semester, beautiful weather served as a very justifiable excuse for not attending a boring lecture. In the interim, less than satisfactory performances on mid-term exams and papers have left an obvious and inevitable result--get it on in your subject before the omnipotent finals spell one's doom. However, the present bad weather is just as good an excuse for cutting classes as good weather.

Harsh weather even effects the hard-core people who have resigned themselves to studying and realize that a trek to the library is necessary to accomplish that feat. Incidentally, the recent poor mid-campus night lighting seems even more hazardous than biting cold at times.

Nevertheless, the real victims of bad weather are still the class-cutting pros. After all, the daily ritual of a leisurely breakfast, lunch and supper faces the fate of being curtailed by unbearable weather. Also, let's fact it, only so much boob-tube watching, ping-pong and pinball playing can be tolerated in one day while you're "forced" inside.

Well, don't fret yet friends, because pretty soon you'll become immune to the cold. Then you'll be ready to use ideal snow-ball -making conditions as a viable alternative to taking in a class.

Security Problem

To the Editor:

Thursday night while walking through Southwest I witnessed an incident which irked me because there was nothing I could do about it.

Two other girls and myself were passing Hampshire Dining Commons behind two uniformed security police. One of them boisterously reached out and tore down several posters promoting the November 6th peace march. He just let them fall to the ground and the two men continued along. Furiously, I picked up the scattered posters and ran up to him, informing him as politely as possible that if he felt compelled to tear them down, the least he could do was throw them away. He retorted that he was giving the clean-up men something to do in the morning. I replied that we live in Southwest; how would he feel if a couple of students sauntered though his yard, throwing rubbish around? With a laugh, the two bastards strode off, leaving me standing there with the torn posters.

I had been under the impression that the security guards were supposed to be working to prevent vandalism at night-I just hope that these two men aren't representative of the entire force.

Another Look At Kent State

By BILL GORDON

(Editor's note: Bill Gordon is a UCLA student who is spending this quarter in Ohio.)

Although several investigations were held following the Kent State tragedy, none could determine why Ohio National Guardsmen fired into a crowd of Kent State students in May, 1970. The evidence indicated that the shootings were totally unjustified, but the Scranton Commission and the Justice Department could do no better than to speculate why the Guardsmen pulled the triggers.

An Ohio grand jury, which has long been discredited, exonerated the Guardsmen for the shootings last October. Although the grand jury accepted the Guardsmen's testimony that they fired in self defense, the Justice Department believed the self defense claims were fabricated.

The falsification of evidence and serious questions raised about the Guardsmen's intentions provided the Justice Department with ample justification to convene a federal grand jury. Last November a high ranking Justice Department official said that a decision whether to convene a federal grand jury would be made before the end of 1970.

The official's timing, however, was somewhat off. The Department refused to say what it intended to do about the case for over eight months, although they occasionally promised that a decision would be made soon. In May of 1971, a Justice Department spokesman said that the decision would be announced at "the appropriate time.",

Attorney General John Mitchell finally announced last August that there would be no federal grand jury, and the announcement could not have been more timely. Public interest in the tragedy had waned considerably in the fifteen months since the shootings. "The appropriate time," was also, according to the Christian Science Monitor, "late on Friday to minimize news coverage and safely after Congress had left town for summer recess."

It wasn't quite safe enough, however. Because the Justice Department refused to investigate the Kent State tragedy, they will soon beinvestigated themselves by a Senate subcommittee led by Senator Edward Kennedy.

The Justice Department's handling of the Kent State case hasn't received much public attention, partially because the Department does not like to talk about it.

In the summer of 1970 the Department worked closely with the FBI investigating the tragedy. After the Justice Department advised Ohio officials that six guardsmen could be criminally prosecuted for their part in the shootings, Mitchell said that Guardsmen as well as students had "apparently" violated federal laws. The Justice Department, however, preferred that a state grand jury be convened by Ohio officials.

With or without the Justice Department's approval, the state grand jury was politically fraudulent. The grand jury's report, which flatly contradicted the Justice Department's summary of FBI investigations and the Scranton Commission, was later ordered destroyed by a federal judge.

After the state grand jury's report was released last October, the Justice Department announced it was taking under consideration the convening of a federal grand jury to investigate the tragedy. As the months passed, they had little to say about Kent. It was reported last March that the Department's civil rights division recommended to Mitchell that he not convene a federal grand jury. The recommendation, which needed only Mitchell's approval, was probably finalized shortly afterwards by an announcement was withheld until a time when it would have less political impact.

In announcing the decision in August, Mitchell said that he concurred with the Scranton Commission conclusions that the shootings were unwarranted and inexcusable, but said further federal action in the case was unwarranted.

In an apparent reversal of his statements the previous year, Mitchell said that there was "no likelihood of successful prosecutions of individual guardsmen." That decision may not necessarily have been reached by a federal grand jury.

While the Justice Department remained silent about Kent for months, a quiet campaign spearheaded by a United Methodist Church group was being waged urging the convening of a federal grand jury. A report by Peter Davies, a Manhattan insurance executive, suggested that several Guardsmen had conspired to shoot the students at Kent State.

The conspiracy theory may sound far fetched at first blush, but it does not take any stretching of the imagination to consider that a few guardsmen may have decided to teach them "a lesson." The evidence, indeed, raises suspicions about the Guardsmen's intentions.

Immediately prior to the firing, none of the Guardsmen were hit by rocks. The Justice Department summary of FBI reports implies that the Guardsmen could have easily marched away from the students rather than shooting them. Many guardsmen suddenly turned around and began firing into the crowd of students. Davies contends that the single shot fired by a sergeant two seconds before other guardsmen simultaneously turned around and fired may have been a signal to shoot.

Mitchell, however, said there was "no credible evidence" that the Guardsmen conspired to shoot the students. In light of the Justice Department summary which explicitly states that they can only speculate on what started the shootings, the statement is most curious. The only way the conspiracy theory could be dismissed or be proven would be by a federal grand jury. The Justice Department, incidentally, refused to elaborate on Mitchell's statement.

Although the evidence is equally circumstantial, it is possible that the shootings were not the result of a premeditated decision. Yet it appears that the Justice Department would rather not find out why the Guardsmen killed four students and wounded nine others.

One Justice Department official, referring to Kent State, said that "some cases are better left unopen." This is because, as Davies writes, "A federal grand jury investigation would not go down too well in Ohio and we must remember that in any close presidential election the man who loses Ohio will probably lose the election."

Whether or not the Guardsmen killed students to teach them a lesson, the Justice Department is certainly teaching students a lesson how justice in America can be sacrificed for political expediency.

Allen Hits Education System

By MARILYNN MARTIN

Using one of Dean Dwight Allen's brainstorms as a platform, the idea of the School of Education Marathon has progressed in the past four years to become, as one participant termed it, an "unrestricted educational innovation."

The marathon, which is open this week to all interested people, offers one University credit as comparable to fifteen modular credits.

Tom Paquin, director of this year's marathon, told the MDC that the purpose is to "innundate senses with activity, and although there are themes from time to time, they are merely a means of building a platform for new ideas.

The theme this week is "the combatting of institutionalized racism", a concept which is brought out clearly in an exhibit created by Bob Suzuki, entitled "Asian Perspective on American Racism."

Most of the events concerning racism will be Wednesday.

Why try to involve the public in these events? Paquin referred to Dean Allen's theory that the marathon is, in effect, "a community service and that the public will be able to use such seminars in ecology and war as much as students will."

The marathon is financed primarily by outside educational institutions and national grants and isn't directly affiliated with the School of Ed.'s finances.

In mentioning the plans being made for 1972's marathons, Paquin said that both semesters next year will be run the modular credit system. It will include grading on a Pass-No Credit basis, in which the students will have the chance to use the most of their learning potential without worrying about grades, Paquin said.

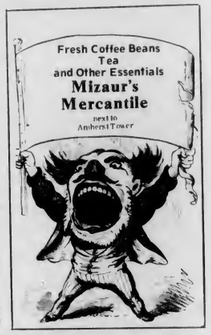
There will be another marathon in the spring and plans are under consideration for one this summer.

Marathon Has Become 'Unrestricted Innovation'

By DAVID GREEN

Propping himself against the School of Education auditorium stage, and speaking without notes, Dean Dwight Allen of the UMass School of Education gave a thorough tongue lashing to today's educational system. Speaking to a standing-room only crowd, Allen's address highlighted the second day of the School of Ed's Marathon Week yesterday.

Making the point that education is too prescribed, Dean Allen is looking for it to become much more flexible and responsive to society. If education remains on its current track he fears there will be no changes in society as a whole.



"School ought to reveal everything that is legal in the framework of society." Dean Allen criticized the present system of education as teaching nothing about the real world. He feels that school does not face the "...unpleasantness of racism, pollution or man's inhumanity to man...it isolates kids from the world."

The speaker called for reforms in the education of the college student. Allen suggests universities "...get education out of the four walls", that beyond his academic courses the student should have social tasks to perform. Through this, Dean Allen hopes, education will make a value statement. "School,", he said, "...must make itself atuned as a vehicle of social change."

Referring to today's system of education Allen said: "The jobs of society cannot get done in an innocuous system."

Dean Allen wants the bigot to teach side by side with the opposite point of view. He said he has faith in the nobility of man when combatting the bigot with a humanistic viewpoint.

"We all need a sense of vision. The strongest cards we can play are to make the future of education less certain." Dean Allen wants to see more than a renovation of 19th century educational techniques, ones which will lead to the same type of society, generation after generation. He wants sweeping changes that will let the children of the future and even those just starting out in school now to see the world in real terms, not glorified models, so that they may improve on the quality of their lives before they become consumed in a self-defeating society.

Conte To Speak On '72 Campaign

Congressman Silvio O. Conte will be the keynote speaker at the Greater Northampton Chamber of Commerce Salute Breakfast Friday, November 12, 8:00 a.m., at the Hotel Northampton. His comments will be concerned with "The Economic and Political Outlook for 1972."

The breakfast, a bi-annual event held to acknowledge new business establishments and professional appointments in the community, will, this fall, also recognize newly elected government officials.

Congressman Conte will direct himself to wage and price controls, the political picture for next year's national election, the broad economic outlook, and other subjects. His position on the House Select Committee on Small Business (ranking minority member) gives particular weight to the nature of his presentation.

First elected to the House of Representatives in 1958, Congressman Conte has served the First Massachusetts District for 13 consecutive years. He currently is a member of the Committee of Appropriations, Select Committee on Small Business, Migratory Bird Conservation Commission, and Joint (Senate-House) Commission on the Coinage.

H. W. Goulet, Executive Vice President of the Chamber estimates that more than 200 members of the business and general community will attend this fall's Salute Breakfast and invites interested persons to reserve seats for the event by calling 584-1900.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

For quick action it is Aries. For speculating and pontificating, choices are Taurus and Sagittarius. For a rundown on health, Virgo is your person. For latest neighborhood news, call on Gemini. For real estate values, check with Cancer. For what's happening in the theater, dial Leo. For beauty tips, Libra is right there. for investment potential, Scorpio can fill the bill. For a psychic demonstration, don't overlook Pisces.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be discriminating. You will have freedom of choice. Choose quality. Bypass apparent easy way. Adhere to basic principles. Attention now to details is essential. Observe rectify errors.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with creative endeavors, romantic interests, association with children. Be ready for changes, including travel. Open lines of communication. Express true feelings.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Accent on home, end of matters, dealings with those with strong viewpoints. You may find yourself slightly out of sync. Key is to ride with tide. Listen, observe and garner knowledge. Don't press.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Short journeys, unusual dealings with relatives - these are spotlighted. Perceive moods and needs. Realize many around you now are supersensitive. Sense of humor can be great aid.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get paid for efforts. Income increases, materially and in psychic sense. Means you gain greater satisfaction. Good chance now to add to possessions. Collect debts. Stand up for rights.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Lunar cycle is such that circumstances turn in your favor. You gain recognition in areas previously taken for granted. Appeal widens; advertise and publicize. Take initiative with original approach.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Look behind scenes for answers. Take initiative in asking questions. Don't be satisfied with the superficial. What appears obvious may be just the opposite. Loo individual now serves as fine example.

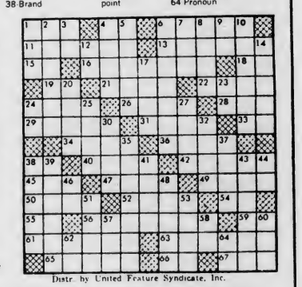
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Trust hunch. Learn by teaching share knowledge. Accent on fulfillment of desires. Friends play important roles. Income from occupation is stressed. You are rewarded for doing what comes naturally.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Forces tend to be scattered. Be versatile, but keep ultimate goal in mind. Ambitions should be analyzed. Be sure that what you want actually is within reach. Get rid of daydreams. Use imagination constructively.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Good lunar aspect now coincides with long-range planning, travel. Catch up on correspondence. Keep communication lines clear. Give attention to one you recently neglected. News is favorable.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): What was mysterious is now available for investigation. Accent on money which represents investment or savings. Ask questions, obtain answers. Get an accounting. Take inventory.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Spotlight on marriage, partnerships, relationships of permanent nature. Stress diplomacy, family harmony. Gift purchase would soothe ruffled feelings. Turn on charm and mean it.



IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an original thinker, creative, an innovator. Recent social flurry has resulted in valuable contacts. Now, begin building on more solid base. Sagittarian can aid you in financial sense.

Steve Greaney Loss Brings Redmen Gain

By MARK VOGLER

Take it from senior veteran Steve Greaney, defensive tackle of the UMass Redmen. "You have to give a little to gain a little." The modest philosophy has certainly worked wonders for him.

Just by shedding 30 pounds during off-season workouts, he's become a heavier contributer to the overall football outlook at the University. And as a result of this, he is quicker, has a remarkable change in attitude and has landed a starting berth.

Head Coach Dick MacPherson views Greaney as the ideal type of football player to have on a squad. As the coach puts it: "I think that Steve epitomizes all the characteristics we like to see in a football player. He worked extra hard since last winter, getting into shape both mentally and physically. He took off a lot of weight, which added greatly to his quickness.

"He has had a real serious attitude and has played some real fine football for us this fall. He's very pleasant and popular with his teammates, he certainly enjoys the game."

With a careful selection of the foods he ate and well planned workouts daily, Greaney was able to meet his 210 pound limit set by MacPherson by the time the season opened.

"I felt I had to lose weight," said Greaney, "because playing in the middle of the line where kids are bigger and stronger than you are can pose a problem. About the only way you can lick that problem is by slimming down to the point where you're that much quicker than the big men."

Last season Greaney could run the 40-yard dash in 5.2 seconds. He has shaved considerable time off the clock this year, with a 5.05 time.

A change in his attitude has been an important motivating factor in Greaney's being elevated from an ordinary letterman to first string status. He, himself, elaborated that revitalized change:

"Last year I never really played that much. Naturally I became frustrated a great many times. I felt that I never really received the opportunity to prove myself.

"But this year I came to camp with a whole new outlook. I talked to Coach MacPherson before the season started. He told me that everybody would get a fair chance. I couldn't ask any more of him. Finally given the chance I longed for, I was all the ambitious to go after it. The rest was up to me."

Greaney, a graduate of St. Peter's High in Worcester, was a classmate of former Redman halfback Pat Scavone. In his schoolboy career, Greaney captained both basketball and baseball, and oddly enough--not football--although he played. Scavone took priority over him to that position.

A year at North Yarmouth (Maine) Academy supplemented his high school education before enrolling at UMass. He also competed in the three major sports during that short stint.

Greaney pinpoints Massachusetts' big win Saturday over Holy Cross as the turning point of what could develop into a fruitful season. Being a resident of Worcester, the upset of the home town team meant even a little more to him.

"We started off kind of slow, but we're coming into our own right now. With a YanCon game with New Hampshire and a contest on BC's turf, I'd say we've got everything to gain and nothing to lose," he commented.

"Last week's win over Holy Cross was definitely the cornerstone to what could've been an otherwise busted season. That was even a little more important to me because I'm from Worcester.

"I've been hearing about that game since last year. People in Worcester will be hearing about this game for the next few years, and I'll make sure they do."

HE WON'T LET WORCESTER FORGET-Steve Greaney let the home town people from his "two homes" know his feelings towards the Holy Cross football team on Saturday...The end result-a big day against the Cross.

Awrey Out Two Months

Don Awrey will be missing from the Bruins lineup for at least two months after being injured in a wrestling match with Montreal's Phil Roberto, Sunday night in the Garden.

Doctors revealed yesterday that the big defenseman has a broken right ankle-described more specifically as a spiral fracture of the fibula.

Defenseman Ted Green was admitted to Mass. General Hospital yesterday for more extensive tests of the pulled stomach muscle which has kept Ted inactive since training camp, save for a brief appearance here against St. Louis last Thursday.

Awrey's leg was placed in a cast, and he was being held at Mass General until this morning.

Physicians said the cast would be removed for the purpose of taking another X-ray in about three weeks, but would be replaced for another three-week period.

It is estimated that Awrey might be able to skate two weeks after final removal of the cast, allowing time for restorative therapy.

Awrey's absence should extend at least through end of December, meaning he would miss more than 20 games.

The loss is a severe one because, as coach Tom Johnson said yesterday, "Donmi has been one of our most constantly good players at any position."

Johnson and general manager Milt Schmidt will have two men up from the Braves on emergency recall.

One of these is Matt Ravlich, obtained on waivers only last week. The other is Bob Stewart, who was with the Bruins earlier.

Ravlich needs a great deal more work skating. Stewart has been bothered by a lame knee, but is expected to play for the Braves against Providence tonight before joining the Bruins at Chicago tomorrow night.

CRACKED ICE-With the anticipated absences of Awrey and Green, the Bruins should have far more serious injury record than last year. In 1970-71, Boston had only 40 player games missed through injury or illness, far below the NHL norm of about 100. Johnny McKenzie accounted for 2 of those with a shoulder dislocation.

The Bruins had a voluntary practice yesterday, with only seven players reporting. Those present were Eddie Johnston, Gerry Cheevers, Derek Sanderson, Reggie Leach, Wayne Cashman, Mike Walton and Ravlich, who put in two hours working with Braves and Bruins.

Kron Continues Weekly Winnings; O'Brien Dispels Dictator Image

The Orchard was cold for the weekly run Sunday, but Brad Kron managed to win again proving to be the most consistant winner over the last several weeks. About twenty runners braved the cold including cross country coach Ken O'Brien who finished 10th. Miss Charlotte Lettis who recently joined the Liberty A.C. didn't run. She has posted a time of 12:34 for the 2 mile plus course. She plans to run in the regional cross country championships at Van Cortland Park in New York this week.

Where's Hillsdale, Michigan?

By EARLE BARROLL

Have you ever heard of places like Alma or Hillsdale, Michigan? Well, if you haven't don't feel too bad, neither has head basketball coach Jack Leaman and he was out to Michigan over this past weekend.

Leaman was the co-man speaker along with Digger Phelps of Notre Dame at the annual Michigan basketball coaches clinic held at the University of Michigan.

Over 500 coaches from the high school, small college and major college levels heard the three time

New England Coach of the Year speak on the UMass match up defense and the special preparation for the end of the game play (the freeze, the last shot) that the Redmen have done so well in the past.

Leaman was quite the celebrity...or was it a couple of other guys from UMass? "Everywhere I went when I was introduced as Jack Leaman from the University of Massachusetts all they said to me was two names, Julius Erving and Greg Landry, in no particular order," Leaman smiled.

Was he impressed with the Big Ten, Big Time College setting? You bet he was!!!

"I went to see the third ranked football team in the country play and there were 75,000 people there, but they were dissatisfied. They said they should have had 85,000," he said.

"If we had that many people for the entire basketball season we'd really be doing something."

"The locker rooms were carpeted and the coaches offices were too...in blue and maze the Michigan colors. Everything was in the Michigan colors."

He just couldn't have put it any better when he said, "it was quite an experience."

Leaman also did a little scouting for Dick MacPherson while he was at the game. "Michigan was a super football team. What impressed me the most about them was that the second team was as good if not better than the first team."

Not bad for a first try...what more could you say about the number three team in the country.

After the game Leaman had a special treat. While he was watching the college scores on the television on the wrapup show he saw only two scores reported from New England and neither was from the Ivy league.

"I saw Boston College defeating Syracuse and I saw UMass defeating Holy Cross and this was a big thrill to me."

During the course of the weekend Leaman did get to see the Michigan basketball team and the word on the Wolverines is "big".

"They have a number of good players and they're a big team physically," he said. "They go something like 6'8, 6'7, and 6'5 up front and these guys are around the 225, 235 pound range."

His last impression of the University..."it was a great experience. A major league job."

Now if he could have only found out where Alma and Hillsdale were his weekend would have been a complete success!!!

Metallo Named To UPI National Backfield

By EARLE BARROLL

UMass football reached a landmark yesterday when record-setting halfback Paul Metallo was named to the UPI's national backfield of the week.

This was the first time in the history of this school that this honor was bestowed on a Redman gridder and this goes back through the years of Greg Landry and Milt Morin.

Metallo was joined in the backfield by running backs Lydell Mitchell of powerhouse Penn State and Fred Henry of New Mexico and quarterback Bill Demory of Arizona.

When reached for comment last night Metallo was elated over this honor. "I'm really happy about it, but I'm also pretty shocked...I didn't realize UMass was recognized around the country."

Head coach Dick MacPherson said it didn't surprise him and gave Metallo a great honor himself when he said, "I've seen a lot of good runners in my coaching career like Floyd Little and Don Anderson, but I've never seen one man do so much in one afternoon as what Paul did on Saturday.

"The people who were there will have this performance to always remember."

After the game Metallo cited the performance of his line as the key to his great day. MacPherson said this is the sign of a great back, "when he gives credit to his line."

The first year coach also emphasized that this was not only an honor for the football program itself but also for the entire University.

"A national award like this certainly brings recognition to a school."

Metallo's record performance included 258 yards rushing and four touchdowns on runs of three, four, 17 and 53 yards.

What does he look forward to the rest of the season? "The important thing now is that I hope things continue to get better next week."

"No Man Is An Island, Nor Department"

The following indicates, in broad outline, the philosophy of the University of Massachusetts Athletic Council with respect to our Intercollegiate Athletic Program.

(1) An athletic program offers a unique educational opportunity for developing the physical skills, character, and moral values of students. It is expected that the staff will spare no effort in this important area of responsibility;

(2) the prime responsibility of the student-athlete is to his academic endeavors. It is expected that the staff will provide its counsel and encouragement toward early completion of a degree program that best suits the ability and interest of the student;

(3) a state university has a unique responsibility to the taxpayers who support it. Although it is certainly not our desire to discourage the recruitment of out-of-state student-athletes, it is expected that the staff will make every effort to create and foster good rapport with Massachusetts secondary school coaches, and do everything possible to recruit Massachusetts student-athletes;

(4) it is expected that, in all its policies and practices, the staff will subscribe to the letter and the spirit of regulations governing the conduct of intercollegiate athletics as promulated by the NCAA, ECAC, YC and the UMass Department of Athletics;

(5) in an era when role of intercollegiate athletics is being seriously questioned, it is important that the athletic staff seek out and nourish meaningful contact with students, staff, faculty, and administration within the University, and with alumni and friends outside, and in such relationships display standards of philosophy and performance that are exemplary;

(6) the University is a conglomerate of religious, ethnic, and racial persuasions and origins. It is important that the staff and students representing the Department of Athletics be an extension of this cosmopolitan community, and that each person therein be judged solely on the basis of his individual quality and contribution;

(7) no man is an island, nor program, nor department. Each must see itself within the larger perspective of the whole University and its mission. The student must be encouraged to involve himself in any program that enhances his development as a person, and he alone must make such decisions. In conflicting programs, as between spring football and lacrosse, or baseball and track, it is expected that each coach would use unlimited persuasion but zero coersion.

The UMass Redman Quarterback Luncheon will be held this afternoon at 12:15 at the Newman Center. Coach Dick MacPherson and members of his coaching staff and football team will be on hand to review the weekend victory over Holy Cross with game films and commentary and will also give a scouting report on the key Yankee Conference game with New Hampshire on Saturday. There will be a door prize and raffle. The public is welcome.

No Clarification On Office Functions

By BRIAN MARTIN

The Board of Trustees declined to make a "clear demarcation of the functions of the central office and of the constituent units of the University" when asked to do so by Dean Bruce Morris, chairman of the Committee of Concern at the Board meeting here yesterday.

"This is a very difficult area," explained Joseph P. Healey, Chairman of the Board.

"Some response" to the committee's report (MDC of Nov. 10) will be presented at the December or January meeting of the Board, according to Healey. So, the Board's response to the report has been "attention but not action", Healey said.

The Board also heard a prepared statement from Dr. Nancy Tooney, a co-author of a petition calling for the reinstatement of Freda Salzman, a physics professor who was recently fired from the faculty of the UMass Boston campus.

Tooney contends that Dr. Salzman was fired as a result of sex discrimination.

The petition, originally an agenda item for yesterday's meeting, was removed because, according to the Board, "The Salzman matter is actively under consideration in the office of the President." For this reason, Dr. Tooney was forced to wait until the end of the two-hour meeting to give her statement.

Following the meeting, Dr. Tooney said she "wanted to appear publicly before the issue was decided privately."

In other business, Ross Benjamin, chairman of Student Workshop on Activities Problems (SWAP) informed the Board of the date of the annual SWAP conference, and urged the Board members to attend.

SWAP consists of legislators and representatives from different University constituencies.

This year's conference will deal with such problems as choosing a new chancellor, the role of the chancellor in the University, and the role of politics in the University, according to Benjamin.

Other highlights of the Trustee meeting included the presentation of the Lavin Company report dealing with measuring revenues for the University from private sectors of the economy.

The Board member who presented the report indicated that a threefold increase in private support could be realized by 1976.

Also, at the meeting, the Board voted to establish a Department of Exercise Science in the School of Physical Education. It was also voted to make all undergraduate degree programs and one new degree program, the Bachelor of General Studies, available to part-time students under the temporary aegis of the Division of Continuing Education.

The Board also officially recognized Dr. Robert Gage as Acting Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs. Gage was appointed by Acting Chancellor Randolf Bromery.

Senate Disrupted By Bomb Scare

By DONALD BISHOP

An early, unintentional, adjournment halted last night's Student Senate meeting at approximately 8:30 P.M. The cause of the cancellation was a bomb scare called into the Campus Center and Student Union at that time.

At first it was believed that the meeting could be reconvened at 9:15 P.M. But the Campus Center was not re-opened until approximately 9:45 P.M., and by that time most of the Senators had left.

Earlier in the meeting, before the bomb scare, the Senate was addressed by Student Senate Vice-President Larry Ladd. He spoke on the current Athletic Council issue, giving details on the Student Senate's plan for re-structuring the Council.

In other business, the Senate granted funds to the WTOY Film Series, sponsorers of last week's film: Montery Pop, and they allotted materials to each individual senator, so that they can publish a newsletter for their constituents.

The Senate also supported a motion introduced by Senator David Poisson, calling for the abolishment of the current grading policy, with the re-negotiation of a new grading policy by the joint committee of the Faculty and Student Senate on Academic Affairs. This proposal would hopefully be more "flexible" and "just" in grading students.

There was some debate as to whether the Faculty Senate would consider this proposal at all at this time. But the majority of Senators felt that it was important to make the Student Senate's opinion known now, rather than wait until later in the year.

Vice-President Ladd's brief speech outlined what the Senate's strategy with regard to the Athletic Council will be. A proposal asking for the abolishment of the current Athletic Council and the creation of a new one with different membership guidelines, will be presented for approval to both the Student and Faculty Senates.

Many Senators feel that the current setup of the Athletic Council, with no students being represented on it, is grossly unfair. This feeling is due to the fact that most of the Athletic funds controlled by the Athletic Council are from fees levied on students.

The Student Senate's proposal for a new Athletic Council, to be submitted at next week's meeting, will allow for considerably more student voice in the disposition of these funds.

Ladd hopes that considerable support from the student body can be gotten for this proposal. He also stated the necessity of talking with individual members of the Faculty Senate, in order to gain that body's support. In the end though, the decision of whether to change the structure of the Council will lie with the Board of Trustees.

Due to the early ending of the meeting, a controversial motion on the agenda, calling for the changing of the Women's Committee into a standing committee of the Senate, was not able to be heard.

Rouleau Discusses Middle East

By GEORGE WEISSLITZ

The realities of the Middle East conflict, and the prospects for peace there, were the subjects of a lecture delivered by Eric Rouleau last night in Mahar Auditorium. Mr. Rouleau, an internationally known correspondent for the French newspaper "Le Monde", had previously spent many months in many Middle Eastern countries, and has authored several books on the Arab-Israeli conflict.

Although the lecture was entitled "The Middle East: An Objective Appraisal," Rouleau began by remarking that there was really "no possibility of being totally objective in the Arab-Israeli conflict, or any conflict for that matter." He cited the fact that the Middle East conflict has so many different facets and diverse aspects, and that so many people already have some sort of opinion regarding the conflict. Rouleau expressed his intention of devoting his lecture specifically to Egypt, as just one facet of the conflict.

Egypt was described as the main Arab country in the present conflict. Rouleau stated that many conditions in Egypt have changed since the 1967 "Six Day War". He mentioned that the Egyptian army has recognized the reality of the fact that they cannot win total military victory over Israel in the near future, and that Egyptian political leadership senses this present change in military thought. He also mentioned that the Palestinian Fedayeen have been defeated by the Jordanian army, thus no longer presenting a sensitive political problem to Egypt. A third change since the 1967 war is the idea of a Pan-Arab union is faltering due to traditional tensions between Arab neighbors and a current surge in Egyptian nationalism. Rouleau said that at this time, the "Egyptian government, and the Egyptian people are quite willing to consider a peaceful settlement with Israel." However, he later said that no immediate solution appeared in view today without resolving the territorial conflict, and because Arab terms for peace do not correspond with Israeli terms.

After delivered these brief opening remarks, Rouleau turned the lecture into an open question and answer period so that he could give his views on other facets of the Middle East conflict which interested the audience.

When asked about the peace faction in the Israeli population and government, Rouleau remarked that he did not think it was a very significant force in present day Israel. He said that since the Israeli people fear total destruction and annihilation at the hands of the Arabs, they are extremely loyal to the government and hold great confidence in it. He gave as an example the fact that only a week before Golda Meir became Prime Minister of Israel, a Gallup poll only gave her a 10% vote of confidence, while a week after she became Prime Minister, she was given a 90% vote of confidence in a similar Gallup poll.

In response to a question about the role of the "Big Four" in the conflict, Rouleau thought that there was very little difference between French, British, United States, and Russian proposals for peace in the Middle East. In a note of humor, Rouleau said that the "Russians big objection to the Rogers Plan is that it is called the Rogers Plan. If it had been called the Rogers-Gromyko Plan they might have liked it more."

Rouleau thought the major disagreements among the big powers stemmed from the question of who was going to benefit the most, once peace sets in. He thought that the "Big Four" should push for a settlement, since he did not see direct Arab-Israeli negotiations as a realistic possibility for the future. He said direct Arab-Israeli negotiations probably would not take place since the Arabs would consider these negotiations a humiliation and a surrender--a meeting between the victors and the vanquished of a war.

When asked if Israel will annex captured in the 1967 war, and let the post-1967 war boundaries become the "status quo" in the Middle East, Rouleau replied that this might well occur, and was surely not inconceivable. He mentioned in response to this question, and throughout his lecture, that the heads of state of both sides in the conflict were very realistic, politically minded men, and that their motives centered on practical considerations rather than pure alturism. Rouleau also said that if Israel did decide to do this, there would be no way the Arabs could prevent it, since the gap between Arab and Israeli military might is constantly increasing.

Other questions concerned the Palestinian question, discrimination and racism towards Arabs in Israeli-occupied lands, and the French sale of 100 Phantom jets to Libya.

Rouleau concluded by stating that in his opinion, the Middle East conflict could not be solved overnight, and would have to work out through negotiation in stages.

Salzman Case Presented To Board Of Trustees

By JAMES E. GOLD

The Salzman case officially was presented to the Board of Trustees meeting today by Ms. Nancy Tooney, Associate in Biophysics, Children's Cancer Research and Harvard Medical School.

The case involves the dismissal of Dr. Freda Salzman from the UMass Boston Campus in 1968. She and her husband, Dr. George Salzman, were hired in 1965. They had similar educational backgrounds, received their Ph.-D.'s at the same time and having both done equivalent research.

Mr. Salzman was hired with tenure as a Professor of Physics while Mrs. Salzman was hired as 3/4 part-time Associate Professor of Physics.

The presentation by Ms. Tooney had originally been placed on the Trustee's agenda, but according to Ms. Tooney, was later dropped by Trustee Chairman Joseph P. Healy, who said the matter was being actively considered by the President, Robert C. Wood.

Ms. Tooney claimed that Healy was trying to avoid publicity of the subject. "He asked for a December presentation", she said. He was implying that new policy on nepotism would be out by then, she added.

Salzman supporters claim that nepotism is not really the issue any more if it ever was. They have the backing of the Tenure and Grievance Committee, Physics Department, and University Senate, who all say that it was a blatant act of discrimination according to an article in the Mass Media, UMB's weekly. Some supporters also feel that the dismissal came as retaliation for the Salzmans' criticism of University policies.

Petitions have circulated in the scientific community asking for support of Mrs. Salzman.

Vets Present Marathon Program

The University of Massachusetts chapter of Vietnam Veterans against the War participated in the University School of Education's "Marathon Week" with two one-hour programs on Tuesday, November 9. The presentations were designed to acquaint educators and School of Education students with the functions and activities of VVAW and as a plea to those involved in education for a sustained effort towards an end of the War in Southeast Asia.

The first session was held from 3-4 in the afternoon in the Mark Meadow School cafeteria. The program began with a slide show, which presented slides of Vietnam and the War there, on two screens at the same time. The slides were accompanied by a sound track composed of peace songs and a commentary on the pictures. This was followed by a rapidly moving display of guerrilla theater in which the victims of the "search and seize" mission were the speakers from VVAW and some members who were in the audience. During the remainder of the first hour, talks were given on the purposes and history of VVAW. The first session closed with moving testimony from Eric Carr who gave an account of his experiences with Vietnamese people and the tragedy he witnessed. The audience was visibly moved by Mr. Carr's talk which effectively conveyed an awareness of the suffering endured by the Vietnamese.

The group met again at 6:00 to show a film entitled "Winter Soldier Investigation". The film is composed of a series of statements by former GI's concerning their participation in the war and atrocities which they witnessed.

Senate To Reorganize Council

By ROBERT MEDEIROS

The Student Senate, acting upon a growing discontent with the Athletic Council, has launched a drive that would result in the reorganization of the Athletic Council.

The council, a unit of the Faculty Senate, is made up of six faculty members, four alumni and a student. The one student, Lee Sandwen, is also president of the Student Senate.

The Athletic Council is an advisory board in that it can only make recommendations to the director of athletics, Dean Warren McGuirk, on the operations of the athletic program. The council has no direct role in the make-up of the athletic budget but does make a study of the budget when the director presents it to the board.

The Trust Fund Budget is largely made up of a student fee which amounts to approximately $506,000. This fee is the $30 per year that each student must pay if he is to become a member of the University.

The Student Senate feels that students are the major participants in the athletic program and virtually the sole contributors to the budget and therefore they should control the fund.

The two major goals concerning athletics, as far as the Senate is concerned, is greater student representation of the council and control of the Athletic Trust Fund Budget.

Under the Student Senate plan, the council would have the following composition: 5 undergraduates and 6 faculty members, all to be appointed by the President of the Student Senate. The following would be non-voting members: one alumni, one faculty member chosen by the Faculty Senate and the director of athletics. The reason faculty would remain in the majority, according to the Student Senate plan, is because the NCAA dictates that a majority of the Athletic Council must be faculty members.

Another aspect of the Student Senate plan is that the Athletic Council would become a unit of the Student Senate instead of the Faculty Senate. The Student Senate does not want the council to remain under the jurisdiction of the Faculty Senate because its Committee on Committees has tended to appoint to the Athletic board people who are athletically minded but who may not have the best interests of the student when decisions are made.

Sandwen said that the Student Senate is not interested in the shaping of athletic programs. He said that the students are interested only in the money involved and that the director of athletics should be accountable to the students for all fiscal matters.

"Our actions are not against any athletic program. What we are concerned with is the student money involved in athletics. For instance, if the student body decides for a larger commitment for a better football team then at least they have had a right to decide," said Sandwen.

According to the Student Senate plan, the alumni would not have a vote in the revised Athletic Council as opposed to the four votes they now have.

"The alumni have a right to be consulted. They do not have a right to say how student money should be spent because the whole University does not affect them to a great degree," said Larry Ladd, administrative vice-president for the Student Senate.

"Athletics do not financially affect the alumni as they do the student in that the student must carry the major financial burden of the athletic program," said Ladd.

The major and most controversial aspect of the Student Senate plan concerns the formation of a Finance Committee that would control the Athletic Trust Fund Budget. The committee would have nine undergraduates, one graduate and two faculty members chosen by the Faculty Senate. Non-voting members would include an alumnus and the director of athletics.

Professor George Richardson, associate head of the Chemistry Department and chairman of the Athletic Council, said that it is not possible for a committee to run an athletic program. He said that whoever controls the budget will control the program.

"You just have to hire the best athletic director and let him do the job," said Richardson, an 11-year member of the board, in describing his view of how an athletic program should be run.

In the Student Senate's drive to reorganize the Athletic Council, members will be looking for endorsements from RSO groups and student governments in order to show the administration that support lies in the student body. The Senates will also attempt to obtain 10,000 signatures on a petition in favor of their actions.

Environmentalist Speaks Today

By JEANNETTE MARTINEAU

Dr. Wayne O. Evans of the Research Institute of Environmental Medicine will discuss "The Future of Education in Drug Action" today in a lectures-and-seminar program presented by the School of Education.

"We are becoming imbedded in an increasingly chemically-loaded environment," Dr. Evans explained. Directed at the School of Ed's Futuristics Program, he continued, "it is becoming increasingly necessary to teach people how to self-medicate with some degree of wisdom.

"As the doctor-to-patient ratio worsens in our country, self-medication will be required to a greater extent than it has in the past. We will be producing a new series of compounds," he warned, "which will make evident the falsity of the mind-body dichotomy."

The Psychopharmacological Bulletin, 1971, published the results of the Study Group on Norman Humans of the American College of Neuropsychology, on the topic of "Use of Psychotropic Chemicals in Non-Western Cultures and Historically."

The Study Group, co-chaired by Dr. Evans in December 1970, "tried to avoid any discussion of compression to present use patterns, it found that "two or three major concepts emerge."

"In democratic or complex societies, drugs are widely used, but occasionally, punitive laws are attempted against their use by reformers who feel that the culture has degenerated or in preparation for way.

"In Communist China," the Bulletin continues, "slightly over a year ago, the edict was published that all opiate addicts were to rid themselves of their habit or be publicly beheaded. Therefore, data from Hong Kong shows that at the present time, no opiate addicts are arriving from Red China. It would seem that highly punitive laws, enforced without exception and complete police efficiency, are sufficient to bring a fragmented society under control by strong, centralizatized authority in relation to drug use patterns."

Bomb Scare Closes Union

By BOB MEDEIROS

A bomb threat was phoned into the Campus Center last night at 8:22 forcing the complete evacuation of the Center and the Student Union until 9:32p.m.

Heidi Weisseecker, the Campus Center desk operator, received the bomb threat and identified the caller as being male. She quoted the caller as saying, "There is a bomb on the tenth floor which will go off in ten minutes."

President Wood and Chancellor Bromery who were meeting with the Athletic Council on the tenth floor were among the first to leave the Center.

Chief Jack Doherty of the Amherst Fire Department said that five policemen were involved in the search for the bomb. He said that the tenth floor was searched in detail before the notice was given to open the Center to the public.

The Campus Center management quickly made alternative housing available to the hundreds that were forced out into the freezing weather. People staying at the Campus hotel were moved to Hamlin House while Franklin Dining Commons was made available to anyone that wished a warm place to stay.

After a rash of bomb scares last year, a UMass student was convicted of making a bomb threat and can no longer receive financial aid according to a government law.

Athletic Council Hostile To Student Participation

By DON BISHOP

The hostility of the current Athletic Council towards any student participation in the allocation of athletic funds was very much in evidence at last nights meeting of the Council with President Wood and Action Chancellor Bromery.

According to Student Senate President Lee Sandwen, who also attended the meeting, the fact that the Council was discussing it's role was an historic occasion. The original reason for calling the meeting was so that the Council could present their ideas on the expansion of the Athletic Program in the 70's. But the discussion eventually turned to debate on the Athletic Council's present composition, and Student Senate plans for allowing more student representation on the Council.

The Council members were adamant in their criticism of any changes in the Councils composition which would allow for student representation. According to Sandwen they felt that students had no business on the Council even though it was pointed out that the vast majority of Athletic Program funds come from student fees.

What pleased Sandwen was the "questioning" of the Council's present structure by President Wood and Acting Chancellor Bromery. Sandwen felt that they showed some "positive feelings" towards students being represented on the Athletic Council.

Student Senate President Sandwen made plain that the Student Senate plans to go through with it's proposal for a re-structured Athletic Council, in spite of the present council's total opposition to this more.

AFL-CIO Vows To Fight Wage Controls

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP)-AFL-CIO President George Meany and other labor leaders vowed Wednesday to fight new federal wage controls which they said would violate labor contracts covering millions of workers.

"We will not stand still and see our contracts abrogated, our work standards destroyed, our earnings drastically diminished while all around us other sectors of the economy are doing business as usual," Meany said.

But there was a deepening split among union leaders over whether Meany and four other labor members should quit President Nixon's 15-man Pay Board or stay on it to fight from within.

The executive board of the 500,000-member Amalgamated Meat Cutters said it will call strikes if employers who have raised prices refuse to give its members pay hikes blocked by the 90-day wage-price freeze which expires Nov. 15.

The meat cutters, who frequently clash with Meany's leadership, also pledged to fight in next week's AFL-CIO convention for a resolution to call a nationwide strike of the labor federation's nearly 15 million members if necessary to win fair pay gains.

Meany himself, sent a telegram from Washington to labor leaders here, continued to keep his own counsel on whether to quit the pay board.

"The AFL-CIO convention...will make its own judgement on labor's future activities as they relate to the Pay Board and all of the President's economic machinery and proposals," said the 77-year-old "Mr. Labor."

Meany's telegram was to the AFL-CIO Building and Construction Trades Department, which took a more conservative view than the meat cutters on the wage question.

"We are hopeful that circumstances will permit labor members of the Pay Board to retain their seats on the Pay Board and work out problems from the inside," said the executive board and the presidents of the 17 construction unions in a joint statement.

However, some of the construction union presidents earlier had indicated they favored a labor walkout from the Pay Board.

Meany said he would make a full report to the main AFL-CIO convention of some 1,000 delegates representing 122 unions which opens here Nov. 18. Meany planned to come here from Washington Friday.

The labor members of the Pay Board were outvoted 10 to 5 by industry and public members in Monday's ruling to impose a general 5.5 per cent limit on future wage hikes, rule out most retroactive pay for the 90-day freeze and open the door to rolling back scheduled wage hikes in existing agreements.

Labor leaders cited reports that some business leaders already were planning to ask the Pay Board to reduce wage hikes that fall due in the coming year.

"We will take immediate steps to find ways of winning compensation for our members for past wage increases which are legally due them," said the meat cutters, and added that court action, appeals to Congress to overturn Nixon's economic program and strikes were possible weapons.

The meat cutters praised the attempts of Meany and other labor members of the Pay Board to soften its ruling, but said: "We urge President Meany and his colleagues to withdraw from the Pay Board in view of this lopsided, antilabor decision."

In its more cautious statement, the Building and Construction Trades Department headed by Frank Bonadio said:

"We await further information...we need clarification."

But the labor leaders were unanimous in condemning the new Pay Board rules as a violation of existing legal labor contracts.

"The Pay Board has taken money which is legally and rightfully due to workers and put it into the hands of employers," said the construction unions.

In Brief...

WASHINGTON (AP) The Senate by an 84-6 vote Wednesday ratified the treaty ending 27 years of U.S. rule over Okinawa and the Ryukyu Islands. It would restore the strategic Western Pacific chain captured in World War II to Japan by mid-1972.

Before becoming effective the treaty must also be ratified by the Japanese Diet along with accompanying legislation which permits the U.S. to use about 100 military installations for the indefinite future.

WASHINGTON (AP)-The top scientist of an environment group that has fought the pesticide DDT for nine years said Wednesday Nobel Prize-winner Dr. Norman E. Borlaug is "one or two decades out of date" in advocating its continued use.

Dr. Charles Wurster of the Environmental Defense Fund said in an interview that DDT, far from being essential to world food production, can upset natural systems so badly that crop yields actually diminish.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Sen. Fred R. Harris of Oklahoma called off his fledgling compaign for the Democratic presidential nomination Wednesday because "I am broke."

It lasted only six weeks. Harris, who said he wept when his staff urged him to keep campaigning and offered to work for nothing, again renounced his candidacy for re-election to the Senate next year.

WASHINGTON (AP)-Expressing hope for peace, Julie Nixon Eisenhower Wednesday joined ceremonies launching two new 8-cent Christmas postage stamps that go on sale across the nation Thursday.

The President's daughter said it was the 10th year that such special stamps "have brought an extra touch of color to the Christmas mail."

India To Receive Russian Arms

WASHINGTON (AP) - More than 5,000 tons of Soviet military equipment, including aircraft, should arrive in India by sea this month, U.S. intelligence sources said Wednesday.

Three Soviet merchant ships left the Black Sea last week en route to India with military cargo, the sources say.

One ship had eight aircraft crates lashed to its deck. Details of the rest of the cargo were not known, although intelligence sources described it as military in nature.

The Indian Air Force already has an estimated 12 squadrons of Soviet-built MIG21 fighters and SU7 fighter-bombers, along with other Russian-furnished army, navy and air equipment. An Indian air squadron consists of 20 to 24 planes.

Meanwhile, U.S. sources report that the last of 10 Soviet AN12 Cub transport planes landed at New Delhi Nov. 3. They were believed to be bringing spare parts for military gear previously supplied by the Russians.

The new arms shipments from the Soviet Union were said to result from recent visits to India by high-ranking Russian diplomatic and military officials, after the signing in August of a Soviet-Indian treaty of friendship and cooperation. There developments, coupled with recent moves by Pakistan closer to Communist China, serve to underscore how the two rival Red superpowers are backing opposite forces in the India-Pakistan dispute.

A Pakistani government group was reported in Communist China in recent days, and a Pakistani ship was said earlier by U.S. intelligence to be bound for China to take on a cargo of artillery, ammunition and other military material.

Meanwhile, the Nixon administration has cut off U.S. arms sales to Pakistan in an apparent move to quiet critics who accused it of helping the Pakistanis crush insurgents in East Pakistan, and to improve India-U.S. relations.

Ironically, the United States still is technically an ally of Pakistan in the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization

Valery Lectures Held

Amherst, Mass.--The 100th birthday anniversary of French poet Paul Valery will be celebrated Nov. 11-13, Thursday through Saturday, with a symposium sponsored by the Five Colleges (Smith, Mount Holyoke, Amherst and Hampshire Colleges, and the University of Massachusetts-Amherst).

Valery, poet, critic, and humanist, died in 1945. He was a member of the French Academy and the College de France and his writings have been translated into English and many other languages. The University of Montpelier has been renamed the Paul Valery University.

Five College events for the Paul Valery Symposium will include lectures, in French and English, on Valery and his works.

Thursday, Nov. 11, Jean Hytier, visiting professor of French at UMass, will speak, in French, on paradox in Valery's poetry. The talk will be at 5:30 p.m. at the UMass Campus Center. Dr. Hytier, who will also chair the symposium's concluding panel discussion Nov. 13, Saturday, at Hampshire College, is a poet and critic and editor of a critical edition of Valery's works.

Friday, Nov. 12, Prof. Jackson Mathews of Wayne State University will talk on "Paul Valery as Himself." The lecture will be at 10 a.m. in the Alumni House of Amherst College. Prof. Mathews is responsible for the 15-volume Bollingen Foundation English edition of Valery's writings. A poet, critic, translator, editor, and teacher, Prof. Mathews has been chairman of the National Translation Center at the University of Texas.

At 4 p.m. Friday, Dr. Albert Sonnenfeld of Princeton University will lecture on "Eros and Paul Valery," in Mary Woolley Hall at Mount Holyoke College. Prof. Sonnenfeld, whose writings focus on the late 19th and 20th Centuries, has lectured in Europe as well as the United States and has been an editor for several journals.

Saturday, Nov. 13, Prof. Daniel Moutote of the Paul Valery University will speak in French on "Le moi valeryen," at 10 a.m. in Smith College's Wright Hall Auditorium.

All lectures will be followed by discussions in which the audience may ask questions of the lecturers. Lectures are open without charge to all interested persons. Students from the Five Colleges are welcomed.

"Papers" Question Preview Is Fought

BOSTON (AP) - Government attorneys argued Wednesday that attempts to preview questions being asked by a federal grand jury in the Pentagon Papers case would stymie the inquiry in a "nightmare" of litigation.

The U.S. attorneys opposed the demand by lawyers for Sen. Mike Gravel, D—Alaska, that the planned questions be made available for prior inspection.

The question was argued before the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which last week suspended the grand jury investigation pending the outcome of Gravel's fight to block subpoenas against two of his associates.

In another aspect of the case, the court was asked to overturn a contempt citation against Mrs. Idella Mars, the mother-in-law of Dr. Daniel Ellsberg, for refusing to testify. Ellsberg has admitted leaking the secret papers, which traced U.S. involvement in Indochina, to the press.

The court gave no indication when its decisions might be handed down.

Gravel's attorneys contended that subpoenas against Dr. Leonard Rodberg and Howard Webber amounted to an attempt to intimidate the senator, who read portions of the Pentagon reports at a midnight subcommittee session last June.

Rodberg had joined Gravel's staff that same day. Webber is head of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Press and reportedly was contacted by Gravel about publishing the papers.

Last week a U.S. District Court refused to quash the subpoenas but ruled the grand jury could not ask questions dealing with Gravel's midnight reading.

The government appealed the restriction. Gravel's attorneys also appealed, contending the ruling didn't go far enough.

They argued that Gravel's senatorial privilege, which makes him immune from prosecution, might be violated through questioning of the associates. To avoid that possibility, they said, they had a right to know beforehand the names of witnesses, the questions to be asked of those to whom his immunity might extend, and the right to appeal on any of the questions before they were asked.

Such provisions, the government replied, were not sought to protect Gravel but as "an offensive weapon" against the grand jury probe..."as much of a protective device as a noose is for the hangman."

The government, they said, had no intention of calling Gravel himself before the grand jury and thus his immunity was not in jeopardy.

His privilege, they argued, protected him from being tried for legislative actions but should not prevent questioning of other people about legislative acts.

Gravel's lawyers, however, claimed that unrestricted questioning of his associates could tend to hinder his performance of duty.

That duty, they said, demanded a "continual colloquy" with his constituents, as well as making information available to the public.

A grand jury proceeding was a weapon the executive branch of government could use when it was displeased with any congressman's actions, they said. And in this case, they added, it was being used against Gravel.

The lawyers said their demands for disclosure of witnesses and questions were "essential to determine the legitimacy of the inquiry" and to see if Gravel's privilege was to be impeded.

Rockets Hit Phnom Penh

SAIGON (AP) — Enemy forces attacked the Phnom Penh airport and a nearby communications center in coordinated attacks early Wednesday, inflicting heavy casualties and damage.

A Cambodian army spokesman, Capt. Chang Song, said no accurate count of the casualties was available. But unofficial reports said about 25 Cambodians were killed and 30 wounded in the two attacks.

Nine aircraft were reported damaged by a barrage of 50 rockets which slammed into the airfield and surrounding areas shortly after midnight.

They included three C47 transports, three light observation planes, and three of Cambodia's six helicopters. Two of the helicopters were badly torn up, spokesmen said.

The airport was severely damaged by a similar sapper attack last Jan. 22.

At the same time the rockets hit the airport Wednesday, sappers moved in behind another rocket barrage to attack a radio transmitting station nine miles to the northwest.

Witnesses said the sappers killed a number of women and children by throwing grenades into bunkers where they had taken cover.

Field reports said six persons, including five women, were killed in the airport attack and another 19 were killed at the transmitting station.

Reports of the attacks were delayed because the transmitter handles international radio traffic for Cambodia.

Womens Lib Protest Miss World

LONDON (AP) — Miss Brazil, brown-haired Lucia Petterle, 22, was crowned Miss World 1971 Wednesday night in a pageant that parading members of the women's liberation movement labelled "the most degrading show on earth."

Second was Miss United Kingdom, 22-year-old Marilyn Ann Ward, a blonde beauty with blue eyes.

Third was Miss Portugal, Anna Paula Almeiba, 19.

Miss Brazil, a medical student, was crowned by the 1970 winner, Jennifer Hosten of Grenada.

As the girls paraded before a panel of judges--first in their national dress, then in swim wear--a loud throng of women's liberationists snarled traffic outside the hall. More than 100 police shepherded the placard-waving demonstrators.

The women were joined briefly by a smaller crowd of several dozen non-white demonstrators.

They complained there was no Miss Black Britain or Miss Black United States in the line-up.

A pretty, bikini-clad protester was allowed inside the hall from the bitterly cold night to deliver a petition.

Jury Indicts Boston Lawyer

BOSTON (AP) - A Suffolk County grand jury Wednesday returned three indictments against Nathan H. David on charges that he sold securities without being licensed by the state Department of Public Utilities and disposed of unqualified stocks without notification.

David was to be arraigned in Suffolk Superior Court Thursday, a spokesman for Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said. The spokesman said David was indicted on seven counts. The maximum penalty under the law is a $5,000 fine and 2 1/2 years in prison for each count, the attorney general's office said.

David issued a statement shortly after the indictments were handed down saying, "there is no question in my mind that the indictment is the result of the efforts of the Herald Traveler newspaper-radio-FM-TV combine to prevent Boston Broadcasters, Inc. from commencing television operations on Channel 5 in Boston."

David, a Boston attorney, is executive vice president of Boston Broadcasters, which seeks to replace WHDH, Inc., a subsidiary of the Boston Herald-Traveler Corp., as operator of Boston television Channel 5. David said: "I have been charged with participating in the sale of securities, some of which are alleged not to have been qualified for sale in Massachusetts and in doing so without first obtaining a proper license.

"Apparently in the alternative, I am charged with acting as the agent of a buyer of securities without disclosing that they were not qualified for sale. All these are misdemeanors.

"Such alleged violations of law are of a highly technical nature which to my knowledge has never been the basis of criminal proceedings since the enactment of the stature 40 years ago, and moreover in my case also rest on very questionable factual and legal grounds.

"If I am brought to trial, I have no doubt of acquittal. I shall do all I can to bring about an early trial to establish my innocence." David said he had been denied permission to testify before the grand jury.

He said the state Department of Utilities investigated his activities and reported to Quinn in June that "we do not consider that the public interest requires further action and recommend that no furtber proceedings be instigated."

Earlier this year, the Securities and Exchange Commission filed a complaint against David and four other men charging them with the sale of unregistered stock of Synergistics, Inc., of East Natick.

David was a stockholder in Synergistics.

The federal Communications Commission in 1969 awarded the Channel 5 license to Boston Broadcasters and its decision later was upheld by the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington. The Supreme Court refused to review the decision.

In August, the FCC asked the court of appeals to return the case to the commission for reconsideration because of the charges against David.

David has taken a leave of absence from Boston Broadcasters while the Channel 5 case is pending.

Brockton Main Breaks

BROCKTON,Mass. (AP) - A break in a key water main knocked out all water for a time Wednesday to the City of Brockton and several nearby towns.

The town of Whitman also lost all its water, and the break affected parts of Stoughton, East Bridgewater, Hanson and Easton. The break, which occurred shortly after noon, hit the main supply line along Massachusetts 27 in Hanson. Water pouring from a 15-foot long split in the pipe flooded Massachusetts 27 until pressure could be shut off.

The main carried water from Silver Lake about 10 miles to Brockton, which sells water to the surrounding communities.

Partial water pressure was restored to all communities in mid-afternoon. However, work crews said it would be some time before the section of pipe could be dug up and replaced.

For nearly two hours the 325-bed Brockton Hospital was without heat and water to sterilize instruments. But in mid-afternoon, enough pressure was built up in the line through a by-pass to restore services in the hospital.

Fire departments were called in from a number of surrounding communities to provide emergency assistance in the event of a fire.

Schools in the area were closed early when the water pressure went off.

Doctor Cann Of Mental Health

By MICHAEL SOKOLOW

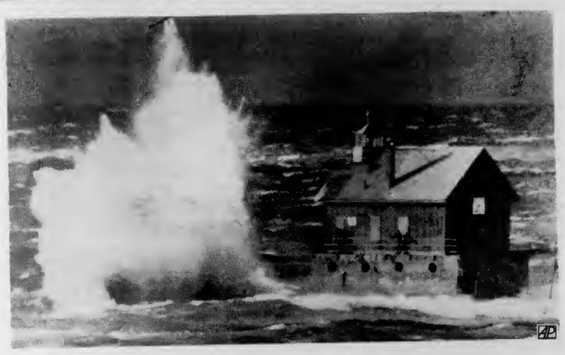
Dr. Michael A. Cann PhD, is one of the nine psychologists that make up a major part of the Mental Health Service staff. The past six years of his ten year career as a psychologist have been spent here at UMass, and have been devoted to solving many of the problems that students face.

After receiving the PhD from Boston University in 1961, he practiced at the V.A. Hospital in Northampton, and at the Holyoke Clinic before coming to UMass in 1966. Dr. Cann stated that most students come to the Mental Health Service "because of what we call the adolescent adjustment reaction." "Many students who come to college are the first in their family to attend, or are pushed into coming by their parents. The first year is usually very vague, and many students feel as if they are stripped of the supports they had in high school."

Dr. Cann, in speaking of the facilities that the Mental Health Service has to offer students, mentioned group therapy as being one of the most prominent facilities offered. A total of 143 group therapy sessions were held last year with 341 students participating. "In many cases, such as those that involve isolation, speaking with one individual might not be most beneficial for the student. In such cases, groups make more sense. We start by discussing problems to develop a group spirit, and then try to relate seriously to one another."

Although the Mental Health Service sees 1300 student population, Dr. Cann 5% of the student population, Dr. Cann feels that some students are still shy about going to Mental Health for help. "Most students tend to think on a sickness-illness continuum. By the time some students come here, it's out of a panic reaction."

Most of the students who go to Mental Health suffer from minor psychological problems, such as anxiety and depression. It is very rarely that people with more severe problems who need hospitalization turn up. "Although the problems of the students seem important to them, most of these problems are cleared up in 4 to 5 visits, on the average."



Few problems of sexuality turn up at Mental Health because, as Dr. Cann says, "students today may be realizing their sexuality earlier, or because most sexual problems get talked out before the student reaches Mental Health." The most common sexual problem that Dr. Cann sees, is that of males who have feelings of homosexuality.

Dr. Cann noted that a "few" cases of post-abortion depression have been treated. "There is a pregnancy rate of 5% on this campus, and about 85% of them have abortions. In many cases it would be better for the female to talk to us before, rather than after. But this is hard for many girls to do. We have had a few post-abortion depressions that have lasted as long as six months to a year.

Except for the drug problem, Dr. Cann stated that he feels that most of the problems of students today are basically the same as when he was an undergraduate. Room-to-Move has cut down the number of drug problems that Mental Health has had to deal with, considerably. "Many times kids with drugs problems feel paranoid about official institutions that ask for names or I.D. numbers. Room-to-Move solves this problem, and also can present a different, total environment to the student with a drug problem. There are many students, however, who do want to talk to an older individual in the atmosphere that we present here at Mental Health."

Besides being conducted with such independent organizations as Room-to-Move, the Mental Health Service is involved with Peer Group Sex Education, consultation at summer orientation, and with many other groups that request help or information from them. "We often work through a Head of Residence to present our services and facilities to a group of students."

According to Dr. Cann, psychology courses taken in college "help students to be aware of the notion that problems can be talked about. It is important that the students realize that everyone on campus is eligible for short-term treatment from Mental Health." The Mental Health Service has 14 staff members, 2 practicum students, and 14 offices located on the third floor of Machmer Hall, available to serve students. Those who wish to get consultation may make an appointment at room 330 Machmer Hall. As Dr. Cann put it, "a few students still feel uncomfortable about coming here. But we who work here, come to Mental Health everyday."

Wood's Office Ransacked

University President Wood's office in Boston was broken into over the weekend, in what was termed as a professional job.

Stolen were eleven IBM electric typewriters, one IBM calculator and an IBM dictating machine.

According to Vice President Lashman no damage to the office resulted, and the theft had no connection to University policy or University students.

The value of the stolen items was not immediately known. The police are still investigating.

USSC Welcomes Legislators

Last Saturday's football game provided an exciting backdrop for the annual UMass Legislator's Day.

Each year members of the Massachusetts Legislature are invited to attend a buffet luncheon and football game at the University. The event, co-sponsored by the UMass Amherst Administration and the Alumni Association, is held in appreciation of work done by the Legislature for the school. More than sixty representatives and six senators accepted invitations.

The Legislators were met in the morning by members of the University and State Communications Council (USCC), an on-campus student organization that works with administrators and Legislators to promote closer relations between the UMass community and The General Court. A coffee hour was held, followed by a buffet luncheon in Berkshire Dining Commons. Brief welcoming remarks were given by Chancellor Bromery and Speaker of the House, David Bartley. Over two hundred people attended the buffet, including UMass faculty department heads, administrators, students and families of the Legislators.

A cocktail hour was held in the Berkshire Club Room following the football game.

Où Étaient-ils

Chairman Joe Healy got a little bit flustered yesterday at the Trustee meeting. After Professor Bruce Morris finished presenting the report, outlining Student and Faculty Senate concerns about University policies, the even-handed Healy decided it was appropriate to defend the Board's own past actions and philosophy. Healy concluded by asking the assembled faculty "where they had been when" the important issues of University autonomy were being maneuvered through the legislature ten years ago.

Chairman Healy was adamant and accurate when he pointed out that the Trustees, not students and faculty, had "walked the corridors" of the State House lobbying for what signaled the greatest period of growth and excellence that UMass had seen in its century of existence. The Trustees have consistently worked for the betterment of the University. We wish that as much could be said about the faculty.

A faculty member present at the meeting told the Board that there was considerable ferment amongst the Faculty Senators and the general faculty. They are concerned about not being "consulted" on major policy decisions. They express fear at prospects of losing money from the Amherst campus and thus hurting their own projects.

Never has there been such strong talk from our faculty.

As a matter of fact, it seems that the faculty has never really taken up the good fight for anything. The faculty at UMass stood up yesterday and told the Board that they were "concerned", in solidarity with their student brothers, but that everyone knows that the vast majority of faculty members have always sluffed of the responsibility that being "concerned" implies.

We suggest that the faculty take a look at itself as a functional part of the University system which provides them with their living. Learn from students and few lone faculty who have been trying to change and improve this University over the past few years. Organize. Do something. Anything!

Maybe if more faculty concern for this University had been visible in the past, their clamoring for recognition now would be easier to swallow.

"I Understand They've Been Having Some Second-Act Trouble"

It's A Broad Jump

(Ed. Note-This speech was given by Larry Ladd before the weekly meeting of the Student Senate.)
By LARRY LADD

I have asked for this opportunity to speak before you to clarify an issue that has been lost in a mist of rumors and misunderstandings: the Athletic Council. Since this issue will be in the forefront this semester, it is imperative that the air be cleared.

At the moment most of the apprehension appears to exist in the Athletic Dept. The fears seem to be that students are out to abolish varsity football or engage in some other rash act of sabotage against intercollegiate sports. Such fears are completely unjustified and only serve to feed that paranoia and mistrust that is too often prevalent on the Amherst campus. Specific programs of the Athletic Dept. are not in question and are not the issue. Anyone who contends they are is simply sending up a smokescreen to cloud the issue.

The issue is simply this: taxation without representation. This is the source of discontent for students. We are the major participants in the athletic program and virtually the sole contributors to the Athletic Trust Fund Budget, yet the student role in decision-making is limited exclusively to one token student on a council of eleven members.

The annual Report of the

The Annual Report of the Athletic Council documents the fact that it is overwhelmingly students who participate and that virtually all receipts come directly from them in fees and payments of various forms. Lee Sandwen and I have submitted a memorandum to the Faculty Senate fully documenting these facts. The memorandum is available to anyone who wants to see it.

We have submitted to the faculty an amendment to the Faculty Senate Constitution which would strike the Athletic Council from that constitution. We are simultaneously submitting a proposal to the Student Senate to establish an Athletic Council. If both motions pass, and the trustees give their approval, we will have a council that is responsible to the people who pay the bill. If the faculty refuses to abolish the old Council, then the trustees will have to choose which council they recognize.

The specific structure of the new Athletic Council is for the student body to decide. I shall ask that the bill now on the Senate agenda be postponed so that more thought can be given by the Senate on the means of guaranteeing that the new Council is broadly representative of all of the diverse interests and concerns of students. If the Athletic Council is just a branch of the Student Senate appointed by the Senate President, it could soon become as insulated and parochial as the old Athletic Council is.

This is the first major issue the students will be bringing to the faculty this year. Students have proved in our Senate that they can responsibly handle a budget of over $600,000. We have also demonstrated that students deserve control over the assessment and expenditure of all other fees we must pay to attend the university. It is on that foundation that we rest our case.

Caged In Again?

It has been only a year since the disastrous Homecoming concert at Curry Hicks Cage, yet a Student Senate subcommittee is formulating a proposal for what could be an encore this spring in Alumni Stadium. Although the Student Senate has no power effecting the use of the stadium, considerable pressure to let a spring concert be held at that site could be brought upon Director of Athletics Warren P. McGuirk by massive approval of the concert in tomorrow's student referendum. For the safety of the University community, vote against the spring concert.

Last year's Homecoming concert was the last major event of its type on this campus for which admission was charged. Unfortunately many people in attendance felt they did not have to pay to see the show. They forced their way into the Cage (uncontrolled by an insufficient and wary security force), destroyed University property and left hundreds who had purchased their tickets in advance standing on the outside looking in. A spring concert at Alumni Stadium could have the same, if not worse, results.

Alumni Stadium seats about 20,000. It would not be unrealistic to expect a crowd of at least that many if major recording artists were contracted to perform. It would be a crowd beyond the control of student marshals or the police force; a crowd that would act without regard to the consequences of its actions; and a crowd that would probably engage in unchecked gate-crashing and vandalism similar to that which occurred at the Cage last October if admission is charged.

We do not have to place ourselves before the ogre of an unruly mob by having a major spring concert at Alumni Stadium. All should have learned a lesson from last year's Homecoming concert. Vote against a spring concert.

WAR-WISHER

I wish it were a lovely war.
I dreamed tonight.
I wish today's were just a dream,
and soon would I awake.
But the war I dreamed is real, and the wish of peace
is fake.
The war to end all wars was to have aborted
wars to come.
Instead,
it fostered yet another child,
unwanted,
and unwon.
Its afterbirth still reeks of flesh
all burned, and gassed,
and dead.
Democracy adopted him, and laid the very covers for his bed
Now cold.
Now hot...
so indecisive.
Now fight,
Now not.
Now so divisive.
The night
is lit with fire.
The day is dark
I'll never listen to another liar.
I wish my war were really of a dream.
I've heard
you can't die in a dream, for no one knows
what death is really like.
I'll bet it's just like fire in the night.
I fear the war to end all wars has just begun.

AUGUST EMBERS

The smithy's fire, straining to lift you off the ground;
Loud enough to envision you and make the anvils pound.
The smoke a curling higher than the sky,
And painting you a long tailed, wind blown kite.
The lightning flashing down in the brilliant night.

The sledge a wailing loud among the trees;
The sparks a setting fire to the breeze.
Oh, Neptune! Send a cloud to quench my burning memories.

Adding thoughts of fuel to the flame.
Help me overcome the dyingness of Smoldering leaves within my brain.
My blinking eyes refuse to refuse the pain.

August embers are burning slow...
The flickering coals of a dying rainbow.
Immersed in the brand of a past winter's snow.
Cremation of many years ago.

Engulfing itself in an aging shadow,
Yesterday's meditation of today's tomorrow.
Pages charred the words in smoke were billowed.
Transcribed in the fumes of heaven's inferno.

The callow child of fate... the child of sorrow.
Directing Nothing, No one Nowhere's arrow.
Reflecting on the wall an empty glow.
Drawing but an image of an endless flow...
Swinging 'neath the scaffold of time's gallows.

The time and space, oh, dearest friend, but borrowed.
The road travelled, however, no longer narrowed
By the limits of the mind in which we wallowed.
Eternal love not even asked, and we did follow.

The orange sunshine ebbed and flowed,
And left rays of life to grow...
My world began to evaporate,
And mist did settle down around so shallow.

The hay on which I slept began to rustle.
The candle on the rail resumed its glow.
Its brightness, under my control,
Made a prism of the melting tallow.

The marrow of my skull, a place now hallowed.
The dreams I lived, I loved...and they, life, mellowed.
The fields I love are left no longer fallow,
The time I spent with god I'll share tomorrow.

The Moore House Incident Revisited

To the Editor:

Last year at about this time a little guy in a brown fringe jacket stood trembling in one of the corridors on the second floor of Moore House as a bunch of "men" stared at him with scorn, morbid curiosity, or sarcastic smiles of ridicule. They all knew that one of the many facets of this person was that he could have emotional and sexual feelings and attachments to people of the same sex. I am that person. I was working with S.H.L. on its referral service; a service designed to extend personal support to those who are too afraid or unable to attend S.H.L. meetings. This particular referral turned out to be a prank at the expense of myself and the person who was supposed to have called.

I use this incident to demonstrate the fear and alienation that those who are called "homosexual" or "gay" experience every day of their lives. Perhaps you don't know the hassle these terms cause in our lives: The constant knowledge that we can only be so close to our friends coupled with the yearning to touch and make love and the desire to be totally honest and totally yourself--the damned dam that blocks the flow. Maybe you'd like to know what alternatives we've had--passing notes on toilet paper under the stalls in the library or rushing home to Boston or Springfield every weekend to bars where you're just a piece of meat in a butcher's showcase. As an alternative to this, S.H.L. was formed with a dual purpose: to dispel the falsehoods so often associated with "homosexuals" and to provide a way for people who admitted or were trying to admit their "homosexuality" to themselves and meet honestly and socially rather than clandestine sex meetings. Personally, I don't think this is enough. I feel as long as the categories of "straight" and "gay" exist, that we'll never be one in love. I find it quite amusing-no, disheartening-to watch people crying out for peace and love when (especially "men") they can't overcome the fear and prejudice of the simplest physical intimate, and non-violent act of making love to their friends.

In Thursday's Collegian a letter appeared that prompted me to write this one. At first, I thought I should feel anger and indignation over its contents, but now I just feel hurt by the attitude of the four people who signed it. However, I now must strip away the veneer of their sanctimony and expose the dynamics of their disparaging comments. All they did was to use slur tactics to demean S.H.L. It's a historical fact that stigmatized groups have often been used as scapegoats that don't go the way that someone else wants. S.H.L. has not attacked the noble nature or the worth of the other groups. As a matter of fact, without being asked, Kay Raymond, the chief coordinator of S.H.L., cut $300 from the proposed budget when she saw the situation. This cut considerably stifles much of what S.H.L. intended to do.

There is one more curious point I'd like to mention. After the incident that occurred in Moore House, Kay Raymond courageously wrote a very strong letter of protest to the Collegian. A few days later, it was followed by an apology written by people who were involved. Three of the names were: Dick Wentworth, Bob Boudreau, and Stu Heller. The letter in Thursday's Collegian was signed by the same three plus John England. I ask myself if this is some kind of a coincidence, and why they didn't pick another group to attack or to cut money from other groups. I ask you Dick Wentworth, Bob Boudrea, Stu Heller, and John England--don't you see how difficult it is for us, and why must you try to make the gap between us wider?

Two To Go

To the Editor:

The Collegian has been reporting on restaurants in the area. I would like to contribute this information about the Aqua Vitae Restaurant in Hadley from which I was recently fired. Because waitresses can be fired without notice and for no reason, I had no recourse but to write this letter.

Due to a faulty cashier system, waitresses not having stations, the lack of waitresses, and the heavy business turnover, there usually is at least one party a weekend that walks out without paying its check. The waitresses are made to pay for such checks. The waitresses work very, very hard; in fact it was the most exhausting job I've ever held. The fact that we had to pay these checks (an illegal practice) was incomprehensible to me since the fault lay in the mismanagement of the restaurant. This time I refused to pay and was fired.

This is typical of the way the help are treated. You work as hard as you are physically able and are accused of laziness. It is very clear to me that the only interest the management has is making money without working, regardless of how they treat employees or customers.

I feel that the university community should be aware (beware) of the type of person that is profiting from their patronage.

Guido Raccoon (19??-1971)

To the Editor:

Tuesday afternoon, at about 12:30, I noticed a raccoon wandering into the Quad. I'd never seen one that wasn't in a cage, so I went over to look at him. At first he looked cute and cuddly, but then I noticed something was wrong. One of his eyes was shut, and he had difficulty walking. A crowd gathered around to look at him and a boy offered to call the campus police to get help. The campus police said they would call the Wildlife Department and send someone over. They never came.

We finally decided to call the department ourselves, and they told us to contact Veterinary Service. We did, and they said it was part of Wildlife's job, but they offered to put him to sleep if we would bring him there in an hour. We had no transportation to get him there, and we wanted to see him saved.

We got a large box and put him in it, and a man from the Mathematics Department offered the use of his car. I called the S.P.C.A. , and they told me that they would put him to sleep. A lot of students offered their money to pay for a veterinary bill if we could get him to a doctor. We put the box into the man's car and took him to a local veterinarian who wasn't in. I spoke with him over the phone, and he offered to examine the raccoon in two hours. At this time, the raccoon went into convulsions. He was suffering, and we knew he wouldn't live very long without help, so we returned to the campus. We took him to the Wildlife Department at Hodsworth. We brought the raccoon to their doorstep so that they couldn't refuse to help. They decided to put him to sleep.

It took us an hour and a half to have something done for the raccoon. All that time he was in pain. The departments on campus whose purpose should be to aid in the preservation of wildlife, saw fit only to destroy it. No one, except the veterinarian, would even offer to examine the raccoon. They chose the quickest way out.

Only students and a man who has no professional connection with wildlife were concerned. I am studying in these departments to become an Oceanographer so that I can help to preserve life. Today I was extremely discouraged. I wonder if all this studying and talking is worthwhile. I don't want to become one of these people who are too busy in their departments to save one life.

Editorial Points

During the bomb scare in the Student Union last night, the Collegian was forced to evacuate its offices and to move the whole enterprise (two worn down typewriters and a half used grease pencil) to Machmer Hall. But as you can well see the Collegian made it out nevertheless. Of course, it makes you wonder why the Collegian gets thousands of dollars of student funds for two worn down typewriters and a half used grease pencil.

The Board of Trustees does seem to get around these days--Lenox one month, Amherst the next. It's too bad though that most of them seem to only be going along for the ride.

The Student Senate is thinking of ways to make money. How about getting up a Senate rental service? You or your group could rent either the full Senate or the Executive Committee for an evening's entertainment. Their motto could be, "Help put a Senator through college".

Get Out The Vote

By DUANE DRAPER

(Ed. Note: This editorial was sent to us concerning the Emergency Conference for New Voters to be held December 3, 4, & 5, at Loyola University, Chicago.)

As college students, we are almost all 18-24 years old, which means that the twenty-sixth amendment to the Constitution entitles us to do something we have never done before--vote for a candidate for President of the United States. We are eleven million in number and we possess a political potential greater than almost any other single group in the country. Organized, we could have a remarkable impact on politics next November, but the opportunity is about to quietly slip away.

The situation is the two major political parties indicates that neither party is particularly anxious to welcome the young, newly enfranchised voters as full participants in the politics of 1972. It is quite possible that both the Democrats and the Republicans will simply fill their "youth slots" on their national convention delegations with young party hacks--thereby fulfilling their numerical obligations, without changing the philosophical base of the parties whatsoever. We cannot allow that to happen.

The Emergency Conference will mark an end and a beginning in the politics of 1972. It will see the ending of the bi-partisan voter registration efforts of the past six months and the beginning of the struggle for delegate power in the nominating conventions of the Democratic and Republican parties. It is in Chicago that we must set the national strategy by which young people, in cooperation with the already formed minority and women's caucuses, can formulate a caucus of our own--the Youth Caucus--to insure that one or both of the national parties nominates a candidate acceptable to the young and the poor in this country.

Those of us who worked for Eugene McCarthy and Robert Kennedy in 1968 learned that the structure of the old politics buckles under hard pressure, correctly applied. The power elite did not deny us the Presidency in 1968; an assassin did, and while the tragedy of Robert Kennedy's death is still incomprehensible, it does not convince us that the political system can repel all efforts to change it.

Only by a concerted effort in Chicago can we hope to rival the power and organization of the political machines which run our political parties. But the process must begin now. Serious reform in the parties is dependent upon the mass numbers which only young people can bring to bear and in many states delegate selection will be effectively finished by the end of February. If you care about using the 1972 elections as an effective mechanism for change in America, we invite you to join us in the work of the Emergency Conference for New Voters, December 3, 4, & 5, at Loyola University in Chicago. Come to Chicago and cooperate in the planning and organizing which alone will give us real power inside the convention halls of 1972.

Thieu Faces Economic Problems

SAIGON (AP) Years of war and billions of American aid dollars have given South Vietnam an Alice in Wonderland economy leaving President Nguyen Van Thieu a choice between austerity and chaos.
